With the understanding that this chapter consists of unconditional predictions of what is yet to occur, let us notice that the 5th verse affirms the coming of the Lord with the saints; that the 9th verse says, "the Lord shall be King over all the earth;" that "in that day shall there be one Lord and his name one." Other verses predict events to occur at and about this period. The punishment of the foes of Christ and his people, is referred to. After this coming of the Lord, the establishment of his sway over the earth, and certain visitations of judgment on his enemies, verse 16th affirms: "And it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles." It is pretty plain that by "every one that is left of all the nations," is meant, all who escape destruction, and are left living in the flesh, and if these persons go up from year to year to worship Christ, they will live years in mortality, while Christ is King over all the earth. Verses 17th and 18th, predict the withholding of rain, and visitation of the plagues upon people who refuse to go to Jerusalem for religious purposes; and, as such threatenings are not applicable to the saints referred to in verse 5th, who we know to be immortal, and have fulness of joy, and pleasures forevermore, there must be another class of people referred to in this chapter, dwelling on the earth in the millennial age, who are mortal, who are liable to sin, and some of whom do sin, and are improper subjects for that city into which none can enter but those whose names are in the Lamb's Book of Life. These events are to occur when, verse 11, "Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited," and verse 20th, "there shall be upon the bells of the horses, Holiness unto the Lord," which, of course, will be after the times of Gentile rule are consummated, as until then Jerusalem is to be trodden under foot.

I have by no means exhausted this theme, which is a very prolific one, but have presented a few thoughts in favor of the doctrine that there will be two classes of Christ's subjects during the millennium.—Selected

CAN IT BE DONE?

BR. STORRS:—A copy of the following article has been sent to the editor of the Crisis for publication in that paper. So, thinking that it might not be uninteresting to the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE, I thought that I would send it to you, to dispose of as you see fit.

WHO WILL DO IT?

BR. GRANT:—Will you or some other brother or sister in Christ, who believes that the second death is the wages of sin, please to be so kind as to inform me, through the Crisis, if there is any scripture that goes to show that Adam and all his posterity, who died in their sins, or out of them, prior to the writing of the book of Revelation died with the understanding that the second death was the penalty of the law of God for sin?

Yours for a harmony of the scriptures, both Old and New,

A. S. WHITNEY.

Some of the insurance companies of New York have refused to insure buildings owned by Jews owing to the fatality by fire attending that class of property.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Christ alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass., Vice President.
RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy of their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,"
Box 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 168. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 26.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fourth Story, Room 22), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

STAND FOR THE ONWARD TRUTH.

[The following article, now verbally amended in various places, was, as its date shows, written for these columns nearly two years ago. The grounds upon which it was then judged expedient to withhold it from publication having ceased to be operative, it is now placed at the Editor's disposal. Br. Burbank, having incessant demands upon his time in connection with his Dorcas Mission labors in Philadelphia, has of course little leisure to write on the Life theme; but in his convictions on the subject he remains steadfast and immovable. The Crisis, on the contrary, remains in its old rut, and to all human appearance is likely to remain there till doomsday.—R. W.]

THE OTHER FIFTH GAINED.

When our esteemed Br. BURBANK, a few weeks since, informed the EDITOR, that, on the non-resurrection of the wicked, he "stood four in favor of the view, to one against it," most of our growing Life-company doubtless felt a pleasing confiduence that Mr. One-fifth-Doubter would—by reason of various forcible Bible considerations—be compelled to make a speedy and unconditional surrender to Mr. Four-fifths-Believer. There is very tangible ground for presuming that this hope has already been accomplished. Evidently, the surrender has been made; and, what is especially gratifying, to the World's Crisis, of the present week, belongs the honor of first giving the fact publicity! The occurrence is sufficiently remarkable to merit a record in our paper.

The time is within the recollection of very young men, when the Crisis would not, knowingly, publish a line having the remotest leaning towards the idea, that the mission of the Son of God into the world does not require or provide that unbelievers shall be revived from the dead. Four years ago, its editor was, for the space of six months, relieved of his official relation to the paper; and, during this period of yearning for his lost position, he more than once assured his successor that the advocacy of the non-resurrection of the wicked in the paper would certainly ruin it. And it must be confessed, that, since his restoration to the post he loves so well, he has generally acted upon this conviction with entire consistency. That he so acted for a long period in disregard of a platform which he was himself principally concerned in framing, and which was prescribed for his guidance by the very body that re-instated him in office, is not to be denied; but it is a notable fact, that, from the days of a certain dissertation on "The Free Pattage" down to the present time, the columns of the Crisis have very rarely given the slightest evidence of a feeling, in the minds of its managers, that the question of Life only for the Righteous was one on which it would be prudent to allow a hearing to both sides. "There is death in the pot!" is the potent suggestion—originating with the pioneer assailer of the non-living of the wicked—which has sufficed to protect Crisis readers from an introduction of the "hobby" to their notice. Besides, was it not declared by Edwin Burnham to be a "one-sided question?" And was not that "one" side the Crisis side? Why, then, suffer churches to be divided, and subscribers to drop off, by letting any of the brethren try to show that there was another side? The case was a plain one, and the policy of the paper has generally accorded therewith. But it has not always done so; and this brings us back to our starting point.

Br. Burbank seems to be fairly and squarely out of Doubting Castle on the grand Life theme; and, as already hinted, the Crisis is the medium through which the fact is disclosed. Not ostentatiously is this done, by either Br. B. or the editor of that paper. Any attempt at display in the matter might have embarrassed future operations. Had the editor stated that the doctrine which he recently opposed (alas! what sad work he made of it!) for eight evenings, in East Hall, had been embraced by Br. Burbank, prejudice against the latter might have thereby been awakened, and it might even have called forth the stereotyped warning against "hobby riders," from the refined and cultured pen of a Chicopee correspondent! This, in turn, might—who can tell?—have proved a barrier to Br. B.'s usefulness as a preacher in certain quarters. On the other hand, had Br. B. published in the Crisis an article containing an explicit avowal of the "non-resurrection" item of his faith, he might have wrought the double mischief, first, of getting a compliant brother into trouble for inserting it, and, secondly, of having himself shut out from further access to the columns of that paper.

There was "a more excellent way," and Br. B. has learned that "wisdom is profitable to direct." His desire to spread the truth—to impart freely to others what he had himself freely received—he did not wish to repress. But he evidently felt, that his new-found light should be used discreetly; and nothing could be more desirable than that some of its heavenly rays should illuminate the readers of the Crisis. All its blessed effulgence could not be poured upon them at once, without the risk of doing them more harm than good. This risk it would be best to avoid. He, therefore, prepares for their consideration a plain and carefully-worded "Exposition" of one of the memorable and precious saying of our LIFE-GIVER. As a result, we have the article herewith republished, entitled "An Exposition of John xi. 26." [It was copied into H. of L. of May 17, 1865.] From beginning to end it is first-rate, and is a fitting comment upon the "ONWARD, ONWARD" rallying-cry with which Br. STORRS introduced its author's communication in the April-5th issue of this paper. The "Exposition" cuts up by the roots the theory of the revival of the impenitent dead. And so long as Br. Burbank can get such articles into the Crisis, the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE will take them at second-hand with gladness. They are appropriate anywhere, but are specially needed in the quarter where the "Exposition" first appears.

It certainly is very kind in Br. Grant to season the repast he has every week to provide for his readers with such Philadelphia salt. May nothing occur to rob him of this obliging frame of mind. By such contributions as it will be a pleasure for Br. Burbank to furnish him on Life only in Christ, "the cause of truth," which Br. G. professes to love, will, he may be assured, be "richly benefited;" and for publishing them he would have the gratitude of the many who have for these years been wishing that the Crisis would be more liberal in its treatment of this subject. It would hardly enhance the value of Expositions like the one under notice, to have them say "non-resurrection of the wicked" in so many words—we mean when they are written for the Crisis. "Strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." Heb. v. 14. Still, in developing the Life plan in that paper, we would not recommend the exclusive use of "milk." For a while at least, the medium ground will be the safest. Take, for example, the following sentences from the "Exposition of John xi. 26:"—

"Hence there is a wide difference between 'the death of the righteous,' and of 'the soul that sinneth.' One is temporal, the other eternal. Thus the first is used in the restricted sense, the other in its abslute."

There! that will answer for once, Br. Frank! If you can keep on writing in that key for a while, in the Crisis, the transition will presently be an easy one to something like the following: "When a sinner dies, he will remain dead eternally." If your readers can stand this, you may soon be allowed to say—"The wicked dead will never live again." Then, by an easy gradation, you will be able to bring our Crisis friends to that catholic point where the spectral compound, "Non-resurrection," will go into the editorial sanctum—into the compositor's room—into the printed sheet—and thence to its many readers (yes, and into the convictions of many of them)—and all without exciting horror, or even the slightest alarm, anywhere! May the day for such a consummation be hastened! And may we, who rejoice in the Heaven-born truth of Life only in Christ, labor with unceasing energy to spread the blessed tidings among the dying sons and daughters of men!

Dear Editor of the HERALD OF LIFE! I greet our brotherhood with your own words—"ONWARD, ONWARD!" The truth is advancing, Praise the Lord!

R. W.

Salem, Mass., May 13, 1865.

MAN'S ORIGIN: HIS DESTINY.

"The fact is, the world is more mysterious than our philosophy has yet fathomed, or than man in his narrow systems can compass."—Agassiz.

"God's glory expands and unfolds itself, as we rise upward in the study of his works—from inanimate to living objects; from plants to animals; from animals to man; from man to angels, upward and still upward to the Being who, bathed in the full blaze of divine effulgence, tops the pyramid, and stands on the highest pinnacle of creation."—Kruptos.

I am truly glad and grateful that there are noble man, who can spend their lives in scientific researches, and thus unfold to our view the beautiful order in which the Omniscient prepared the world for habitations, and peopled it successively with these structures and natures, to which in its gradual changes it became adapted.

The perusal of Agassiz's recent lectures, has afforded me much interest. I followed him with delight as he triumphantly proved the fallacy of the "transmutation doctrine;" as he demonstrated how—although there is a necessary gradation from the lowest to the highest form of organized existence—each species exclusively follows its own line of development instead of being derived one from another, and all from one primitive cell, which was created with an impetus and capacity to evolve higher and still higher forms. Of this whimsical notion the Professor truly says—"It is not logical; a doctrine which has facts against it so glaring cannot be a true interpretation of nature."

But when the climax of his able argument is reached, and the field fairly won from his opponents, he relinquishes the whole ground "if it ever is proved that all men have a common origin;" for he affirms "that it will by the same evidence be proved that men and monkeys cannot have a different origin;" and this, after describing monkeys as most distinctly grouped into species. Do his philosophy and investigations necessarily lead him to what he himself calls this "appalling feature of the subject—that the characteristics which distinguish the different races of men, are of the same nature as the characteristics which distinguish the different kinds of monkeys"? I am amazed at his assertion, and, although it may be presuming, I must stake issue with the great Agassiz here.

Notwithstanding my weakness, if my pebble is gathered from the world of facts, and the spirit of truth directs my aim, I may successfully approach and combat even with Goliath in intellect.

There are distinct races or varieties of men, and the Omnipotent has at some period set upon each its characteristic type; whether in the immediate descendants of Noah, or at a later period, it is not necessary now to inquire; but since these races are or may be intermingled, and since (whatever the probabilities may be) it is not possible to prove in the case of any individual, that he has not some blood of every other race mingled in his veins, shall we dare to assert, though guided by the light of nature alone, that God has not "made of one blood all the nations that dwell on the face of the earth."

That which distinguishes man beside that structure of brain and hand which shows that "he is the highest possible form of the series" of animal life, is the fact, that his mental capacity is such that he may be influenced by reason to make choice of a life of self-denial and obedience and its consequent "recompense of reward," rather than a life of sensual gratification, and its legitimate fruit—mortality. The natural man is of the earth, earthy; but from it a spiritual nature may be evolved. A promise and proof of this is found in the person of the "Lord from heaven," who, begotten by the Spirit, lived a life of perfect obedience and for the "joy that was set before him endured the cross, despised the shame and is now set down at the right hand of God," to intercede and make preparation for those who, like their Master, shall be "made perfect through sufferings."

His birth and resurrection are facts of nature (as well as of history and inspiration) and demonstrate to the senses, what is that spiritual nature to which every member of the race may attain in that resurrection harvest, of which our divine Head was the first fruits.

Let naturalists mount this topmost stone of truth, where nature and revelation—twin sisters as they are—stand hand in hand, instead of going out of the way to claim for man a "spirit akin to God's and a spark of that divine spirit which is a godlike inheritance." By which expressions I understand Agassiz to mean inherent immortality.

This is a notion of Pagan origin, and papal culture, and one to which his own philosophy, faithfully followed, would, if I comprehend it, in no wise lead him: for do not reason and experience (as well as revelation) declare man perishable? There was a time while innocent, when he might have secured by obedience the first dominion and access to the tree of life, and thus have averted the flood of evil which now desolates the earth. But when the sentence was pronounced, "Dying thou shalt die," another plan was devised by infinite wisdom for the regeneration of the race, and this is the royal proclamation to a perishing world, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We are therefore urged to "seek for glory, honor and immortality," by "patient continuance in well-doing," for thus may be attained the likeness as well as the image of our Creator, the "godlike inheritance of the glorious consummation which was planned with such beneficence and wisdom from the foundation of the world.

How wonderful the gift! "God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." How worthy our contemplation and loving adoration! "The express image of his Father's person;" a looking-glass, so to speak, to reflect the whole measure of Divinity, and "the light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Though obscure in position, and so limited in capacity that we may not appreciate the disclosures of science, though our minds are so occupied with cares that the flowers of beauty blush unseen to us, and the sweetness nature affords the student is wasted on the desert air of our anxious lives, nothing can prevent the "Sun of Righteousness" from penetrating our hearts if we will but turn to it. It requires no especial course of instruction to nurture and develop the new life which is thus warmed into existence, for the storms and vicissitudes of probation afford it opportunity for healthy and vigorous growth.

Happy are those who may spend their energies in "showing forth the marvelous works" of God; whether it be the microscopic beauties of a snow-flake or dew-drop, or the charming correlation of nature's store-house of forces—whether it be in deciphering the inscriptions which ages have recorded upon earth's rocky foundations, or revealing the distant wonders of the universe!

But thrice happy is he who, through weal or wo, through evil report or good report, whether in the abodes of poverty and squalor, or amid the refinements of wealth, is ever engaged in directing his fellows to the light of life which may warm into existence the germ of immortal life in every heart.

The objector may say of this Alpha and Omega of the creation, this Son of man and Son of God—"I cannot believe in regard to Him, what you acknowledge so mysterious." With as much reason may you hide yourself from the light of day because, forsooth, you do not understand all the properties of the sunbeam.

A thousand mysteries cluster about the pebble at your feet; the life of a plant, of a worm, or of any form of being, abounds in mysteries which you may not now fathom; they are facts nevertheless; so of your own nature and destiny. Secure life, and then you may have opportunity to study and unravel these mysteries; but do not allow them to lead you through scepticism to destruction.

You would not reject any worldly honor or advantage for a similar reason. Then why reject eternal honors and infinite advantages? Life secured, all things are ours: and our path that of the "shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day," which we shall tread rejoicing and exclaiming "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

E. B

Riceville, Iowa, March 23, 1867.

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

It is contended by some who manifestly belong to that class who are wise above what is written, that there must be a general judgment—a judgment at the end of time—that it may be determined how much a man has sinned after he is dead; and the same principle will hold good as to the reward of the saints, who "rest from their labors and their works follow them," and, therefore, the amount of good they have done cannot be known till the final judgment. As an example, Thomas Paine, whose work, called "Age of Reason," has, without doubt, poisoned the mind of many in respect to faith, is often mentioned.

Now we wish to propose several questions; the answer to which will enable us to satisfy ourselves as to the validity of the specious support which this position gives to the doctrine which we oppose.

1. Does not God know how much evil a wicked infidel will do? and if he is responsible, as an agent, does not God become prepared by his knowledge of the man, of his position, and of the evil, to judge of his moral condition, and of the destiny to which he will be consigned? just as fully, also, as he is in respect to a good man whose condition you will admit does not require any such exhibition, and whose name is written in the book of life, who dies as the word declares, in the Lord, and is blessed because God knows he is his.

2. Is not every man responsible to God for his conduct? his want of faith? his unbelief? his infidelity? Is not every man as much responsible for a failure to believe God's word as Thomas Paine was? His speaking and writing was only a part of his position. No man, I contend, becomes an infidel unless he wishes to. And no man of mind can for a moment doubt the Bible from anything that Paine says. Then, again, it may prove a trial which shall increase and purify faith. Also, it may lead some to see a greater force, strength and beauty in the Bible.

3. The question is, whether there is anything that must compel infidelity in the infidel productions and examples of infidels? If there is not, and faith is a duty under all the disadvantages of a growth, in this world, then there is vastly more merit in the exhibition, and so no essential harm is necessarily done by the infidel productions which have issued from skeptics. These do not compel unbelief unless the position of those who wrote them was compelled. It was not: it was voluntary: every man's position, in respect to the same thing, is voluntary.

It is admitted that no such exhibition will be needed for the righteous. Why then will they be there? To show the condition of the other class, by contrast! Well, even then, the idea of a judgment would not appear if all who were to be tried were known to be guilty before. Why drag the righteous there if they cannot be found guilty, and God knows they are justified beforehand?

The ground thus taken might have had some force with those who believe in the eternal torment of the wicked; which is the way they have concluded to graduate punishment, "according to their works." The reward, however, that is to be according to work, is life to the righteous and death to the opposite class.

Is it nothing to the orthodox believers in judgment and hell torments that God has so manifestly marked the infidel and his name as an object of wrath and reproach in the infidel's leaving the world? That is something tangible and real; the others, something that is fanciful and mystical. Thomas Paine was an object of execration, living or dying, as was Arnold; the one a traitor to his country, the other to his God.

There is, then, no need of God's delay that he may know what the moral condition of a man may be to the fullest extent; therefore, he may be judged and punished when he dies.

The ground taken in this opposing argument is a little different from the assumption, so often heard, when one dies who has thus manifestly ceased working, viz.: that "their account is closed and sealed to the judgment of the great day."

The man himself must give an account to God, and for himself, not for those who may sin, even by his means. He stands at the judgment seat of Christ in his own accountability.

A BIBLE-CLASS REMINISCENCE.

In the summer of 1852, the writer, then comparatively young in the faith of immortality for the righteous alone, was secretary of a Methodist Bible Class in the village of Canajoharie, N. Y. The pastor of the church, Rev. E. H. F. (now for a number of years at rest in his grave), was leader of the class. Soon after its organization, the lesson assigned for a certain evening was the second chapter of Genesis. Of the doings of the evening in question an extract from the Minutes will give some account:—

After singing and prayer, the class proceeded to the recitation, the lesson for the evening being the 2d chapter of Genesis. Except in the 7th verse, the views of the class were, generally, such as harmonize with the obvious import of the text. * * The 7th verse reads thus: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." A correct understanding of this passage is of very great importance, as all will readily grant; and yet Bro. F. seemed inclined to pass it over rather hurriedly; indeed, he expressed his wish that it should be disposed of "without any discussion." It is thought that such a suggestion would have been far more suitable when less interesting and less profitable portions of the lesson were under consideration. In reply to an inquiry from the chair, it was said that the expression "breath of life" denoted an intellectual, or spiritual, as well as an animal life. The general opinion of the class, so far as expressed, was that God breathed an immortal soul into man when He created him. The precise grounds for this view were not definitely stated. But, some how or other, it was conceived that the phrases "breath of life" and "living soul" conclusively teach that man was endowed, at creation, with a nature far in advance of that of other animals. The chair entirely concurred in these sentiments. On the other hand, however, it was observed, by a member of the class, that the text in question could not be made to countenance the notion of man's natural immortality, because the expressions "breath of life" and "living soul" are, in other portions of Genesis, applied to the brutes that perish, and would, therefore, prove their endless being as really as that of man. In this place it may be proper to state, that Br. F. has heretofore claimed, as an argument in favor of man's inherent immortality, the fact that the original expression in Gen. ii. 7, is properly translated "breath of lives" instead of "breath of life." He admitted, however, that if the original Hebrew has "breath of lives" applied to the lower animals as well as to man (which he denied being the case), it would demonstrate their immortality, or his argument would amount to nothing. I now affirm, upon the most indisputable authority, that this hypothesis is a fact, and hence think that Br. F., to be consistent, should either assert, as the teaching of the Bible, that every living creature has an immortal spirit, or concede that the expression "breath of life" (lives), in Gen. ii. 7, fails to prove that man has one. The Hebrew word rendered life, in Gen. ii. 7, is hayyim, and is precisely the same in Gen. vi. 17 and vii. 15, where it is applied to all the lower order of beings. The class will no doubt be grateful if Br. F. will help them to a proper understanding of this matter. The truth can do us no harm, though it may in this as in many other instances compel us to abandon sentiments that have been long and honestly cherished. The Hebrew expression rendered living soul in Gen. ii. 7, is exactly the same in Gen. i. 21, 24; ii. 19; ix. 12, 16, where it is applied to brutes. It will thus be seen of how much service the phrase is in Gen. ii. 7, notwithstanding the efforts that are made to make it teach man's immortality. The 16th and 17th verses of the lesson were entirely omitted, for a reason best known to Br. F., to whom the inquisitive are respectively referred.

The foregoing minutes were hastily penned just before the assembling of the class on the evening when they were to be read. A little reflection led me to fear that the reading of them would cause trouble, and I therefore stated to the class that I preferred to keep them to myself. But the class insisted on hearing them. I yielded, and the result was a storm that threatened the existence of the class.

It will be noticed that in the minutes I claimed to have "the most indisputable authority" for my assertion that animals, in common with man, have the "breath of lives." In order to be able to speak thus confidently, and thereby to upset the logic of the clerical leader of our Bible class, I had during the week addressed a letter of inquiry to that eminent Hebraist in Union College—PROFESSOR TAYLER LEWIS. He rendered me, with great kindness, a seasonable, explicit, and satisfactory response, and his interesting letter, excepting the Hebrew characters, is herewith given entire. The facts it states should be in thoroughly acquired by all who are learning the rudiments of the theology of the Bible respecting the nature and destiny of man. The advocates of natural immortality are generally in the habit of appealing to Gen. ii. 7 in support of their dogma; and if the dogma were true, such appeal should not be vain. But those who thus make it invariably burn their fingers. The passage is squarely against them, and the value of such a weapon should be well understood by those who have learned that "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field." Isa. xl. 6.

R. W.

PROFESSOR LEWIS'S LETTER.

Union College, July 24, 1852.

DEAR SIR:—The best way of answering your questions is to give the very Hebrew words in the passages to which you refer. In Genesis ii. 7, the phrase rendered breath of life is Nishmath hayyim. In Gen. vi. 17 and vii. 15 it is, in both places, Ruah hayyim.

Quest. 2. The Hebrew expression in Gen. ii. 7, rendered living soul, is Nephesh hayya. It is the same in Gen. i. 20, 21, 24, 30; Gen. ii. 19; Gen. ix. 12, 26, except that in Gen. ii. 21, it has the article (Nephesh ha-hayya).

Quest. 3. The Hebrew expressions for breath of life are—for breath three, namely, Ruah, Nephesh, and Neshamah—for life two, namely, hayya, and hayyim. The two last differ only in number, as life and lives.

I thought of giving you a short commentary on the words, and their application, but conclude it is best, at present, simply to answer your queries. I have leisure, and should you think of presenting any more inquiries in respect to the application of the words in different connections, I could easily find time in the vacation to answer you, and would do so with pleasure.

I would have sent you an answer yesterday, but was very busy in preparation for our Commencement.

Yours with respect, TAYLER LEWIS.

RUFUS WENDELL.

JUDAS.

The idea that there never was but one Judas, or that Christ was never sold for silver but once, or that the Judas who is mentioned in the gospel history was more guilty than any other Judas, is a very false idea, and a very mischievous one. There have been millions of such; and there are millions still. Christ has been betrayed, or sold for pieces of silver, in every age, and in every country where his gospel has been preached. And there have been numbers of Judases, and there are numbers now, who have as far exceeded the guilt and depravity af the ancient Judas, as the guilt and depravity of the ancient one exceeded the guilt and depravity of the rest of the disciples.

Every man is a Judas, who sells Christ or his truth, for gain or reputation; or who, for the sake of worldly interest, conceals the truth, disowns Christ's cause, or deserts Christ's friends. The man who deserts Christ's followers or disowns Christ's principles, for fear of losing his situation, or who renounces the truth for

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 168. | NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 10, 1867. | VOL. IV.—NO. 26.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fourth Story, Room 22), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

STAND FOR THE ONWARD TRUTH.

[The following article, now verbally amended in various places, was, as its date shows, written for these columns nearly two years ago. The grounds upon which it was then judged expedient to withhold it from publication having ceased to be operative, it is now placed at the Editor's disposal. Br. Burbank, having incessant demands upon his time in connection with his Dorcas Mission labors in Philadelphia, has of course little leisure to write on the Life theme; but in his convictions on the subject he remains steadfast and immovable. The Crisis, on the contrary, remains in its old rut, and to all human appearance is likely to remain there till doomsday.—R. W.]

THE OTHER FIFTH GAINED.

When our esteemed Br. BURBANK, a few weeks since, informed the EDITOR, that, on the non-resurrection of the wicked, he "stood four in favor of the view, to one against it," most of our growing Life-company doubtless felt a pleasing confidunce that Mr. One-fifth-Doubter would—by reason of various forcible Bible considerations—be compelled to make a speedy and unconditional surrender to Mr. Four-fifths-Believer. There is very tangible ground for presuming that this hope has already been accomplished. Evidently, the surrender has been made; and, what is especially gratifying, to the World's Crisis, of the present week, belongs the honor of first giving the fact publicity! The occurrence is sufficiently remarkable to merit a record in our paper.

The time is within the recollection of very young men, when the Crisis would not, knowingly, publish a line having the remotest leaning towards the idea, that the mission of the Son of God into the world does not require or provide that unbelievers shall be revived from the dead. Four years ago, its editor was, for the space of six months, relieved of his official relation to the paper; and, during this period of yearning for his lost position, he more than once assured his successor that the advocacy of the non-resurrection of the wicked in the paper would certainly ruin it. And it must be confessed, that, since his restoration to the post he loves so well, he has generally acted upon this conviction with entire consistency. That he so acted for a long period in disregard of a platform which he was himself principally concerned in framing, and which was prescribed for his guidance by the very body that re-instated him in office, is not to be denied; but it is a notable fact, that, from the days of a certain dissertation on "The Free Pattage" down to the present time, the columns of the Crisis have very rarely given the slightest evidence of a feeling, in the minds of its managers, that the question of Life only for the Righteous was one on which it would be prudent to allow a hearing to both sides. "There is death in the pot!" is the potent suggestion—originating with the pioneer assailer of the non-living of the wicked—which has sufficed to protect Crisis readers from an introduction of the "hobby" to their notice. Besides, was it not declared by Edwin Burnham to be a "one-sided question?" And was not that "one" side the Crisis side? Why, then, suffer churches to be divided, and subscribers to drop off, by letting any of the brethren try to show that there was another side? The case was a plain one, and the policy of the paper has generally accorded therewith. But it has not always done so; and this brings us back to our starting point.

Br. Burbank seems to be fairly and squarely out of Doubting Castle on the grand Life theme; and, as already hinted, the Crisis is the medium through which the fact is disclosed. Not ostentatiously is this done, by either Br. B. or the editor of that paper. Any attempt at display in the matter might have embarrassed future operations. Had the editor stated that the doctrine which he recently opposed (alas! what sad work he made of it!) for eight evenings, in Kast Hall, had been embraced by Br. Burbank, prejudice against the latter might have thereby been awakened, and it might even have called forth the stereotyped warning against "hobby riders," from the refined and cultured pen of a Chicopee correspondent! This, in turn, might—who can tell?—have proved a barrier to Br. B.'s usefulness as a preacher in certain quarters. On the other hand, had Br. B. published in the Crisis an article containing an explicit avowal of the "non-resurrection" item of his faith, he might have wrought the double mischief, first, of getting a compliant brother into trouble for inserting it, and, secondly, of having himself shut out from further access to the columns of that paper.

There was "a more excellent way," and Br. B. has learned that "wisdom is profitable to direct." His desire to spread the truth—to impart freely to others what he had himself freely received—he did not wish to repress. But he evidently felt that his new-found light should be used discreetly; and nothing could be more desirable than that some of its heavenly rays should illuminate the readers of the Crisis. All its blessed effulgence could not be poured upon them at once, without the risk of doing them more harm than good. This risk it would be best to avoid. He, therefore, prepares for their consideration a plain and carefully-worded "Exposition" of one of the memorable and precious saying of our LIFE-GIVER. As a result, we have the article herewith republished, entitled "An Exposition of John xi. 26." [It was copied into H. of L. of May 17, 1865.] From beginning to end it is first-rate, and is a fitting comment upon the "ONWARD, ONWARD" rallying-cry with which Br. STORRS introduced its author's communication in the April-5th issue of this paper. The "Exposition" cuts up by the roots the theory of the revival of the impenitent dead. And so long as Br. Burbank can get such articles into the Crisis, the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE will take them at second-hand with gladness. They are appropriate anywhere, but are specially needed in the quarter where the "Exposition" first appears.

It certainly is very kind in Br. Grant to season the repast he has every week to provide for his readers with such Philadelphia salt. May nothing occur to rob him of this obliging frame of mind. By such contributions as it will be a pleasure for Br. Burbank to furnish him on Life only in Christ, "the cause of truth," which Br. G. professes to love, will, he may be assured, be "richly benefited;" and for publishing them he would have the gratitude of the many who have for these years been wishing that the Crisis would be more liberal in its treatment of this subject. It would hardly enhance the value of Expositions like the one under notice, to have them say "non-resurrection of the wicked" in so many words—we mean when they are written for the Crisis. "Strong meat belongeth to them that are of full age, even those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil." Heb. v. 14. Still, in developing the Life plan in that paper, we would not recommend the exclusive use of "milk." For a while at least, the medium ground will be the safest. Take, for example, the following sentences from the "Exposition of John xi. 26:"—

"Hence there is a wide difference between 'the death of the righteous,' and of 'the soul that sinneth.' One is temporal, the other eternal. Thus the first is used in the restricted sense, the other in its abslute."

There! that will answer for once, Br. Frank! If you can keep on writing in that key for a while, in the Crisis, the transition will presently be an easy one to something like the following: "When a sinner dies, he will remain dead eternally." If your readers can stand this, you may soon be allowed to say—"The wicked dead will never live again." Then, by an easy gradation, you will be able to bring our Crisis friends to that catholic point where the spectral compound, "Non-resurrection," will go into the editorial sanctum—into the compositor's room—into the printed sheet—and thence to its many readers (yes, and into the convictions of many of them)—and all without exciting horror, or even the slightest alarm, anywhere! May the day for such a consummation be hastened! And may we, who rejoice in the Heaven-born truth of Life only in Christ, labor with unceasing energy to spread the blessed tidings among the dying sons and daughters of men!

Dear Editor of the HERALD OF LIFE! I greet our brotherhood with your own words—"ONWARD, ONWARD!" The truth is advancing, Praise the Lord!

R. W.

Salem, Mass., May 13, 1865.

MAN'S ORIGIN: HIS DESTINY.

"The fact is, the world is more mysterious than our philosophy has yet fathomed, or than man in his narrow systems can compass."—Agassiz.

"God's glory expands and unfolds itself, as we rise upward in the study of his works—from inanimate to living objects; from plants to animals; from animals to man; from man to angels, upward and still upward to the Being who, bathed in the full blaze of divine effulgence, tops the pyramid, and stands on the highest pinnacle of creation."—Kruptos.

I am truly glad and grateful that there are noble men, who can spend their lives in scientific researches, and thus unfold to our view the beautiful order in which the Omniscient prepared the world for habitations, and peopled it successively with these structures and natures, to which in its gradual changes it became adapted.

The perusal of Agassiz's recent lectures, has afforded me much interest. I followed him with delight as he triumphantly proved the fallacy of the "transmutation doctrine," as he demonstrated how—although there is a necessary gradation from the lowest to the highest form of organized existence—each species exclusively follows its own line of development instead of being derived one from another, and all from one primitive cell, which was created with an impetus and capacity to evolve higher and still higher forms. Of this whimsical notion the Professor truly says—"It is not logical; a doctrine which has facts against it so glaring cannot be a true interpretation of nature."

But when the climax of his able argument is reached, and the field fairly won from his opponents, he relinquishes the whole ground "if it ever is proved that all men have a common origin;" for he affirms "that it will by the same evidence be proved that men and monkeys cannot have a different origin;" and this, after describing monkeys as most distinctly grouped into species. Do his philosophy and investigations necessarily lead him to what he himself calls this "appalling feature of the subject—that the characteristics which distinguish the different races of men, are of the same nature as the characteristics which distinguish the different kinds of monkeys"? I am amazed at his assertion, and, although it may be presuming, I must stake issue with the great Agassiz here.

Notwithstanding my weakness, if my pebble is gathered from the world of facts, and the spirit of truth directs my aim, I may successfully approach and combat even with Goliath in intellect.

There are distinct races or varieties of men, and the Omnipotent has at some period set upon each its characteristic type; whether in the immediate descendants of Noah, or at a later period, it is not necessary now to inquire; but since these races are or may be intermingled, and since (whatever the probabilities may be) it is not possible to prove in the case of any individual, that he has not some blood of every other race mingled in his veins, shall we dare to assert, though guided by the light of nature alone, that God has not "made of one blood all the nations that dwell on the face of the earth."

That which distinguishes man beside that structure of brain and hand which shows that "he is the highest possible form of the series" of animal life, is the fact, that his mental capacity is such that he may be influenced by reason to make choice of a life of self-denial and obedience and its consequent "recompense of reward," rather than a life of sensual gratification, and its legitimate fruit—mortality. The natural man is of the earth, earthy; but from it a spiritual nature may be evolved. A promise and proof of this is found in the person of the "Lord from heaven," who, begotten by the Spirit, lived a life of perfect obedience and for the "joy that was set before him endured the cross, despised the shame and is now set down at the right hand of God," to intercede and make preparation for those who, like their Master, shall be "made perfect through sufferings."

His birth and resurrection are facts of nature (as well as of history and inspiration) and demonstrate to the senses, what is that spiritual nature to which every member of the race may attain in that resurrection harvest, of which our divine Head was the first fruits.

Let naturalists mount this topmost stone of truth, where nature and revelation—twin sisters as they are—stand hand in hand, instead of going out of the way to claim for man a "spirit akin to God's and a spark of that divine spirit which is a godlike inheritance." By which expressions I understand Agassiz to mean inherent immortality.

This is a notion of Pagan origin, and papal culture, and one to which his own philosophy, faithfully followed, would, if I comprehend it, in no wise lead him: for do not reason and experience (as well as revelation) declare man perishable? There was a time while innocent, when he might have secured by obedience the first dominion and access to the tree of life, and thus have averted the flood of evil which now desolates the earth. But when the sentence was pronounced, "Dying thou shalt die," another plan was devised by infinite wisdom for the regeneration of the race, and this is the royal proclamation to a perishing world, "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." We are therefore urged to "seek for glory, honor and immortality," by "patient continuance in well-doing," for thus may be attained the likeness as well as the image of our Creator, the "godlike inheritance of the glorious consummation which was planned with such beneficence and wisdom from the foundation of the world.

How wonderful the gift! "God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." How worthy our contemplation and loving adoration! "The express image of his Father's person;" a looking-glass, so to speak, to reflect the whole measure of Divinity, and "the light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." Though obscure in position, and so limited in capacity that we may not appreciate the disclosures of science, though our minds are so occupied with cares that the flowers of beauty blush unseen to us, and the sweetness nature affords the student is wasted on the desert air of our anxious lives, nothing can prevent the "Sun of Righteousness" from penetrating our hearts if we will but turn to it. It requires no especial course of instruction to nurture and develop the new life which is thus warmed into existence, for the storms and vicissitudes of probation afford it opportunity for healthy and vigorous growth.

Happy are those who may spend their energies in "showing forth the marvelous works" of God; whether it be the microscopic beauties of a snow-flake or dew-drop, or the charming correlation of nature's store-house of forces—whether it be in deciphering the inscriptions which ages have recorded upon earth's rocky foundations, or revealing the distant wonders of the universe!

But thrice happy is he who, through weal or wo, through evil report or good report, whether in the abodes of poverty and squalor, or amid the refinements of wealth, is ever engaged in directing his fellows to the light of life which may warm into existence the germ of immortal life in every heart.

The objector may say of this Alpha and Omega of the creation, this Son of man and Son of God—"I cannot believe in regard to Him, what you acknowledge so mysterious." With as much reason may you hide yourself from the light of day because, forsooth, you do not understand all the properties of the sunbeam.

A thousand mysteries cluster about the pebble at your feet; the life of a plant, of a worm, or of any form of being, abounds in mysteries which you may not now fathom; they are facts nevertheless; so of your own nature and destiny. Secure life, and then you may have opportunity to study and unravel these mysteries; but do not allow them to lead you through scepticism to destruction.

You would not reject any worldly honor or advantage for a similar reason. Then why reject eternal honors and infinite advantages? Life secured, all things are ours: and our path that of the "shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day," which we shall tread rejoicing and exclaiming "Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift."

E. B

Riceville, Iowa, March 23, 1867.

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

It is contended by some who manifestly belong to that class who are wise above what is written, that there must be a general judgment—a judgment at the end of time—that it may be determined how much a man has sinned after he is dead; and the same principle will hold good as to the reward of the saints, who "rest from their labors and their works follow them," and, therefore, the amount of good they have done cannot be known till the final judgment. As an example, Thomas Paine, whose work, called "Age of Reason," has, without doubt, poisoned the mind of many in respect to faith, is often mentioned.

Now we wish to propose several questions; the answer to which will enable us to satisfy ourselves as to the validity of the specious support which this position gives to the doctrine which we oppose.

1. Does not God know how much evil a wicked infidel will do? and if he is responsible, as an agent, does not God become prepared by his knowledge of the man, of his position, and of the evil, to judge of his moral condition, and of the destiny to which he will be consigned? just as fully, also, as he is in respect to a good man whose condition you will admit does not require any such exhibition, and whose name is written in the book of life, who dies as the word declares, in the Lord, and is blessed because God knows he is his.

2. Is not every man responsible to God for his conduct? his want of faith? his unbelief? his infidelity? Is not every man as much responsible for a failure to believe God's word as Thomas Paine was? His speaking and writing was only a part of his position. No man, I contend, becomes an infidel unless he wishes to. And no man of mind can for a moment doubt the Bible from anything that Paine says. Then, again, it may prove a trial which shall increase and purify faith. Also, it may lead some to see a greater force, strength and beauty in the Bible.

3. The question is, whether there is anything that must compel infidelity in the infidel productions and examples of infidels? If there is not, and faith is a duty under all the disadvantages of a growth, in this world, then there is vastly more merit in the exhibition, and so no essential harm is necessarily done by the infidel productions which have issued from skeptics. These do not compel unbelief unless the position of those who wrote them was compelled. It was not: it was voluntary: every man's position, in respect to the same thing, is voluntary.

It is admitted that no such exhibition will be needed for the righteous. Why then will they be there? To show the condition of the other class, by contrast! Well, even then, the idea of a judgment would not appear if all who were to be tried were known to be guilty before. Why drag the righteous there if they cannot be found guilty, and God knows they are justified beforehand?

The ground thus taken might have had some force with those who believe in the eternal torment of the wicked; which is the way they have concluded to graduate punishment, "according to their works." The reward, however, that is to be according to work, is life to the righteous and death to the opposite class.

Is it nothing to the orthodox believers in judgment and hell torments that God has so manifestly marked the infidel and his name as an object of wrath and reproach in the infidel's leaving the world? That is something tangible and real; the others, something that is fanciful and mystical. Thomas Paine was an object of execration, living or dying, as was Arnold; the one a traitor to his country, the other to his God.

There is, then, no need of God's delay that he may know what the moral condition of a man may be to the fullest extent; therefore, he may be judged and punished when he dies.

The ground taken in this opposing argument is a little different from the assumption, so often heard, when one dies who has thus manifestly ceased working, viz.: that "their account is closed and sealed to the judgment of the great day."

The man himself must give an account to God, and for himself, not for those who may sin, even by his means. He stands at the judgment seat of Christ in his own accountability.

A BIBLE-CLASS REMINISCENCE.

In the summer of 1852, the writer, then comparatively young in the faith of immortality for the righteous alone, was secretary of a Methodist Bible Class in the village of Canajoharie, N. Y. The pastor of the church, Rev. E. H. F. (now for a number of years at rest in his grave), was leader of the class. Soon after its organization, the lesson assigned for a certain evening was the second chapter of Genesis. Of the doings of the evening in question an extract from the Minutes will give some account:—

After singing and prayer, the class proceeded to the recitation, the lesson for the evening being the 2d chapter of Genesis. Except in the 7th verse, the views of the class were, generally, such as harmonize with the obvious import of the text. * * The 7th verse reads thus: "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." A correct understanding of this passage is of very great importance, as all will readily grant; and yet Bro. F. seemed inclined to pass it over rather hurriedly; indeed, he expressed his wish that it should be disposed of "without any discussion." It is thought that such a suggestion would have been far more suitable when less interesting and less profitable portions of the lesson were under consideration. In reply to an inquiry from the chair, it was said that the expression "breath of life" denoted an intellectual, or spiritual, as well as an animal life. The general opinion of the class, so far as expressed, was that God breathed an immortal soul into man when He created him. The precise grounds for this view were not definitely stated. But, some how or other, it was conceived that the phrases "breath of life" and "living soul" conclusively teach that man was endowed, at creation, with a nature far in advance of that of other animals. The chair entirely concurred in these sentiments. On the other hand, however, it was observed, by a member of the class, that the text in question could not be made to countenance the notion of man's natural immortality, because the expressions "breath of life" and "living soul" are, in other portions of Genesis, applied to the brutes that perish, and would, therefore, prove their endless being as really as that of man. In this place it may be proper to state, that Br. F. has heretofore claimed, as an argument in favor of man's inherent immortality, the fact that the original expression in Gen. ii. 7, is properly translated "breath of lives" instead of "breath of life." He admitted, however, that if the original Hebrew has "breath of lives" applied to the lower animals as well as to man (which he denied being the case), it would demonstrate their immortality, or his argument would amount to nothing. I now affirm, upon the most indisputable authority, that this hypothesis is a fact, and hence think that Br. F., to be consistent, should either assert, as the teaching of the Bible, that every living creature has an immortal spirit, or concede that the expression "breath of life" (lives), in Gen. ii. 7, fails to prove that man has one. The Hebrew word rendered life, in Gen. ii. 7, is hayyim, and is precisely the same in Gen. vi. 17 and vii. 15, where it is applied to all the lower order of beings. The class will no doubt be grateful if Br. F. will help them to a proper understanding of this matter. The truth can do us no harm, though it may in this as in many other instances compel us to abandon sentiments that have been long and honestly cherished. The Hebrew expression rendered living soul in Gen. ii. 7, is exactly the same in Gen. i. 21, 24; ii. 19; ix. 12, 16, where it is applied to brutes. It will thus be seen of how much service the phrase is in Gen. ii. 7, notwithstanding the efforts that are made to make it teach man's immortality. The 16th and 17th verses of the lesson were entirely omitted, for a reason best known to Br. F., to whom the inquisitive are respectively referred.

The foregoing minutes were hastily penned just before the assembling of the class on the evening when they were to be read. A little reflection led me to fear that the reading of them would cause trouble, and I therefore stated to the class that I preferred to keep them to myself. But the class insisted on hearing them. I yielded, and the result was a storm that threatened the existence of the class.

It will be noticed that in the minutes I claimed to have "the most indisputable authority" for my assertion that animals, in common with man, have the "breath of lives." In order to be able to speak thus confidently, and thereby to upset the logic of the clerical leader of our Bible class, I had during the week addressed a letter of inquiry to that eminent Hebraist in Union College—PROFESSOR TAYLER LEWIS. He rendered me, with great kindness, a seasonable, explicit, and satisfactory response, and his interesting letter, excepting the Hebrew characters, is herewith given entire. The facts it states should be in thoroughly acquired by all who are learning the rudiments of the theology of the Bible respecting the nature and destiny of man. The advocates of natural immortality are generally in the habit of appealing to Gen. ii. 7 in [illegible] dogma were true, such appeal should not be vain. But those who thus make it invariably burn their fingers. The passage is squarely against them, and the value of such a weapon should be well understood by those who have learned that "All flesh is grass, and all the goodliness thereof is as the flower of the field." Isa. xl. 6.

R. W.

PROFESSOR LEWIS'S LETTER.

Union College, July 24, 1852.

DEAR SIR:—The best way of answering your questions is to give the very Hebrew words in the passages to which you refer. In Genesis ii. 7, the phrase rendered breath of life is Nishmath hayyim. In Gen. vi. 17 and vii. 15 it is, in both places, Ruah hayyim.

Quest. 2. The Hebrew expression in Gen. ii. 7, rendered living soul, is Nephesh hayya. It is the same in Gen. i. 20, 21, 24, 30; Gen. ii. 19; Gen. ix. 12, 26, except that in Gen. ii. 21, it has the article (Nephesh ha-hayya).

Quest. 3. The Hebrew expressions for breath of life are—for breath three, namely, Ruah, Nephesh, and Neshamah—for life two, namely, hayya, and hayyim. The two last differ only in number, as life and lives.

I thought of giving you a short commentary on the words, and their application, but conclude it is best, at present, simply to answer your queries. I have leisure, and should you think of presenting any more inquiries in respect to the application of the words in different connections, I could easily find time in the vacation to answer you, and would do so with pleasure.

I would have sent you an answer yesterday, but was very busy in preparation for our Commencement.

Yours with respect, TAYLER LEWIS.

RUFUS WENDELL.

JUDAS.

The idea that there never was but one Judas, or that Christ was never sold for silver but once, or that the Judas who is mentioned in the gospel history was more guilty than any other Judas, is a very false idea, and a very mischievous one. There have been millions of such; and there are millions still. Christ has been betrayed, or sold for pieces of silver, in every age, and in every country where his gospel has been preached. And there have been numbers of Judases, and there are numbers now, who have as far exceeded the guilt and depravity of the ancient Judas, as the guilt and depravity of the ancient one exceeded the guilt and depravity of the rest of the disciples.

Every man is a Judas, who sells Christ or his truth, for gain or reputation; or who, for the sake of worldly interest, conceals the truth, disowns Christ's cause, or deserts Christ's friends. The man who deserts Christ's followers or disowns Christ's principles, for fear of losing his situation, or who renounces the truth for the sake of making a better living, or gaining richer friends, or obtaining an easier life, is a Judas, and betrays Christ into the hands of his enemies.

Judas was not so bad as some men are in our day. He betrayed his Master for thirty pieces of silver, it is true; but he still showed strong signs of remorse; for when he saw how sadly matters went with his Master, he both carried back the price of his treachery, and went out and hanged himself. But many who betray Christ in our day, neither return the price of their treachery, nor hang themselves. They both hold the price of their treachery with both hands, and walk the streets, and show their faces to the public, as if they were almost unconscious of their villainy. I knew a person who had what is called in the world, an independent fortune, who did all this. He saw the truth, and he acknowledged it too, and for awhile associated with a christian church, as one of Christ's disciples. He said he could not unite with the sects, because they make a belief or profession of certain opinions a condition of fellowship, opinions, too, which he believed to be great errors. A short time afterwards an opportunity presented itself of increasing his fortune or his income, by entering the book trade. He entered. But he found that if he sold heter dox pamphlets, or was known to profess or to propagate heterodox opinions, which he held, the orthodox customers, from whom he must chiefly expect his profits, would leave the shop, and so he deliberately, for the sake of gain, betrayed his Lord into the hands of his enemies. Instead of selling what he believed to be the truth of Christ, and assisting what he believed to be Christ's cause, he sold what he believed to be error and delusion, and refused to sell what he believed to be truth. And this he has done for some time. What remorse he may feel, I know not; but he has never given back the price of his Saviour, nor has he hanged himself. He walks abroad, as if all were right, or as if he were ignorant of the greatness of his crime. I have no wish to excuse Judas; his wickedness was too great to be excused; but I cannot regard him as the worst of mankind. I cannot but regard Judas as a great and fearful transgressor; yet, still, when I see him returning the price of his master, and acknowledging his fault, and publicly declaring the innocence of the Saviour he had sold, and then, in the anguish of his regrets and self-condemnation, inflicting such terrible revenge upon himself, I cannot but look on him with pity; I cannot but feel that there was something like goodness remaining within him. I say I cannot attempt to excuse Judas, or imagine that Judas went to heaven, as Adam Clarke did; but I do say, that the modern Judas, whose conduct I have been describing, does, in my view, as far exceed in guilt and depravity the ancient Judas of the gospel, as the giant exceeds in size the man of common stature.

HOMO.

A Few Thoughts.

The following thoughts occurred while sitting under the preaching of a Freewill Baptist, from these words, "Buy the truth," in the A. M., and in the P. M. "Sell it not."

He went on to state the reason why there were so many in a cold, and backsliding state. It was because they rejected the truth; (which I believe to be true;) but soon he got off on the old tradition of the Immortal soul that was destined to live as long as God exists, either in happiness or misery; and then quoted, "Many that sleep in dust of the earth shall awake," to prove a resurrection of all mankind: when in fact he gave us to understand there was nothing sleeping in the dust but the house, or tenement, the soul lived in. Now, the query was, to me, how he was going to have any one waked in the house when they had all moved out, and there was no one at home? and if, as he said, the immortal soul was what was at stake, why did Christ take so much pains to save the body? for he saves what goes into the grave by raising it up at the last day. Again, John v. 28, 29, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and come forth." Now in this case, as in the other, no one is there, all gone but the house; how can the house hear, how can the house come forth to life, or to damnation? Again he said, he was determined to make heaven his eternal home. Thus virtually saying, he was not satisfied with the promise, "the meek shall inherit the earth;" and "the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth," and that we "look for a new earth," and a city, the "New Jerusalem, which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God;" all these are counted as nothing with his determination; and yet the people will adopt it, and call it gospel truth; and if you refuse to accept it they are ready to cry out, infidel, sceptic, no-soulist, and so forth. But I cannot make it harmonize in that way.

Now the Saviour gives us to understand we go into the grave; and what he saves he redeems from the power of the grave by raising it up at the last day. Paul speaks in 1 Cor. xv., them that "have fallen asleep in Christ are perished (if) there is no resurrection." Again, the apostle says, "Now if we be dead with him, we believe we shall also live with him." Not as some say, if we die in Adam we shall be made alive in Christ; we must be in Christ, for we cannot be made alive out of Christ. The promise is "in Christ we shall be made alive." I consider, it absolutely necessary to get into Christ, that the promise may be fulfilled; and then we shall inherit the new earth and the new Jerusalem with all the saints of God; and I believe what the Saviour has purchased and promised is worth striving for without a determination of my own for something different. Yours, in hope of eternal life, when Jesus comes.

Newport Centre, Vt. S. S. CALL.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, ARRIL 10, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

REMOVAL OF OFFICE.—It is certain we shall have to remove our present office on the first of May; but it is not yet certain where we shall remove to. We hope to give some definite notice soon.

THE PASSOVER, OR LORD'S SUPPER.—We have not been able to procure a room at the Cooper Institute, where we have heretofore held this feast, and at present have no definite place fixed on. If none is secured, let no one fail to observe the feast in their own house, with any others who choose to unite with them, or alone, if need be. Such will be our course.

P. S.—Since the foregoing was in type, we have had a consultation with a few brethren, and concluded to meet in Brooklyn, at the house of Br. THOMAS M. REDHEAD, No. 261 Raymond St., just south of Lafayette Avenue. To go there from Fulton Ferry, take the Fulton Avenue cars, and get out at Raymond St., and go south. Those who come from the Atlantic St. Ferry can come up that street by the cars to Raymond Street, then go north to No. 261.

The meeting is Thursday, the 18th inst. Services will commence at seven and a half o'clock in the evening. It is desirable that all should be present at that time.

THE BROOKLYN DISCUSSION.—The time of holding this meeting has at length been partially decided. It is determined to hold it in the week after Sunday the 21st inst.; but whether it is to commence Monday or Tuesday evening is not yet certain. It is a discussion between a Brooklyn "Clergyman" and Rufus Wendell on the Life Question, and to be held at the Brooklyn Institute, in Washington St. We hope to give definite information next week.

Long and Short.

A writer in one of our exchange papers makes the following statement:

"It is a fact that long articles do not help to edify the body. The principle in a paper is the same as in a meeting. Every one knows, who has had any experience, that a long exhortation, however good, will lower the spirit of a meeting. I have known when a meeting has been going on at full tide, one would arise, and, although what was said was well enough, the length of remarks killed the meeting. While on the contrary, short exhortations, short singing, short praying, give life and interest. So with long sermons. But few congregations can digest a sermon over forty minutes long."

This writer is troubled by "long articles" in the papers, and illustrates the accuracy of his dislike by the effects of long talking in meetings, &c. As this friend is a sample of many others, we "will show our opinion." This class of persons evidently suppose excitement is the main thing in religion. It is sad to think how extensively this idea has possessed the minds of many professed christians. It is a most fatal and destructive error. No matter how instructive the discourse, or how well calculated to make christians sound in the faith of the gospel and to preserve them from hurtful and destroying errors, their "meeting is killed" because it lacks the sufficient element of excitement! But if they can have enough of this, by getting up a furor of short talking, etc., then they have "life and interest." Alas, fifty years experience has taught us, that, as a general rule, these lovers of excitement, in meetings, know but little about holy living, or living at all outside of the time they are under the excitement. You will often find them living like fiends in their own families or out of meetings, even slandering their godly neighbors, who live far more in accordance with the gospel claims than themselves, going about and calling them "backsliders," and as having "no religion," because they do "not follow" them in taking excitement, or their peculiar views, as the standard of christianity. They wish to be "going on at full tide," and do not care to take a course in which they cannot float, instead of "laboring to enter into the rest that remaineth for the people of God."

That "sermons" may be too long, is true. And if many who profess to be called to preach were to be less than "forty minutes," in their talk, the hearers would be wiser and probably better for their short "sermons." Long sermons with little in them but excitement would not so much disgust the class spoken of; but long sermons, filled with sound instruction and intelligence, may be of a most salutary character: not to superficial professors, who know nothing but excitement, and think nothing else is "life" in a meeting. Such will not be benefited by "sound doctrine;" they must have their animal feelings moved. The preacher is to instruct his hearers. The feelings are not to be touched only as the clear presentation of the truth moves them; then they will move aright, and he will be able "to give a reason of the hope that is in him;" while the excitement lover can give no good reason, only, "I feel well;" and that he takes as evidence that he is a good christian. Alas, for such

"Mistaken souls, who dream of heaven,
And make their empty boast
Of inward joys and sins forgiven
While they are slaves to lust."

Long articles may be worthless: so may short ones. If filled with valuable ideas, the intelligent reader will seldom think them too long. It is to be confessed, however, that some writers have valuable ideas, but use too many words in expressing them. Study to have ideas, and strive to express them in the fewest words that will make them intelligent to the reader.

"As We Expected."

Some months ago, under the above head, we made some remarks on the "Doubting Castle" personage, Eld. Edwin Burnham; for which we were censured by some. A few years since he was a very prominent Adventist, and embraced the doctrine of man's natural mortality, and the final extinction of the wicked. During that period he wrote and published a tract entitled "Anti-Eternal Torment." After a while he got into "doubting castle" on the unconscious state of the dead, but ultimately came out, we believe. By and by the doctrine of "Life only in Christ"—or, "The righteous only will live again" from the dead—came to be agitated, and we were informed that Mr. B. boasted, publicly, that he put our pamphlet, on that question, "in the fire." From that time—"as we expected"—he seems to have gone backward, and the last glimmering light he had on the life theme seems to have been extinguished by the ashes of our martyred pamphlet. Since that, his downward course has been steady, till he has landed in "eternal misery:" at least, so he is reported. We get this information from the Advent Herald, Boston, Mass. That paper seems to rejoice in Mr. B.'s return to its views. It introduces an extract from one of his sermons as follows:

"The following article, cut from a New York paper and sent us by a correspondent, may be of interest to many who knew Elder E. Burnham as an Adventist—before his connection with the Baptists. If his discourse is correctly reported, he now preaches eternal suffering] for the wicked; and if he were to issue an anti-annihilationist tract it might not be amiss by way of counteracting the effect of his 'anti-eternal torment' sheet, published a few years since."

The part of Mr. B.'s sermon referred to is this: In speaking of "the claims of Christ," he says:

"To these claims unsanctified humanity opposed a stubborn resistance, the folly of which was demonstrated by the fact that, eventually, either to their eternal misery or endless pain, men must cease to offer this resistance."

That is "as we expected;" and Mr. B. is not the last victim, who, having gone almost to the gates of "the celestial city" of truth, has turned back, or will do so because to follow on is unpopular: they "put into the fire" that which would have enabled them to have seen "the pearly gates," and turn back to view "the mouth of hell," or "eternal misery."

We should not notice such apostasy only to erect a monument of warning to others. There are really but two theories on the finality of the wicked dead—either "eternal misery," or "no life from the dead." One or the other is the truth. There is no half-way house between them; and any man that makes the attempt to find one, will sooner or later be convinced, with Mr. B., that there is none. Having wilfully rejected the doctrine that the righteous only will live again, necessity will compel them to travel with Mr. B. into "eternal misery, or endless pain;" and we are not disappointed when we see them there: it is "as we expected."

Inherent Immortality.

Some years ago a certain "PROFESSOR," who now wears the burdensome title of "D. D.," but whom we will not now name, in attempting to make the Dagon of an immortal soul stand on its legs, was led to assail the advocates of the opposite view in the following language:

"Not one of the advocates of this doctrine know anything about Greek or Hebrew. We do not speak at random when we assert, that not one of the advocates of this theory can translate one passage of Greek or Hebrew if it would save his neck from the halter."

Whether our friend has spoken at "random" or not we cannot tell, for we do not know how much "previous calculation" he might have had before he spoke. We none of us care to boast much of our knowledge: but we should rather think there is at least "one" that might be found among us that had some knowledge of Hebrew and Greek; if not in this country, possibly we might find one in England or Scotland. If there is none there, Br. Ham ought to be taken care of by the British authorities, because he advertised to instruct young gentlemen and ladies in the Greek language.

The Lord, however, has raised up at least one, in this country, that knows enough about the "Greek and Hebrew" to discover that the aforesaid "D. D." is as ignorant as he accused us of being. Thus the boasting Pharisee has lost his mask, and stands condemned out of his own mouth.

But suppose we could not "translate," if we have the help of Lexicons, with Greek and Hebrew Concordances, we must be stupid indeed if "not one of" us "knows anything about Greek and Hebrew!" That is almost equal to saying that the Greek and Hebrew Lexicons, with the various Concordances, such as Professor Pick's, are all worthless, and the authors of them imposters, who deserve to have their "necks" in "the halter" for so imposing upon us. We are quite content to let our learning or our ignorance speak for itself, and ask our opponents to manifest their learning in their warfare against our views; but let it be Biblical knowledge. Once more the D. D. said:

"It has been triumphantly asserted that 'the Bible nowhere affirms that man has an immortal soul.' But the Bible throughout assumes this great truth. The Bible does not say in a didactic form, There is a God. Without stopping to prove it, it assumes this also.'

We "triumphantly" call upon our opponents to give us one text that as plainly declares the immortality of the soul as the following do the being of "a God." "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord." Deut. vi. 4. "There is....one God and Father of all, and through all, and in you all. Eph. iv. 4–6. Again—"There is none other God but one....to us there is but one God, the Father." 1 Corth. viii. 4–6.

Has not this testimony the "didactic form?" When you will give us one text from the Bible that saith, "Hear, O man, thy soul is an immortal soul," then we will excuse you for placing the evidence of the existence of God on a level with the evidence of an immortal soul in man. The Bible demonstrates the existence of God in explicit language, and by the works he performs. But no explicit testimony is in the Bible in favor of the immortality of man's soul, and there is not one "assumption" of its immortality in that book; no, not one. God never calls men to believe assumptions, but testimony. Saith Jesus, "If I had not done among them the works which none other did, they had not had sin;" plainly showing that God does not expect men to believe assumptions. Give us one "Thus saith the Lord;" it will weigh more than an hour's harangue about assumptions. This D. D. went on to say:

"The Bible throughout recognizes the distinction between matter and spirit. But according to the modern Sadduceeism, man has no spirit. His body is his spirit, and his spirit is his body."

This declaration is rather disingenuous: Man has a spirit: this we have never denied. But the question is—Is that spirit a distinct entity, or being, and is it immortal? You say yes; and we say no. Now give us one text that affirms your side of the question. Not one can be found in the Bible. The D. D. said:

"It was not enough for Job to say, 'man dieth and wasteth away.' This would have been enough had man been only dust; but he adds, 'Yea, man giveth up the ghost'—that is, his spirit, 'and where is he?'"

As we are "not learned," and you are presumed to be, how could you, without note or comment, say, ghost is "spirit." If you are learned you knew the original word for spirit, in Hebrew, is ruah; and that the word here translated ghost, is not ruah, but gova; which Prof. Pick says is, literally, wasted away. Where is your authority for saying it means man's "spirit"? We think you have none; but it may be it is our lack of knowing the Hebrew that makes us think so. Will you please lend us your critical knowledge in the matter? Our D. D. proceeds thus:

"'And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground,' that is, his frame. According to the theories of these men, this was all that was necessary to make Adam a living, conscious being. Was he such? No. Why not? It was a perfect organization; bones, muscles, nerves, and brain."

We are sorry to say that you entirely misunderstand us, as well as Moses. Moses does not say the Lord formed man's "frame" out of the dust—but "formed man:" it was the creature man, and not a mere "frame." Nor was this perfect organism "all that was necessary to make Adam a living, conscious being." No: we never taught nor believed any such thing. But what was necessary to that end? Our opponents say, it was to create another entity and put it into the man formed of dust; but the record says, "the breath of life," infused into man's nostrils, was what made him "a living soul." He was before a soul without life, but is now one with life. There is no record of any other creation pertaining to man, and it is a pure assumption to affirm there was any other. Our Theologian goes on:

"The eye was there, but it had never seen yet. The telescope was mounted, but the astronomer had not yet taken his place."

Indeed! Then, if this illustration is just, the eye not only had not seen, "yet," but it never did and never can see. Surely, the telescope does not see, but he who looks through it. It seems the "astronomer"—otherwise the fancied immortal soul—must be a poor, blind thing, for we have no account that it ever did see, or ever could, till it had a telescope made for it: and if it should lose its instrument it would be as blind as ever, for all the illustration teaches. He goes on to say:

"The ear was there, but it had never heard yet; the heart, but it had not beat yet; the lungs, but they had never heaved yet. If the doctrine we are opposing be true, all that was necessary now, was to shake the machine and it would immediately commence its functions."

Yes; and what more did God, the Maker of man, do than to shake the machine by the action of the breath of life? The goldsmith makes a watch, perfect in all its parts, and pronounces it a watch; but it does not tick yet: the hands are there, but they do not move; the hair spring is there, but does not stir; the main spring is in, but it exerts no power; every wheel is in its place, but no motion is seen. If it is a perfect watch "all that was necessary now was to shake the machine, and it would immediately commence its functions!" Certainly it does not take one who can "translate Greek and Hebrew" to see that a wise man would "wind up" the watch, and all would be in motion; and no need of putting a spiritual watch into it to keep it in motion.

Man was a perfect organism for the purpose God designed him at his formation. He was man; not half a man, and the poorest part too; but the record declares that man was formed of the dust. When the organism was perfected, its Maker set it in motion by the action of the breath of life; and there is no evidence of the addition of another entity called a soul, either mortal or immortal; yet our D. D. says:

"Now he received his living, conscious, and immaterial spirit."

This is a purely gratuitous assumption; without even the semblance of one scripture authority. We meet it, therefore, with a simple challenge for the proof. Further he says:

"Before, he [man] was only matter. By matter we mean that which has form, weight, color, can be seen, felt, weighed, measured, is fusible, &c. The soul of man has none of these properties."

A pretty fair description of a theological soul. But it is an effectual cure for "Ghost stories." For the fancied ghosts can be seen, therefore they are matter; so they are not "disembodied souls." The description also settles the case of the rich man and Lazarus, that they were not theological souls; for the rich man saw Lazarus; and we rather think Lazarus had a "form," or he could not have been seen; so Lazarus was not a spirit, for our D. D. says, "form" is not a "property of spirit"—it has no form. We think he has given a pretty fair description of the theological soul—it is nothing—has no existence.

Spurgeon on "the Resurrection of the Wicked."

After speaking of the resurrection of the righteous he says, "Will the wicked rise, too? Here is a point of controversy. I shall have some hard things to say now.... Yes, the wicked shall rise. The first proof is given in the second Epistle to the Corinthians v. 10, 'We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done, whether it be good or bad.' Now, since we are all to appear, the wicked must appear, and they will receive the deeds done in the body."

As to this being a "proof" that "the wicked shall rise" is questioned, and, to our mind, on very good ground. Let us look at it and see if "we are to appear, the wicked must appear." In the first place there are twenty-five we's in this chapter, twenty-four of which refer to the saints, and it is to be proved that the twenty-fifth does not. It is purely assumption for the reverend gentleman to say, because Paul says "we must all appear" he includes the wicked. Paul says, "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This, we think, gives no time for "the wicked" to "appear before the judgment seat of Christ." But one may say, Christians never do "bad." Let Paul answer. (See 1 Cor. iii. 11–15.) Here are some, who, though they build upon Christ, at the "foundation," yet use such materials as will not stand the fiery trial; they have "done bad," and will "suffer loss;" yet, having built on Christ, they will "be saved" themselves. Thus we see that Mr. Spurgeon's first proof of the resurrection of the wicked has been shown to have no reference to "the wicked" at all. But he goes on to say, "But this is not the only text to prove the doctrine. I will give you a better one, Math. v. 29, 'If thy right eye offend thee, pluck it out and cast it from thee: for it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell."

Here Mr. Spurgeon has got himself in a very peculiar dilemma by bringing in his "better" text: it seems to us to be "better" the other way; for the text to our mind teaches plainly not the resurrection of wicked, but exactly the opposite; for what is the inference...."it is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should"—what?—"perish." If we sever a member from our bodies it decays—perishes; now Christ says, "It is profitable rather to have a member perish than to have our whole body lost—perish." Methinks if the so-called orthodox divines kept on giving "better" texts in this way they should soon arrive at the truth of the "non-resurrection of the wicked."

But he goes on to give another text; we hope it is a "better" one. He says, "But lest that one proof should not suffice thee, hear another out of the same gospel, chapter x. 28, 'Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.'" Here Mr. Spurgeon has made another great blunder in quoting a text that has no reference whatever to the resurrection of the wicked, or to the wicked at all; but he continues, "wherever Christ speaks of hell [orthodox, of course] and of the lost state of the wicked he always speaks of their bodies; you scarcely find him saying anything about their souls. Christ may have said that the soul should be punished; but he far more frequently described the body in misery in order to impress his hearers; for he knew that they were sensual and devilish, and that nothing that did not effect the body would not touch them in the least."

Now, Mr. Spurgeon, you have gone far enough; you have no doubt "said some hard things now." Who was Christ talking to? Mark: "And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples....Jesus sent (them) forth and commanded them, saying, Go not into the way of the Gentiles....but go rather to the lost sheep of the house of Israel. And as ye go preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand;" and he goes on giving them instructions until we come to the text. What says Mr. Spurgeon? Were these twelve apostles "sensual and devilish?" O, corrupters of the word of God! where will the doctrine of an immortal soul lead you to? Surely this is "handling the word of God deceitfully," and not "commending" it "to every man's conscience in the sight of God." Oh, how few have heard the gospel—the glad tidings of great joy." Let us then, brethren, be at work faithfully spreading the truth of "Life only in Christ"—"the gospel." The battle will soon be over and we shall surely "reap if we faint not."

INCOG.

Cause and Effect.

BY H. YOUNG.

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar." 1 Jno. iv. 20.

But what is the cause of one's want of love to God and so want of love to his brother? When we have found the cause of this want of love, we shall then have found the only producing cause of love. We have asked the above question because love is an effect and not a cause. Let us see: "Faith, hope and charity," or love. Have we arranged these correctly? If so, then faith is lowest down in the building; i. e., lower than hope or love; and yet it is not the lowest in the foundation, for even "faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." This love, then, to God and our brother, being a result springing from principles previously possessed, can never exist but as an effect; neither can it ever fail to exist, where all these producing causes are found.

Now, then, if the word of God has reached one, by whatever cause or means, and he hears it, so as to understand and believe, then he has faith, and faith must produce hope, and these must result in love; and this love is the last result, is it not? Let us see. "Now the end of the commandment is charity." And again, "love is the fulfilling of the law." Yes, the measure is full when this result is reached.

And just, here, too, is where all our duties and graces begin, as well as end; for every cause or first principle is as much a part of the crowning effect, which is to be reached in the end, as this last result is its proper self; or in other words, as much as the root of a tree is part of the ripe fruit of said tree; and if any one would think to dispute the fact that the root of a tree is part of the fruit it bears, let him just remove all the roots from a tree and see if he will get fruit on said tree the next year. But he would just as soon get fruit from this rotten tree as we can have love to God and our brother without first having the word of God, and so hearing it as to have faith. All these foundation principles are indispensable prerequisites; they must all be had, living union, or all our boasted love to God and our brother will be but feigned, and useless things.

To reach this blessed result of love to God, and our neighbor, in the use of the means he has prescribed, and by a vigilant continuance in such means to "keep ourselves in the love of God," is our whole work.

Now a man can no more be a "voluntary" in love, than in "humility." Just read Col.

ii. 18, 19, and see what is said of "a voluntary in humility." Who is this voluntary in humility? Why, he is just like the man who is, or rather who is trying to be a voluntary in love. He is one who has humility (?) without faith.

The man who has faith must be humble, because faith always produces humility. So the man who has not faith is, of course, not forced to be humble, and so is here, very properly called "a voluntary in humility." But his humility is only a mock thing; it cannot be more than this, nor can any of our graces, or duties be better than this sham humility, unless they spring from faith and hope; and these based on God's sure word and promise.

Pittsfield, N. H., April 1, 1867.

Letters and Extracts.

From J. S. Potter.

East Boston, Mass., March, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—I prize the weekly visits of the Herald of Life very much; and I hope it may continue until Jesus our Life-giver comes to give his saints the kingdom. When I look back, over twenty years ago, in the summer of '43, when I first heard of the coming kingdom, and that the people of God should inherit the earth, instead of going to heaven at death; oh, what a revolution it made in my mind concerning the scriptures of truth. How I did rejoice when I got the light that the saints of the Most High should take and possess the kingdom under the whole heaven; and that, to take place after the resurrection of the dead; and although I was disappointed with many others in the exact time of the Lord's coming, still I held on to what light I had, and kept searching the scriptures for more, until the question came up about the mortality of man, the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked. Here I found more difficulty in harmonizing the scriptures than I did in the first place about the location of the kingdom; but after reading the "Bible vs. Tradition," and searching the scriptures, I became satisfied that the Bible taught the mortality of man, the sleep of the dead, and the utter destruction of the wicked. I found the Apostle Paul told the truth when he declared "the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life, through our Lord Jesus Christ." Then persecution commenced anew; but I lived through it and held on to the faith until more light should come. And now, I thank God, it has come; and the word of God does shine more and more, and will, unto the perfect day. I can now see that all the first Adam's posterity, or race, are in the broad road that leadeth unto death; while strait and narrow is the way that leadeth unto life, (and that is through the second Adam, the Lord Jesus Christ,) and few there be that find it. But those few, having been delivered, or made free from the law of sin and death by taking hold of the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus, they have been taken out of the broad road and translated over into the strait and narrow path that leadeth unto a future life, and that to be obtained by a resurrection from the dead. And as Christ is the resurrection and the life, and the first fruits of them that slept, and also the first born from the dead, then all those that have been begotten again, with the incorruptible seed, will be born in like manner; and those that have not been begotten will never be born. This last great crowning truth of the gospel is spreading; thank the Lord. There is quite a number in East Boston who are getting hold of these truths, and have been made to rejoice amidst all opposition; most of which comes from adventists. May the Lord open their eyes. But none of these things move me. I never felt stronger in the word of God, or to love it better, than I do to-day. The plan and purpose of God has been made plainer to me, than ever before. I see that old serpent's lie cannot stand before the word of God. Luther struck a blow at his head. The Adventists tried their hand at his body; and then settled down, thinking they had done all that could be done, but I find they left the tail of the serpent still alive; and the fruit of that is, getting the wicked out of their graves and bringing them into the world to come to die a second death, when the word of the Lord says, the dead are raised incorruptible; and they that attain to that world, and the resurrection from the dead, cannot die any more, being the children of God and the children of the resurrection. I am glad that the light is spreading, and able men are being raised up to take off the mask and make a clean sweep of immortal soulism.

From Leonard C. Thorne.

St. Augustine, Florida, Mar. 29, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—Never having before visited that portion of our country where liberty used to be so much talked of but oppression so widely abounded, and where the boasted freedom of our people was so long a living lie, I have kept my eyes and ears on duty endeavoring to learn something of the truth respecting the existing condition of affairs. We hear much in the North about the freedmen's unwillingness to work, but I find quite as many evidences of industry among the colored people as among the white. One extreme frequently follows the other, and after having long worked under compulsion and then been suddenly thrown upon their own resources, and transformed into responsible beings, but with nothing to comfort or encourage them as the fruit of their past labors, it would be strange indeed if some of them did not turn drones, content to eke out all that they ever received, a scanty subsistence. The wonder is that it is not the case to a far greater extent, since so many of the whites, whom they have been taught to regard as beings superior to themselves, set them the example. I have conversed with many of them, and find that the degree of intelligence and depth of thought which some of them evince is truly surprising. Many of them appretiate the responsibilities of their new position and realize that the final security to themselves and to their children of social and political justice is largely dependent upon their faithful pursuance of a proper course of action. Like all the truly loyal people of the South, they rejoice at the institution of a military government, and hail it as the guarantee of immediate protection. On the other hand many of those whites who staked their all upon the success of the rebellion are much dejected, and, like the serpent bereft of its fangs, they recognize their incapacity for further harm. Freely indulging my desire to talk with the ex-chattels, and not unfrequently being an unobserved listener to them while engaged in conversation among themselves, I have been struck with the contrast between them and the whites respecting indulgence in the habit of profanity. Nor is this contrast confined to the whites resident at the South, but extends to many here belonging in the North. There have been times when I thought that this foolish and wicked practice was decreasing, but am campelled to conclude that it is a part of the swelling sea of evil by which the last times are characterized. Intercourse with the colored people in those States through which I have passed assures me that their condition, both morally and mentally, is better than generally reported and believed. The whole South bears the impress of that withering, blighting curse which God has caused to be removed, and almost everywhere may be seen the trail of the terrible and fiery agency by which the wicked and damning system was destroyed. I stepped one day into what was a slave pen, and while standing there trying to picture to my mind some of the scenes of anguish and indescribable wo which those dreary walls had hid from the view of the outside world, but not from God, a well dressed and intelligent-looking man, more white than black, entered, and I at once engaged him in conversation. "There," said he, pointing to a pillar upon which was marked a scale of feet and inches, "is the post where they used to measure the height of slaves when about selling them to the highest bidder. There (pointing to a spot near by it), stood the auction block upon which the slaves stood while being sold, and I was sold from it myself only a few years ago."

Questioning him, I learned that he was sold from his parents in Virginia, when quite young, and carried South. After many years of faithful service, freedom was offered him by his master, who was then near his death, and was gladly accepted. Taking advantage of some fatal omission in his freedom papers, some of the heirs to his old master's estate deprived him of his liberty by selling him in the pen where we then stood. He has a freedom now which will not be taken from him. After the war, aided by a somewhat curious incident, he met his father and mother, together with brothers and sisters whom he had never before seen; and you may judge whether he told the truth when he said he "was glad to meet them." He is now doing a lucrative business, and if you should go to the city where he resides and inquire for him, you would, most likely, be directed to his house at once. When, overlooking the events of the last few years, we contrast the present with the past, we cannot but exclaim, What hath God done for his people? Surely he is Almighty, and we may not distrust him. I am more than ever impressed that we have a work to do among the freedmen, which if rightly begun and faithfully prosecuted will do much to benefit our fellow men and glorify him we love. May God help us to do our whole duty, for the day is well-nigh spent, and the evening draweth nigh. Yours in hope.

From Eld. W. S. Campbell.

Philadelphia, Pa., March 28, 1867.

Br Storrs:—I found in this city an interest to hear on the question of gospel life. Yet I find many do not identify themselves as I most certainly think is desirable. You always know where to find some believers, and they can be relied upon to help forward the cause, but others will be glad to hear and may also rejoice that the doctrines of the gospel are true, while they will need continual aid.

I have now spent three Sundays here. They have been very stormy; particularly the first two. For this reason the audiences have not been so large as they would otherwise have been. The meetings were good, and it appears that the cause may become established at the corner of Sixth St. and Girard Ave. I enjoyed several interesting meetings with the brethren who meet at Mount Zion Church, corner of Sixth and Christian Streets. There is a good interest to hear upon the coming and kingdom of Christ. Br. Clegg and others are using prudent and earnest exertions, and with a liberality which is worthy of commendation and emulation.

Br. Burbank seems to be prospering and succeeding in his "Home." I visited him several times. The self-sacrificing devotion with which he and those employed devote themselves to the work of teaching and caring for colored children demand admiration and countenance from all who have an interest in this class; and indeed of all christians, while it is sure to have praise of God.

I delivered one lecture at the corner of 9th and Spring Garden Streets, on the prophecy of Revelation xvii.

I was greatly refreshed and strengthened by visiting Brn. Sutton, Grim, and others. Shall I now ask your indulgence in the space for the following?—

In Memoriam.

Again in the death of Sister Emily White the church in Philadelphia is bereft of one of its members, and an affectionate wife and mother is taken from her loving husband and children. Sister White had been for many years an invalid, and at times suffering most acutely, yet she was always patient, and never doubted the wisdom or complained of the neglect of Him who permitted this severe trial. Being thus an invalid she was not permitted the privilege of meeting with those of like precious faith; still she read with interest; and embraced every opportunity of conversing on the doctrine of the kingdom and life to come.

The blessed considerations which had given her so much comfort and strength in the time of her affliction did not fail her in the last moments. Up to a few moments before her death she spoke most freely on those things. Her hope was in the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead.

Examples like this are worthy of note. She became a christian at the age of 14 years. Some time after she joined the Presbyterian church. From her views on the antislavery question she became connected with a small body in Philadelphia known as the "Free Church."

Her husband, at the time of their marriage, was not a christian; but soon became interested, and with her was a believer in the coming of Christ in the year '43.'

The writer spoke to the sympathizing friends and mourning relatives at the funeral on the blessed hope of "Life in Christ only." Prayer was offered by Eld. F. H. Burbank.

Obituary.

Fell asleep in Jesus, Springfield, Mass., March 20th, Joel W. Thomas, aged 43. For seven years he has been wasting away under the fatal disease, consumption. He has been a great sufferer, and yet with such patience none but a christian could have manifested. He was a firm believer in the doctrine of "no life out of Christ." He shunned not to declare his faith to all. He was respected and loved by a large circle of friends, even by those who did not believe with him. It was my privilege to visit and converse with him a number of times of late; and a blessed privilege it was. I saw him a few hours before he fell asleep, and such a calm, peaceful, rejoicing trust in Christ but few witness. It was not "like taking a leap in the dark." No, no; he knew in whom he had believed.

"Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wakes to weep."

We "mourn not as others who have no hope." He leaves a wife and daughter to mourn their loss. May the widow's God protect and comfort them in their bereavement.

The funeral was on Sunday, 24th, at 12 M., attended by R. E. Ladd and S. G. Buckingham; the last named is pastor of one of the churches here. Br. Ladd read a few passages of scripture, arranged after the Episcopal order of funeral service, and offered prayer. Mr. Buckingham made a few remarks, stating what a sufferer he had been, and with what patience he had endured it all, and what lessons had been learned in visiting that sick chamber; and in his remarks at last placed him in heaven. Not a word was spoken to show that was not his faith. He believed he should sleep; that he should be at rest till the trumpet should sound, and his Master should awake him to a new life, clothed upon with immortality, and eternal life, to be made like him who was the first fruits of the resurrection. C. A. Hastings.

Died in Corinna, Me., March 24th of diphtheria, William A., only son of brother and sister Henry Atkins, aged 8 years. By this event the hearts of two loving sisters and a doting father and mother are bereaved of a brilliant star in the household firmament. Their sobs over the remains, and the last farewell of the father, as he turned away, and said, "Good-by, Willie," awoke emotion in my heart which found an echo in the language of the Revelator, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." I endeavored to comfort the mourning circle as Paul directs in 1 Thess. iv. 18. May God sanctify the affliction to the bereaved and hasten the time when we shall be called to witness such scenes no more. Amen.

D. S. Holt.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

Although Congress has adjourned, the Senate has been kept in session to confirm appointments made by the President. The action of both parties even in these matters shows the antagonism has not died out. It is supposed President Johnson is seeking to overturn the legistion by Congress on the Reconstruction of the South by the Supreme Court. Any overt act on his part, to nullify the Reconstruction bill, will bring Congress together in July, when measures will be adopted to prevent his further interference in that matter.

The Southern people, on the other hand, are becoming more and more reconciled every day to the actiontaken by Congress to bring their States back into the Union. Conventions of united colored and white people are very common all over the South. Better than all, the colored people are at last enjoying a peace and quiet they never had before. Not a negro murder has been committed, nor has a house been burnt, owned by one, on account of the feelings of antagonism existing before the act of Reconstruction was passed. The account of the state of good feeling existing between both classes at the South seems to read like an idle dream—but it is real, it is hearty. Well may the now proud ex-slave say, "God bless Abraham Lincoln."

Business, though comparatively dull, is better than most persons expected; yet goods of all kinds are lower in price than any time for some years past.

The insurance companies are justifying the course adopted against insuring property belonging to Jews. They state as prices fall, fires become more numerous always, and their books show that the percentage of such losses is largest on the property owned by Jews. The latter have taken action against the fault-finding insurance companies, and call upon their friends to do no business with the guilty ones.

The fires produced by the great colliery explosion in Virginia are still burning, and it is believed they cannot be extinguished inside of three weeks. It is the most disastrous of its kind that has ever occurred in this country.

The strike of the miners in New Jersey still continues and is increasing. Two thousand are idle or engaged with the strikers, and all the mines in Morris county have suspended work.

The Mississippi valley has recently been the scene of fearful devastation.

FOREIGN.

Evidences of the impending explosion among the military powers of Europe are daily thickening. Count Bismarck has in many instances shown himself the master of Napoleon in diplomacy, but his crowning act will evidently be the utter overthrow of that pretentious humbug. Bismarck has brought about an amicable feeling between his government and that of Austria, and they seem willing to enter into a close union to promote the national development of Germany. Without Austria, Prussia has now under her control a larger standing army than that of France, and the people are united as one man in sustaining their government. Napoleon is not idle, evidently seeing that he has to engage in a death-struggle with his more wily antagonist for not only the supremacy in Europe, but his very existence. He is building more war vessels than ever before at one time; all his ship yards are full of workmen hasting with their work. At the same time the project for the reorganization of the army, a plan which virtually makes France a nation of soldiers, increasing her army to one million two hundred thousand men, is being pushed by the government. When this is done, with a powerful navy and an armed nation Napoleon will be prepared to commence his practical operations for the greater development of the power, for the greater aggrandizement of territory and the greater military and naval glory of France. Precisely what these projects are the progress of events only can develop.

There will shortly be a soldier for every six able-bodied men in Europe. These are armed with weapons ten times more destructive than those used at Waterloo only fifty years ago; and movements and combinations of armies are now made in hours where it took days then. Unlike Bismarck, however, Napoleon finds little favor among his people to his vast projects of agressive preparation. The discontent is very threathening, and he begins to falter—coaxing at one moment and threatening the next, ever uncertain how to act. But his "star of fate" seems to urge him on to his tragic end.

Latest. Since penning the above, the cable telegraph brings the following interesting and most important news from Europe, which we copy from the Herald's summary:

A war panic has broken out in London and Berlin, and, while it is not stated what particular event has led to the sudden alarm, it is evident that in both those cities the course of Napoleon is regarded as threatening a speedy interruption of the existing peace. The press dispatches from London state that the uncertainty in regard to the French Emperor's action and the fear that he will adopt a warlike policy have created distrust among business men and occasioned great depression in commercial and financial circles in that city and in Paris; and later in the day we are told that this feeling increased to a war panic. The prospect of continued peace in Europe is becoming less and less certain. In spite of the new temple of concord which Napoleon has reared in Paris and in which he invites the nations to worship, the Fates seem resolved on war. On the political horizon we discover now not one war cloud but many. The Luxemburg affair threatens to bring France and Prussia into open collision. Should those two Powers go to war it would not surprise us to learn at the earliest possible date afterwards that the armies of the Emperor Alexander were quartered in the neighborhood of the Sweet Waters, and that by one leap the Eastern question had been fully if not satisfactorily settled. Napoleon's hands would be tied, and Russia might do as she pleased. The drama which is now being enacted on the European stage, and of which the scenes are varied and the players many, deepens in interest as it advances, and promises before the curtain falls to startle and astonish the world.

Our Government has received news that Maximilian is completely surrounded by the Liberals, and that there is no possibility of his escape. The Liberal leaders are said to wish his escape—which may be.

After suppressing one attempt at insurrection, President Geffrard of Hayti has been less successful with regard to a second attempt. Finding himself unable to quell it, the President has resigned the office, which he has held with great distinction since 1859.

Meetings in Brooklyn, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "Sawyer's Piano forte Rooms." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

"Voice of Elijah."—The third part of this work is received. We have not had time yet to examine it carefully. Those who wish to procure it should address the author, "Joseph T. Curry, Box 150, Chelsea, Mass." No price for it is named; but none should fail to send something in payment who call for it: not less than 25 cents, certainly, and as much more as they feel disposed.

"The Theology of the Bible."

Geo. W. Young has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should sent direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. Halsted, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J.;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

Reuben Cadwell's post office address is Cortland, Cortland Co., N. Y.

APPOINTMENTS.

Conference in New Haven, Conn.—There will be a General Conference of christians, commonly known as Advent believers, at Day's Hall, Broadway, New Haven, commencing April 11th, and holding over two Sabbaths to the 22d, inclusive. Elders A. Ross, J. G. Hook, B. Hitchcock, L. Boutell, are invited to preach the word. Brethren from abroad are invited. By order of the church.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

Article I. The object of this Union is to use al available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Christ alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

Jacob Grim, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. Leet, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
Rufus Wendell, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
Leonard C. Thorne, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—Jos. Parks, Thomas Scott, M. V. Sterling, Melissa A. Sawyer, S. V. Moore, S. F. Bradley, Andrew C. Jenkins, Mrs. Rachel Gorham, D. Coatsworth, Geo. Mitchell, Addie Bickford, C. Gillete, Jos. Burkeitt, S. W. Yates, Mrs. S. D. S. Bussier, Stephen Smith, M. P. Martin, Seymour Whiting, James Taylor, C. C. Webber, Thos. M. Redhead, R. L Johnson.

Two Dollars each from—Dr. J. F. Lee, Mrs. Sarah Curtis, Mrs. Arzilla Wilson, Charles Turner, Charles Hope, C. W. Lyndall, T. R. Crocker, $2 to send the Herald to the poor, Geo. H. Waterhouse.

Various Sums.

Mrs. Uriah F. Rogers, $1.24; Robert Rau, James Stephenson, $4; Anna Neill, $2.50; S. A. Kemp, $3; James Grant, $2.50; John S. Shed, $5; Reuben Cadwell, $100 on pledge to Herald; Nathan Ward, $5.

The Freedmen's Mission.—The friends of this mission will see that it is some time since anything has been received at this office for it. We are pledged to pay, at least, Helen Robertson's board, which is $20 per month. We sent her the amount for March, but had to make up, ourself, a deficiency of about $3, and nothing is yet received for the present month. We need not say more.

Advertisements.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
(A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE,
LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS,
GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
62 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
Office Hours, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK.

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON,
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 Chambers St.,
NEW YORK.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity: by Geo. Storrs Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letter to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

Man's Nature and Destiny; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

The Atonement, by Geo. Storrs, and The Gospel Hope, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, New York.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our Catalogue our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance Bible vs. Tradition, bound, to $1: in paper covers to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the Herald of Life, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

BEAR THY CROSS CHEERFULLY.

Bear thy cross cheerfully,
Brother, the night
Passeth, though tearfully
Dim is thy sight.
Carry it duteously,
Looking afar,
Where gleameth beauteously
The morning star.

Bear it with white hands up,
Sister in pain,
Drinking life's bitterest cup,
Know 'tis in vain.
Hopefully, prayerfully,
Light then 'twill be,
For the Lord carefully
Thus leadeth thee.

Through surging sorrow's tides,
Vales dark and lone,
Up rugged mountain sides,
Making no moan,
Though shrinking wearily
Beneath the load,
Take it up cheerily,
'Tis from thy God.

Bear thy cross trustingly,
Whate'er it be,
Then will it tenderly
Rest upon thee.
Think not to lay it down
Till life is done;
The cross shall wear the crown
When the kingdom is won.

Christian Guardian.

Children's Department.

THE DAISY'S FIRST WINTER.

Somewhere in a garden of this earth which the dear Lord has planted with many flowers of grandness, grew a fresh, bright little daisy. The first this little daisy knew, she found herself growing in green pastures and beside the still waters where the Heavenly Shepherd was leading his sheep. And very beautiful did life look to her as her bright little eyes, with their crimson lashes, opened and looked down into the deep crystal waters of the brook below, where the sunshine made every hour more sparkles, more rings of light, and more brilliant glances and changes of color than all the jewelers in the world could imitate. She knew intimately all the yellow-birds, and meadow-larks, and bobolinks, and black-birds, that sang, piped, whistled, or chattered among the bushes and trees in the pasture, and she was a prime favorite with them all. The fish that darted to and fro in the waters seemed like so many living gems, and their silent motions, as they glided hither and thither, were full of beauty, and told as plainly of happiness as if they could speak. Multitudes of beautiful flowers grew up in the water, or on the moist edges of the brook.

They did not all blossom at once, but had their graceful changes; but there was always a pleasant flutter of expectation among them, —either a sending forth of leaves, or a making of buds, or a bursting out into blossoms; and when the blossoms passed away, there was a thoughtful, careful maturing of seeds, all packed away so snugly in their little coffers and caskets of seed-pods, which were of every quaint and dainty shape that ever could be fancied for a lady's jewel box. Overhead there grew a wide-spreading apple tree, which in the month of June became a gigantic bouquet, holding up to the sun a million silvery opening flowers, and a million pink tipped buds; and the little winds would come to play in its branches, and take the pink shells of the blossoms for their tiny air boats, in which they would go floating round among the flowers, or sail on voyages of discovery down the stream; and when the time of its blossom was gone, the bountiful tree from year to year had matured fruits of golden ripeness which cheered the hearts of men.

Little Daisy's life was only one varied delight from day to day. She had a hundred playmates among the light-winged winds, that came to her every hour to tell her what was going on all over the green pasture, and to bring her sweet perfumed messages from violets and anemones of even the more distant regions.

There was not a ring of sunlight that danced in the golden network at the bottom of the brook that did not bring a thrill of gladness to her heart; not a tiny fish glided in his crystal paths, or played and frolicked under the water-lily shadows, that was not a well-known friend of hers, and whose pleasures she did not share. At night she held conferences with the dew-drops that stepped about among the flowers in their bright pearl slippers, and washed their leaves and faces before they went to rest. Nice little nurses and dressing-maids, these dews! and they kept tender guard all night over the flowers, watching and blinking wakefully to see that all was safe; but when the sun arose, each of them spread a pair of little rainbow wings and was gone.

To be sure, there were some reverses in her lot. Sometimes a great surly, ill looking cloud would appear in the sky, like a cross schoolmaster, and sweep up all the sunbeams, and call in a gruff voice to the little winds, her playfellows, to come away from their nonsense; and then he would send a great strong wind down on them, all with a frightful noise and roar, and sweep all the little flowers flat to the earth; and there would be a great rush and pattering of rain drops, and bellowing of thunders, and sharp-forked lightnings would quiver through the air as if the green pastures certainly were to be torn to pieces; but in about half an hour it would be all over—the sunbeams would all dance out from their biding places, just as good as if nothing had happened, and the little winds would come laughing back, and each little flower would lift itself up, and the winds would help them to shake off the wet and plume themselves as jauntily as if nothing had gone amiss. Daisy had the greatest pride and joy in her own pink blossoms, of which there seemed to be an inexhaustible store; for as fast as one dropped its leaves, another was ready to open its eyes, and there were buds of every size, waiting still to come on, even down to little green cushions of buds that lay hidden away in the middle of the leaves down close to the root. "How favored I am!" said Daisy; "I never stop blossoming. The anemones and the liverwort and the blood-root have their time, but then they stop and have only leaves; while I go on blooming perpetually; how nice it is to be made as I am."

"But you must remember," said a great rough Burdock to her—"you must remember that your winter must come at last, when all this fine blossoming will have to be done with."

"What do you mean?" said Daisy, in a tone of pride, eyeing her rough neighbor with a glance of disgust. "You are a rough, ugly old thing, and that's why you are cross. Pretty people like me can afford to be good natured."

"Ah, well," said Dame Burdock, "you'll see. It's a pretty thing if a young chit just out from seed this year should be impertiment to me, who have seen twenty Winters—yes, and been through them well, too!"

"Tell, me, Bobolink," said Daisy, "is there any truth in what this horrid Burdock has been saying! What does she mean by Winter?"

"I don't know, not I," said Bobolink, as he turned a dozen somersets in the air, and then perched himself airily on a thistle-head, singing—

"I don't know, and I don't care;
It's mighty pleasant to fly up there,
And it's mighty pleasant to light down here,
And all I know is chip, chip, cheer."

"Say, Humming-bird, do you know anything about Winter?"

"Winter? I never saw one," said "Humming-bird; "we have wings, and follow Summer round the world, and where she is, there go we."

"Meadow-Lark, Meadow Lark, have you ever heard of Winter?" said Daisy.

Meadow-Lark was sure he never remembered one. "What is Winter?" he said, looking confused.

"Butterfly, Butterfly," said Daisy, "come, tell me will there be Winter, and what is Winter?"

But the Butterfly laughed, and danced up and down, and said, "What is Daisy talking about? I never heard of Winter. Winter? ha! ha! What is it?"

"Then it's only one of Burdock's spiteful sayings," said Daisy. "Just because she isn't pretty, she wants to spoil my pleasure, too. Say, dear, lovely tree that shades me so sweetly, is there such a thing as Winter?"

And the tree said, with a sigh through its leaves, "Yes, daughter, there will be Winter; but fear not, for the Good Shepherd makes both Summer and Winter, and each is good in its time. Enjoy thy Summer and fear not."

The months rolled by. The violets had long ago stopped blooming, their leaves were turning yellow, but they had beautiful seed-caskets, full of rows of little pearls, which next year should come up in blue violets. The dog-toothed violet and eye-bright had gone under the ground, so that no more was seen of them, and Daisy wondered whither they could be gone. But she had new acquaintances far more brilliant, and she forgot the others. The brook-side seemed all on fire with golden rod, and the bright yellow was relieved by the rich purple tints of the asters, while the blue-fringed gentian held up its cups, that seemed as if they might have been cut out of the sky, —and still Daisy had abundance of leaves and blossoms and felt strong and well at the root. Then the apple tree cast down to the ground its fragrant burden of golden apples, and men came and carried them away.

By and by there came keen, cutting winds, and driving storms of sleet and hail; and then at night it would be so cold, so cold! and one after another the leaves and flowers fell still and frozen, and grew black, and turned to decay. The leaves loosened and fell from the apple tree and sailed away by thousands down the brook; the butterflies lay dead with the flowers, but all the birds had gone singing away to the sunny South, following the Summer into other lands.

"Tell me, dear tree," said Daisy, "is this Winter that is coming?"

"It is Winter, darling," said the tree; "but fear not. The Good Shepherd makes Winter as well as Summer."

"I still hold my blossoms," said Daisy—for Daisy was a hardy little thing.

But the frosts came harder and harder every night, and first they froze her blossoms, and then they froze her leaves, and finally all were gone—there was nothing left but the poor little root, with the folded leaves of the future held in its bosom.

"Ah, dear tree!" said Daisy, "is not this dreadful?"

"Be patient, darling," said the tree. "I have seen many, many Winters; but the Good Shepherd loses never a seed, never a root, never a flower: they will all come again."

By and by came colder days and colder, and the brook froze to its little heart and stopped; and then there came bitter, driving storms, and the snow lay wreathed over Daisy's head; but still from the bare branches of the apple tree came a voice of cheer. "Courage, darling, and patience! Not a flower shall be lost: Winter is only for a season."

"It is so dreary!" murmured Daisy, deep in her bosom.

"It will be short; the Spring will come again," said the tree.

And at last the Spring did come; and the snow melted and ran away down the book, and the sun shone out warm, and fresh green leaves jumped and sprang out of every dry twig of the apple tree. And one bright, rejoicing day, little Daisy opened her eyes, and lo! there were all her friends once more; there were the eye-brights and the violets and the anemones and the liverwort; only ever so many more of them than there were last year, because each little pearl of a seed had been nursed and moistened by the snows of Winter, and had come up as a little plant to have its own flowers. The birds all came back, and began building their nests, and everything was brighter and fairer than before; and Daisy felt strong at heart, because she had been through a winter, and learned not to fear it. She looked up into the apple-tree. "Will there be more Winters, dear tree!" she said.

"Darling, there will; but fear not. Enjoy the present hour, and leave future Winters to Him who makes them. Thou hast come through these sad hours, because the Shepherd remembered thee. He loseth never a flower out of His pasture but calleth them all by name: and the snow will never drive so cold, or the wind beat so hard, as to hurt one of His flowers. And look! of all the flowers of last year, what one is melted away in the snow, or forgotten in the number of green things? Every blade of grass is counted, and puts up its little head in the right time; so never fear, Daisy, for thou shalt blossom stronger and brighter for the Winter."

"But why must there be Winter?" said Daisy.

"I never ask why," said the tree. "My business is to blossom and bear apples. Summer comes, and I am joyful; Winter comes, and I am patient. But, darling, there is another garden where thou and I shall be transplanted one day, where there shall be Winter no more. There is coming a new earth; and not one flower or leaf of these green pastures shall be wanting there, but come as surely as last year's flowers came back this Spring!"—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

THE POVERTY OF UNBELIEF.

BY LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

The following was suggested by conversation with rejecters of God's truth in different forms; some believing in immortality in sin and suffering, and others denying the inspiration of the Bible, trusting in revelations from the spirit world. The one is but the offspring of the other. The first insist that there is no punishment in death, and if the wicked dead are not raised, old Noah was grossly deceived when, moved with fear, he prepared an ark for the saving of himself and house; for the Lord was infinitely kinder to those who perished than he was to him who was spared to toil and suffer, and begin the world anew; also with the Sodomites did he deal more mercifully in destroying them instantly when he hastened Lot from all his possessions, if the wicked live not again. Thus, through blindness, making life no blessing and death no punishment. While listening to such and numerous other inconsistencies, how has the book of truth loomed up before me, in mystic grandeur and durability, as never before. I felt to exclaim, "It is pure granite." The unbeliever hurls his missiles at it, yet it moves not: the carping sycophant tries to weaken its foundation, yet cannot dig deep enough to find the source on which it rests: all unbelief combines to rail and sneer, yet there it stands, pure in whiteness, defying their impotence and rage; or, as we may imagine, the angels viewed the Roman legions in their glittering armors, confident in their strength and the powers that placed them there to keep the lifeless form committed to their trust; yet how quickly was this boasted power gone when like dead men they were helpless before the swift messengers of light who rolled away the stone. So the blinded sinner who wrests the scriptures, or pronounces them a cunningly-devised fable, will find when the rain descends and the winds blow and beat against his resting place, it will fall, and great will be its fall; while the Rock of truth on which we may build will stand out in grander proportions as the waves sweep around its base; and those resting on it can rejoice amid the roar of elements, and defy all the combined powers of earth and darkness to move them or pull out so much as one prop that supports the glorious superstructure. Considering this, how poor looks the man, whatever be his condition in life, who builds not on the Rock—and that Rock is Christ. Does the christian consider sufficiently the poverty of such a state, so as to be moved with pity, as we are, when we see rags and starvation, which will hardly compare with unbelief; living in a world created by infinite wisdom, and supplied by the munificence of a kind Father without a grateful recognition of its source, or even an acknowledgment of its Author? a world where the tolling bell announces to us daily that we are mortal; and when eternal life is offered without price, and its acceptance, limited to the uncertain term of present existence, and no effort made to comply with the terms, and even ignoring the terms and denying the whole wonderous plan! O is there poverty like this? There is naught in the universe so deserves the name. Should we not regard them with something of the compassion that Jesus did? He loved, pitied wept, and died. May all who love Jesus improve every instrumentality, especially the powerful engine of prevailing prayer. Jesus is able to save unto the utmost. Then with what confidence we may wrestle. We do not approach an unjust judge, who is only moved by selfishness to avoid importunity. Jesus said, hear what the unjust judge saith; and shall not God answer, or avenge his elect, which cry day and night unto him? Also those who are instrumental in converting a sinner will save a soul from death. What an object to labor for; one which caused Jesus to leave the realms of glory, and inspires the heavenly hosts with rejoicing, and will swell the anthems of praise throughout the ceaseless ages.

Will the Lord strengthen and impart the needed wisdom, that we may fulfil life's great mission and improve to the fullest extent the grace given whereby we are made heirs of eternal life. Your sister in Christ.

"THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION."

We think when a person writes for a paper, occupying valuable space, he should endeavor to make original suggestions, advance new truths that are interesting and valuable. A writer in the HERALD, on the above subject, writes as if he supposed the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE were mere children, only in their teens, and does not seem to be aware that his views on Math. xxiv. are precisely identical with those of Universalists, Swedenborgians, and Spiritualists, and have been refuted by Adventists a thousand times.

The Romanists will be highly pleased with such interpretation of scripture. They have been, ever since the days of the great Luther and the good Zwingle, vainly endeavoring to cast off the odium that the Saviour cast upon their abominable hierarchy by describing their wicked persecutions in advance. All intelligent christian expositors, of any note, with the exception of Albert Barnes, have told us that the papacy was the persecuting power referred to.

Three separate and distinct questions were put to the Saviour by the apostles—"When shall these things be? what shall be the sign of thy coming? and the end of the world?" He, without the least hesitation, frankly answered them. This subject has been too often discussed, and is too well understood by Adventists, to require elucidation.

If the writer in the HERALD, above referred to, is right, then the Catholics are correct, and their church is not, and has not been, an abomination; and it has never committed desolations. It is passing strange that any Adventist should defend the Papal, Swedenborgian, and Spiritualist views, and denounce the great and mighty truth, that the generation on the earth, that should witness the "signs," described by the Saviour, should not pass away, until all should be fulfilled. According to the writer in the HERALD, Titus had no idea when he should attack Jerusalem; for it is said, "No man knoweth the day or the hour." But we are told "whoso readeth let him understand." T.

Scotch Plains, N. J.

THE NAMES OF OUR MONTHS.

BR. STORRS:—The following is taken from F. Shalluck's Tables, printed in 1817. Thinking it would be interesting to the readers of the HERALD, I send it to you for insertion in the same, if you think best.

JANUARY: so called from Janus, an ancient king of Italy, deified after his death. It is the first month of the year. The Saxons called it Wolf month, because of the mischievous wolves.

FEBRUARY: so called from Febrius, Latin; that is, the Febuarius expiatory sacrifices, offered by the Romans for the purifying of the people in that month. It is the second month in the year. The Saxons called it Colewort, or Wort, spring, because then worts began to sprout. Feb. 19, 1401, Henry IV., of England permitted the clergy to burn Wm. Sautrie, a clergyman, for heresy. This was the first execution in England on account of religion.

MARCH: so called of Mars, the heathen god. The third month in the year. The Saxons called it Lengning month, because the days then began to exceed in length the nights. March 6, 1716, the northern was dicovered.

APRIL: (opening, in Latin) because in this month things are, as it were, opened and budded.

MAY: (majus, from majorus, Latin) so called by Romulus, in respect of his senators. The Saxons called it Three Milkins, because they then milked their cows three times a day.

JUNE: (Junius, a juniaribus) ,i. e., the younger sort of people. The Saxons called it Medow month, because their cattle were then turned out to feed in the meadows. It is the sixth month in the year.

JULY: (Juilet, French; Julius, Latin) so named in honor of Julius Cæsar. The Saxons called it Hay month, because they then generally cut their hay. It is the seventh month in the year.

AUGUST: the eighth month of the year, so called from Augustus Cæsar. The Saxons called it Barn month, because they then filled their barns.

SEPTEMBER: (French of Septem. Latin seven,) a month so called (old style) because it is the seventh month from March. The ninth month of the year. The Saxons called it Grist month, because they then carried their new corn to mill.

OCTOBER: (Octobres: Latin of octo, eight) so called as being the eighth month from March. It is the tenth month of the year. The Saxons called it Wine month, because grapes were then usually pressed to make wine.

NOVEMBER: (of novem: Latin) so called, being the ninth month from March. The Saxons called it Windy month, because of the high winds usually coming in that month. It is the eleventh month of the year.

DECEMBER: (of Decem, Latin, ten) because it is the tenth month from March, which was anciently the beginning of the year. The Saxons called it Winter month, because of the cold, then growing intense, and afterward Holy month, on account of the nativity of Christ. It is the twelfth month of the year.

DANIEL OSBORN.

Findley's Lake, N. Y.

AN EXTRACT FROM ALBERT BARNES.

This estimable divine concludes his commentary on the chapter xv. of 1 Corinthians, in the following strain:—

Thus closes this chapter of inimitable beauty, and of unequal power of argumentation. Such is the prospect which is before the christian. He shall indeed die like other men. But his death is a sleep—a calm, gentle, undisturbed sleep, in the expectation of being again awaked to a brighter day. v. 6. He has the assurance that his Saviour rose, and that his people shall therefore also rise. v. 12–20. He encounters peril, and privation, and persecution; he may be ridiculed and despised; he may be subjected to danger or doomed to fight with wild beasts; or to contend with men who resemble wild beasts; he may be doomed to the pains and terrors of a martyrdom at the stake, but he has the assurance that all these are of short continuance, and that before him there is a world of eternal glory. v. 29–32. He may be poor, unhonored and apparently without an earthly friend or protector, but his Saviour and redeemer reigns. v. 25. He may be opposed by wicked men, and his name slandered, and body tortured, and his peace marred, but his enemies shall all be subdued. v. 26, 27. He will himself die, and sleep in his grave, but he shall live again, v. 22, 23. He has painful proof that his body is corruptible, but it will be incorruptible; that it is now vile, but it will be glorious; that it is weak, frail, feeble, but it will yet be strong, and no more subject to disease or decay. v. 42, 43. And he will be brought under the power of death, but death shall be robbed of its honors, and despoiled of its triumph. Its sting from the saint is taken away, and it is changed to a blessing. It is now not the dreaded monster, the king of terrors; it is a friend that comes to remove him from a world of toil to a world of rest; from a life of sin to a life of glory. The grave is not to him the gloomy abode, the permanent resting-place of his body; it is a place of rest for a little time; grateful like the bed of down to a wearied frame, where he may lie down and repose after the fatigues of the day, and gently wait for the morning. He has nothing to fear in death; nothing to fear in the dying pang, the gloom, the chill, the sweat, the paleness, the fixedness of death: nothing to fear in the chilliness, the darkness, the silence, the corruption of the grave. All this is in the way to immortality, and is closely and indissolubly connected with immortality. v. 55–57. And in view of all this, we should be patient, faithful, laborious, self denying; we should engage with zeal in the work of the Lord; we should calmly wait till our change come. v. 58. No other system of religion has any such hopes as this; no other system does anything to dispel the gloom, or drive away the horrors of the grave. How foolish is the man who rejects the gospel—the only system which brings life and immortality to light! How foolish to reject the doctrine of the resurrection, and to lie down in the grave without peace, without hope, without any belief that there will be a world of glory; living without God, and dying like the brute. And yet infidelity seeks and claims its chief triumphs in the attempt to convince poor dying man that he has no solid ground of hope; that the universe is "without a Father and without a God;" that the grave terminates the career of man forever; and that in the grave he sinks away to eternal annihilation! Strange that man should seek such degradation! Strange that all men, conscious that they must die, do not at once greet christianity as their best friend, and hail the doctrine of the future state, and of the resurrection, as that which is adapted to meet the deeply felt evils of this world; to fill the desponding mind with peace; and to sustain the soul in the temptations and trials of life, and in the gloom and agony of death!

REMARK.—The sentiments pervading by far the greater portion of the foregoing extract will find a cordial response in every pious heart. The general tenor of the observations is in delightful accord with the doctrine with the view of Life only in Christ. We give the extract mainly for the good that is in it; but partly, also, to show how a most excellent strain of remark may be despoiled of its legitimate influence by the intrusion of the fabulous conceit, that it is the mission of DEATH—declared by inspiration to be a doomed "enemy"—"to remove" the Christian "from a world of toil to a world of rest; from a life of sin to a life of glory." The reader must make his own further reflections: our page is full. R. W.

RETRIBUTION.—The Rev. John Pierpont was a steadfast upholder of the temperance cause, and for his faithfulness in waging and advocating its principles he was driven from his pulpit in Boston by the exertions of a wealthy firm, members of his church, who were engaged in the liquor traffic. He was afterwards appointed a clerk in the Treasury Department in Washington. While there it fell to his lot to examine certain invoices of liquor imported into Boston, and feeling satisfied that the price set down as the foreign cost was too low, he called attention to the matter. Investigations were instituted which led to the discovery of extensive frauds on the part of the importers, who proved to be the very parties who had persecuted him and driven him to the very place where their iniquities were revealed to him. They have but recently suffered a terrible penalty for their crime, which bankrupted them in purse and character.

VARIETIES.

SELECTED BY W. M.

The true and grand idea of the Church, that is, a society for the purpose of making men like Christ, earth like heaven, the kingdom of this world the kingdom of Christ, is all lost, and men look upon it as an institution for religious worship, and religious instruction; thus robbing it of its life and universality, making it an affair of clergy, not of people, of preaching and ceremonies, not of living, of Sundays and synagogues, instead of one of all days, and all places, houses, streets, town and country.

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.—You are impressed by the cost of this edifice as well as by its size. Two hundred and fifty years ago, before the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth Rock, its estimate cost was $47,000,000. Since then there has been unlimited expense. It is estimated that the cost at the present time and in the present values, would amount to $225,000,000! enough to build two railroads to the Pacific. By the census of 1860 the total valuation of real and personal property in the State of New Hampshire was $156,000,000, and in Vermont, $135,000,000. Here, then, we have one church which it is said has cost as much as the valuation of all the property in New Hampshire and half of that in Vermont! Think of all the lands, houses, factories, shops, goods, cattle, sheep, horses, money, bonds and mortgages—everything that can be reckoned by dollars and cents, owned by nearly half a million people—turned into this one building, and you will understand what sort of a place the Pope has for the observance of Christmas ceremonies.

The annual cost of keeping the building in repair, saying nothing of new works of art, is about $50,000 in the currency issued by the Pope. It requires a large regiment—not of soldiers but of servants—to scrape up the melted wax, dust the Apostles' faces, and keep the spiders from spinning webs over the faces of the effigies of the old Popes. So much for the building—not for religious service; that is still another item of expense.

The New Jerusalem is thus described, from Revelations chapter xxi, 9. "And he measured the city with a reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length, height and breadth of it are equal." Twelve thousand furlongs, 7,920,000 feet, which being cubed, is 948,088,000,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet, the half of which we will reserve for the throne of God and the Court of heaven, half of the balance for the streets, and the remainder divided by 496, the cubic feet in the rooms 16 feet square and 16 feet high, will be 5,734,750,000,000 rooms. We will now suppose the world always did and always will contain 900,000,000 of inhabitants, and the generation will last 33 1-3 years, 2,700,000,000 every century, and that the world will stand 100,000 years—2,700,000,000,000 persons. Then suppose there were 11,230 such worlds, equal to this number of inhabitants and duration of years, then there would be a room 16 feet long, 16 feet wide, and 16 feet high for each person, and yet there would be room.

The rabbis of Europe will meet in council, at Paris, during the Universal Exposition It is proposed to abolish the laws which prohibit the use of certain kinds of food; to take action against the polygamy which prevails among the Jews in Algiers, where there are said to be more than 40,000 Jewish families; and to recognize the right of females in that country to an equal inheritance with the males.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy of their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written, that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Poetry.

BEAR THY CROSS CHEERFULLY.

Bear thy cross cheerfully,
Brother, the night
Passeth, though tearfully
Dim is thy sight.
Carry it duteously,
Looking afar,
Where gleameth beauteously
The morning star.

Bear it with white hands up,
Sister in pain,
Drinking life's bitterest cup,
Know 'tis in vain.
Hopefully, prayerfully,
Light then 'twill be,
For the Lord carefully
Thus leadeth thee.

Through surging sorrow's tides,
Vales dark and lone,
Up rugged mountain sides,
Making no moan,
Though shrinking wearily
Beneath the load,
Take it up cheerily,
'Tis from thy God.

Bear thy cross trustingly,
Whate'er it be,
Then will it tenderly
Rest upon thee.
Think not to lay it down
Till life is done;
The cross shall wear the crown
When the kingdom is won.

Christian Guardian.

Children's Department.

THE DAISY'S FIRST WINTER.

Somewhere in a garden of this earth which the dear Lord has planted with many flowers of grandness, grew a fresh, bright little daisy.

The first this little daisy knew, she found herself growing in green pastures and beside the still waters where the Heavenly Shepherd was leading his sheep. And very beautiful did life look to her as her bright little eyes, with their crimson lashes, opened and looked down into the deep crystal waters of the brook below, where the sunshine made every hour more sparkles, more rings of light, and more brilliant glances and changes of color than all the jewelers in the world could imitate. She knew intimately all the yellow-birds, and meadow-larks, and bobolinks, and black-birds, that sang, piped, whistled, or chattered among the bushes and trees in the pasture, and she was a prime favorite with them all. The fish that darted to and fro in the waters seemed like so many living gems, and their silent motions, as they glided hither and thither, were full of beauty, and told as plainly of happiness as if they could speak. Multitudes of beautiful flowers grew up in the water, or on the moist edges of the brook.

They did not all blossom at once, but had their graceful changes; but there was always a pleasant flutter of expectation among them,—either a sending forth of leaves, or a making of buds, or a bursting out into blossoms; and when the blossoms passed away, there was a thoughtful, careful maturing of seeds, all packed away so snugly in their little coffers and caskets of seed-pods, which were of every quaint and dainty shape that ever could be fancied for a lady's jewel box. Overhead there grew a wide-spreading apple tree, which in the month of June became a gigantic bouquet, holding up to the sun a million silvery opening flowers, and a million pink tipped buds; and the little winds would come to play in its branches, and take the pink shells of the blossoms for their tiny air boats, in which they would go floating round among the flowers, or sail on voyages of discovery down the stream; and when the time of its blossom was gone, the bountiful tree from year to year had matured fruits of golden ripeness which cheered the hearts of men.

Little Daisy's life was only one varied delight from day to day. She had a hundred playmates among the light-winged winds, that came to her every hour to tell her what was going on all over the green pasture, and to bring her sweet perfumed messages from violets and anemones of even the more distant regions.

There was not a ring of sunlight that danced in the golden network at the bottom of the brook that did not bring a thrill of gladness to her heart; not a tiny fish glided in his crystal paths, or played and frolicked under the water-lily shadows, that was not a well-known friend of hers, and whose pleasures she did not share. At night she held conferences with the dew-drops that stepped about among the flowers in their bright pearl slippers, and washed their leaves and faces before they went to rest. Nice little nurses and dressing-maids, these dews! and they kept tender guard all night over the flowers, watching and blinking wakefully to see that all was safe; but when the sun arose, each of them spread a pair of little rainbow wings and was gone.

To be sure, there were some reverses in her lot. Sometimes a great surly, ill looking cloud would appear in the sky, like a cross schoolmaster, and sweep up all the sunbeams, and call in a gruff voice to the little winds, her playfellows, to come away from their nonsense; and then he would send a great strong wind down on them, all with a frightful noise and roar, and sweep all the little flowers flat to the earth; and there would be a great rush and pattering of rain drops, and bellowing of thunders, and sharp-forked lightnings would quiver through the air as if the green pastures certainly were to be torn to pieces; but in about half an hour it would be all over—the sunbeams would all dance out from their biding places, just as good as if nothing had happened, and the little winds would come laughing back, and each little flower would lift itself up, and the winds would help them to shake off the wet and plume themselves as jauntily as if nothing had gone amiss. Daisy had the greatest pride and joy in her own pink blossoms, of which there seemed to be an inexhaustible store; for as fast as one dropped its leaves, another was ready to open its eyes, and there were buds of every size, waiting still to come on, even down to little green cushions of buds that lay hidden away in the middle of the leaves down close to the root. "How favored I am!" said Daisy; "I never stop blossoming. The anemones and the liverwort and the blood-root have their time, but then they stop and have only leaves; while I go on blooming perpetually; how nice it is to be made as I am."

"But you must remember," said a great rough Burdock to her—"you must remember that your winter must come at last, when all this fine blossoming will have to be done with."

"What do you mean?" said Daisy, in a tone of pride, eyeing her rough neighbor with a glance of disgust. "You are a rough, ugly old thing, and that's why you are cross. Pretty people like me can afford to be good natured."

"Ah, well," said Dame Burdock, "you'll see. It's a pretty thing if a young chit just out from seed this year should be impertiment to me, who have seen twenty Winters—yes, and been through them well, too!"

"Tell, me, Bobolink," said Daisy, "is there any truth in what this horrid Burdock has been saying! What does she mean by Winter?"

"I don't know, not I," said Bobolink, as he turned a dozen somersets in the air, and then perched himself airily on a thistle-head, singing—

"I don't know, and I don't care;
It's mighty pleasant to fly up there,
And it's mighty pleasant to light down here,
And all I know is chip, chip, cheer."

"Say, Humming-bird, do you know anything about Winter?"

"Winter? I never saw one," said "Humming-bird; "we have wings, and follow Summer round the world, and where she is, there go we."

"Meadow-Lark, Meadow Lark, have you ever heard of Winter?" said Daisy.

Meadow-Lark was sure he never remembered one. "What is Winter?" he said, looking confused.

"Butterfly, Butterfly," said Daisy, "come, tell me will there be Winter, and what is Winter?"

But the Butterfly laughed, and danced up and down, and said, "What is Daisy talking about? I never heard of Winter. Winter? ha! ha! What is it?"

"Then it's only one of Burdock's spiteful sayings," said Daisy. "Just because she isn't pretty, she wants to spoil my pleasure, too. Say, dear, lovely tree that shades me so sweetly, is there such a thing as Winter?"

And the tree said, with a sigh through its leaves, "Yes, daughter, there will be Winter; but fear not, for the Good Shepherd makes both Summer and Winter, and each is good in its time. Enjoy thy Summer and fear not."

The months rolled by. The violets had long ago stopped blooming, their leaves were turning yellow, but they had beautiful seed-caskets, full of rows of little pearls, which next year should come up in blue violets. The dog-toothed violet and eye-bright had gone under the ground, so that no more was seen of them, and Daisy wondered whither they could be gone. But she had new acquaintances far more brilliant, and she forgot the others. The brook-side seemed all on fire with golden rod, and the bright yellow was relieved by the rich purple tints of the asters, while the blue-fringed gentian held up its cups, that seemed as if they might have been cut out of the sky,—and still Daisy had abundance of leaves and blossoms and felt strong and well at the root. Then the apple tree cast down to the ground its fragrant burden of golden apples, and men came and carried them away.

By and by there came keen, cutting winds, and driving storms of sleet and hail; and then at night it would be so cold, so cold! and one after another the leaves and flowers fell still and frozen, and grew black, and turned to decay. The leaves loosened and fell from the apple tree and sailed away by thousands down the brook; the butterflies lay dead with the flowers, but all the birds had gone singing away to the sunny South, following the Summer into other lands.

"Tell me, dear tree," said Daisy, "is this Winter that is coming?"

"It is Winter, darling," said the tree; "but fear not. The Good Shepherd makes Winter as well as Summer."

"I still hold my blossoms," said Daisy—for Daisy was a hardy little thing.

But the frosts came harder and harder every night, and first they froze her blossoms, and then they froze her leaves, and finally all were gone—there was nothing left but the poor little root, with the folded leaves of the future held in its bosom.

"Ah, dear tree!" said Daisy, "is not this dreadful?"

"Be patient, darling," said the tree. "I have seen many, many Winters; but the Good Shepherd loses never a seed, never a root, never a flower: they will all come again."

By and by came colder days and colder, and the brook froze to its little heart and stopped; and then there came bitter, driving storms, and the snow lay wreathed over Daisy's head; but still from the bare branches of the apple tree came a voice of cheer. "Courage, darling, and patience! Not a flower shall be lost: Winter is only for a season."

"It is so dreary!" murmured Daisy, deep in her bosom.

"It will be short; the Spring will come again," said the tree.

And at last the Spring did come; and the snow melted and ran away down the book, and the sun shone out warm, and fresh green leaves jumped and sprang out of every dry twig of the apple tree. And one bright, rejoicing day, little Daisy opened her eyes, and lo! there were all her friends once more; there were the eye-brights and the violets and the anemones and the liverwort; only ever so many more of them than there were last year, because each little pearl of a seed had been nursed and moistened by the snows of Winter, and had come up as a little plant to have its own flowers. The birds all came back, and began building their nests, and everything was brighter and fairer than before; and Daisy felt strong at heart, because she had been through a winter, and learned not to fear it. She looked up into the apple-tree. "Will there be more Winters, dear tree!" she said.

"Darling, there will; but fear not. Enjoy the present hour, and leave future Winters to Him who makes them. Thou hast come through these sad hours, because the Shepherd remembered thee. He loseth never a flower out of His pasture but calleth them all by name: and the snow will never drive so cold, or the wind beat so hard, as to hurt one of His flowers. And look! of all the flowers of last year, what one is melted away in the snow, or forgotten in the number of green things? Every blade of grass is counted, and puts up its little head in the right time; so never fear, Daisy, for thou shalt blossom stronger and brighter for the Winter."

"But why must there be Winter?" said Daisy.

"I never ask why," said the tree. "My business is to blossom and bear apples. Summer comes, and I am joyful; Winter comes, and I am patient. But, darling, there is another garden where thou and I shall be transplanted one day, where there shall be Winter no more. There is coming a new earth; and not one flower or leaf of these green pastures shall be wanting there, but come as surely as last year's flowers came back this Spring!"—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

THE POVERTY OF UNBELIEF.

BY LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

The following was suggested by conversation with rejecters of God's truth in different forms; some believing in immortality in sin and suffering, and others denying the inspiration of the Bible, trusting in revelations from the spirit world. The one is but the offspring of the other. The first insist that there is no punishment in death, and if the wicked dead are not raised, old Noah was grossly deceived when, moved with fear, he prepared an ark for the saving of himself and house; for the Lord was infinitely kinder to those who perished than he was to him who was spared to toil and suffer, and begin the world anew; also with the Sodomites did he deal more mercifully in destroying them instantly when he hastened Lot from all his possessions, if the wicked live not again. Thus, through blindness, making life no blessing and death no punishment. While listening to such and numerous other inconsistencies, how has the book of truth loomed up before me, in mystic grandeur and durability, as never before. I felt to exclaim, "It is pure granite." The unbeliever hurls his missiles at it, yet it moves not: the carping sycophant tries to weaken its foundation, yet cannot dig deep enough to find the source on which it rests: all unbelief combines to rail and sneer, yet there it stands, pure in whiteness, defying their impotence and rage; or, as we may imagine, the angels viewed the Roman legions in their glittering armors, confident in their strength and the powers that placed them there to keep the lifeless form committed to their trust; yet how quickly was this boasted power gone when like dead men they were helpless before the swift messengers of light who rolled away the stone. So the blinded sinner who wrests the scriptures, or pronounces them a cunningly-devised fable, will find when the rain descends and the winds blow and beat against his resting place, it will fall, and great will be its fall; while the Rock of truth on which we may build will stand out in grander proportions as the waves sweep around its base; and those resting on it can rejoice amid the roar of elements, and defy all the combined powers of earth and darkness to move them or pull out so much as one prop that supports the glorious superstructure. Considering this, how poor looks the man, whatever be his condition in life, who builds not on the Rock—and that Rock is Christ. Does the christian consider sufficiently the poverty of such a state, so as to be moved with pity, as we are, when we see rags and starvation, which will hardly compare with unbelief; living in a world created by infinite wisdom, and supplied by the munificence of a kind Father without a grateful recognition of its source, or even an acknowledgment of its Author? a world where the tolling bell announces to us daily that we are mortal; and when eternal life is offered without price, and its acceptance, limited to the uncertain term of present existence, and no effort made to comply with the terms, and even ignoring the terms and denying the whole wonderous plan! O is there poverty like this? There is naught in the universe so deserves the name. Should we not regard them with something of the compassion that Jesus did? He loved, pitied wept, and died. May all who love Jesus improve every instrumentality, especially the powerful engine of prevailing prayer. Jesus is able to save unto the utmost. Then with what confidence we may wrestle. We do not approach an unjust judge, who is only moved by selfishness to avoid importunity. Jesus said, hear what the unjust judge saith; and shall not God answer, or avenge his elect, which cry day and night unto him? Also those who are instrumental in converting a sinner will save a soul from death. What an object to labor for; one which caused Jesus to leave the realms of glory, and inspires the heavenly hosts with rejoicing, and will swell the anthems of praise throughout the ceaseless ages.

Will the Lord strengthen and impart the needed wisdom, that we may fulfil life's great mission and improve to the fullest extent the grace given whereby we are made heirs of eternal life. Your sister in Christ.

"THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION."

We think when a person writes for a paper, occupying valuable space, he should endeavor to make original suggestions, advance new truths that are interesting and valuable. A writer in the HERALD, on the above subject, writes as if he supposed the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE were mere children, only in their teens, and does not seem to be aware that his views on Math. xxiv. are precisely identical with those of Universalists, Swedenborgians, and Spiritualists, and have been refuted by Adventists a thousand times.

The Romanists will be highly pleased with such interpretation of scripture. They have been, ever since the days of the great Luther and the good Zwingle, vainly endeavoring to cast off the odium that the Saviour cast upon their abominable hierarchy by describing their wicked persecutions in advance. All intelligent christian expositors, of any note, with the exception of Albert Barnes, have told us that the papacy was the persecuting power referred to.

Three separate and distinct questions were put to the Saviour by the apostles—"When shall these things be? what shall be the sign of thy coming? and the end of the world?" He, without the least hesitation, frankly answered them. This subject has been too often discussed, and is too well understood by Adventists, to require elucidation.

If the writer in the HERALD, above referred to, is right, then the Catholics are correct, and their church is not, and has not been, an abomination; and it has never committed desolations. It is passing strange that any Adventist should defend the Papal, Swedenborgian, and Spiritualist views, and denounce the great and mighty truth, that the generation on the earth, that should witness the "signs," described by the Saviour, should not pass away, until all should be fulfilled. According to the writer in the HERALD, Titus had no idea when he should attack Jerusalem; for it is said, "No man knoweth the day or the hour." But we are told "whoso readeth let him understand." T.

Scotch Plains, N. J.

THE NAMES OF OUR MONTHS.

BR. STORRS:—The following is taken from F. Shalluck's Tables, printed in 1817. Thinking it would be interesting to the readers of the HERALD, I send it to you for insertion in the same, if you think best.

JANUARY: so called from Janus, an ancient king of Italy, deified after his death. It is the first month of the year. The Saxons called it Wolf month, because of the mischievous wolves.

FEBRUARY: so called from Febrius, Latin; that is, the Febuarius expiatory sacrifices, offered by the Romans for the purifying of the people in that month. It is the second month in the year. The Saxons called it Colewort, or Wort, spring, because then worts began to sprout. Feb. 19, 1401, Henry IV., of England permitted the clergy to burn Wm. Sautrie, a clergyman, for heresy. This was the first execution in England on account of religion.

MARCH: so called of Mars, the heathen god. The third month in the year. The Saxons called it Lengning month, because the days then began to exceed in length the nights. March 6, 1716, the northern was dicovered.

APRIL: (opening, in Latin) because in this month things are, as it were, opened and budded.

MAY: (majus, from majorus, Latin) so called by Romulus, in respect of his senators. The Saxons called it Three Milkins, because they then milked their cows three times a day.

JUNE: (Junius, a juniaribus) ,i. e., the younger sort of people. The Saxons called it Medow month, because their cattle were then turned out to feed in the meadows. It is the sixth month in the year.

JULY: (Juilet, French; Julius, Latin) so named in honor of Julius Cæsar. The Saxons called it Hay month, because they then generally cut their hay. It is the seventh month in the year.

AUGUST: the eighth month of the year, so called from Augustus Cæsar. The Saxons called it Barn month, because they then filled their barns.

SEPTEMBER: (French of Septem. Latin seven,) a month so called (old style) because it is the seventh month from March. The ninth month of the year. The Saxons called it Grist month, because they then carried their new corn to mill.

OCTOBER: (Octobres: Latin of octo, eight) so called as being the eighth month from March. It is the tenth month of the year. The Saxons called it Wine month, because grapes were then usually pressed to make wine.

NOVEMBER: (of novem: Latin) so called, being the ninth month from March. The Saxons called it Windy month, because of the high winds usually coming in that month. It is the eleventh month of the year.

DECEMBER: (of Decem, Latin, ten) because it is the tenth month from March, which was anciently the beginning of the year. The Saxons called it Winter month, because of the cold, then growing intense, and afterward Holy month, on account of the nativity of Christ. It is the twelfth month of the year.

DANIEL OSBORN.

Findley's Lake, N. Y.

AN EXTRACT FROM ALBERT BARNES.

This estimable divine concludes his commentary on the chapter xv. of 1 Corinthians, in the following strain:—

Thus closes this chapter of inimitable beauty, and of unequal power of argumentation. Such is the prospect which is before the christian. He shall indeed die like other men. But his death is asleep—a calm, gentle, undisturbed sleep, in the expectation of being again awaked to a brighter day. v. 6. He has the assurance that his Saviour rose, and that his people shall therefore also rise. v. 19–20. He encounters peril, and privation, and persecution; he may be ridiculed and despised; he may be subjected to danger or doomed to fight with wild beasts; or to contend with men who resemble wild beasts; he may be doomed to the pains and terrors of a martyrdom at the stake, but he has the assurance that all these are of short continuance, and that before him there is a world of eternal glory. v. 29–32. He may be poor, unhonored and apparently without an earthly friend or protector, but his Saviour and redeemer reigns. v. 25. He may be opposed by wicked men, and his name slandered, and body tortured, and his peace marred, but his enemies shall all be subdued. v. 26, 27. He will himself die, and sleep in his grave, but he shall live again, v. 22, 23. He has painful proof that his body is corruptible, but it will be incorruptible; that it is now vile, but it will be glorious; that it is weak, frail, feeble, but it will yet be strong, and no more subject to disease or decay. v. 42, 43 And he will be brought under the power of death, but death shall be robbed of its honors, and despoiled of its triumph. Its sting from the saint is taken away, and it is changed to a blessing. It is now not the dreaded monster, the king of terrors; it is a friend that comes to remove him from a world of toil to a world of rest; from a life of sin to a life of glory. The grave is not to him the gloomy abode, the permanent resting-place of his body; it is a place of rest for a little time; grateful like the bed of down to a wearied frame, where he may lie down and repose after the fatigues of the day, and gently wait for the morning. He has nothing to fear in death; nothing to fear in the dying pang, the gloom, the chill, the sweat, the paleness, the fixedness of death: nothing to fear in the chilliness, the darkness, the silence, the corruption of the grave. All this is in the way to immortality, and is closely and indissolubly connected with immortality. v. 55–57. And in view of all this, we should be patient, faithful, laborious, self denying; we should engage with zeal in the work of the Lord; we should calmly wait till our change come. v. 58. No other system of religion has any such hopes as this; no other system does anything to dispel the gloom, or drive away the horrors of the grave. How foolish is the man who rejects the gospel—the only system which brings life and immortality to light! How foolish to reject the doctrine of the resurrection, and to lie down in the grave without peace, without hope, without any belief that there will be a world of glory; living without God, and dying like the brute. And yet infidelity seeks and claims its chief triumphs in the attempt to convince poor dying man that he has no solid ground of hope; that the universe is "without a Father and without a God;" that the grave terminates the career of man forever; and that in the grave he sinks away to eternal annihilation! Strange that man should seek such degradation! Strange that all men, conscious that they must die, do not at once greet christianity as their best friend, and hail the doctrine of the future state, and of the resurrection, as that which is adapted to meet the deeply felt evils of this world; to fill the desponding mind with peace; and to sustain the soul in the temptations and trials of life, and in the gloom and agony of death!

REMARK.—The sentiments pervading by far the greater portion of the foregoing extract will find a cordial response in every pious heart. The general tenor of the observations is in delightful accord with the doctrine with the view of Life only in Christ. We give the extract mainly for the good that is in it; but partly, also, to show how a most excellent strain of remark may be despoiled of its legitimate influence by the intrusion of the fabulous conceit, that it is the mission of DEATH—declared by inspiration to be a doomed "enemy"—"to remove" the Christian "from a world of toil to a world of rest; from a life of sin to a life of glory." The reader must make his own further reflections: our page is full.

R. W.

RETRIBUTION.—The Rev. John Pierpont was a steadfast upholder of the temperance cause, and for his faithfulness in waging and advocating its principles he was driven from his pulpit in Boston by the exertions of a wealthy firm, members of his church, who were engaged in the liquor traffic. He was afterwards appointed a clerk in the Treasury Department in Washington. While there it fell to his lot to examine certain invoices of liquor imported into Boston, and feeling satisfied that the price set down as the foreign cost was too low, he called attention to the matter. Investigations were instituted which led to the discovery of extensive frauds on the part of the importers, who proved to be the very parties who had persecuted him and driven him to the very place where their iniquities were revealed to him. They have but recently suffered a terrible penalty for their crime, which bankrupted them in purse and character.

VARIETIES.

SELECTED BY W. M.

The true and grand idea of the Church, that is, a society for the purpose of making men like Christ, earth like heaven, the kingdom of this world the kingdom of Christ, is all lost, and men look upon it as an institution for religious worship, and religious instruction; thus robbing it of its life and universality, making it an affair of clergy, not of people, of preaching and ceremonies, not of living, of Sundays and synagogues, instead of one of all days, and all places, houses, streets, town and country.

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.—You are impressed by the cost of this edifice as well as by its size. Two hundred and fifty years ago, before the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth Rock, its estimate cost was $47,000,000. Since then there has been unlimited expense. It is estimated that the cost at the present time and, in the present values, would amount to $225,000,000! enough to build two railroads to the Pacific. By the census of 1860 the total valuation of real and personal property in the State of New Hampshire was $156,000,000, and in Vermont, $135,000,000. Here, then, we have one church which it is said has cost as much as the valuation of all the property in New Hampshire and half of that in Vermont! Think of all the lands, houses, factories, shops, goods, cattle, sheep, horses, money, bonds and mortgages—everything that can be reckoned by dollars and cents, owned by nearly half a million people—turned into this one building, and you will understand what sort of a place the Pope has for the observance of Christmas ceremonies.

The annual cost of keeping the building in repair, saying nothing of new works of art, is about $50,000 in the currency issued by the Pope. It requires a large regiment—not of soldiers but of servants—to scrape up the melted wax, dust the Apostles' faces, and keep the spiders from spinning webs over the faces of the effigies of the old Popes. So much for the building—not for religious service; that is still another item of expense.

The New Jerusalem is thus described, from Revelations chapter xxi, 9. "And he measured the city with a reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length, height and breadth of it are equal." Twelve thousand furlongs, 7,920,000 feet, which being cubed, is 948,088,000,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet, the half of which we will reserve for the throne of God and the Court of heaven, half of the balance for the streets, and the remainder divided by 496, the cubic feet in the rooms 16 feet square and 16 feet high, will be 5,734,750,000,000 rooms. We will now suppose the world always did and always will contain 900,000,000 of inhabitants, and the generation will last 33 1-3 years, 2,700,000,000 every century, and that the world will stand 100,000 years—2,700,000,000,000 persons. Then suppose there were 11,230 such worlds, equal to this number of inhabitants and duration of years, then there would be a room 16 feet long, 16 feet wide, and 16 feet high for each person, and yet there would be room.

The rabbis of Europe will meet in council, at Paris, during the Universal Exposition It is proposed to abolish the laws which prohibit the use of certain kinds of food; to take action against the polygamy which prevails among the Jews in Algiers, where there are said to be more than 40,000 Jewish families; and to recognize the right of females in that country to an equal inheritance with the males.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subcribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy of their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage as his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Poetry.

BEAR THY CROSS CHEERFULLY.

Bear thy cross cheerfully,
Brother, the night
Passeth, though tearfully
Dim is thy sight.
Carry it duteously,
Looking afar,
Where gleameth beauteously
The morning star.

Bear it with white hands up,
Sister in pain,
Drinking life's bitterest cup,
Know 'tis in vain.
Hopefully, prayerfully,
Light then 'twill be,
For the Lord carefully
Thus leadeth thee.

Through surging sorrow's tides,
Vales dark and lone,
Up rugged mountain sides,
Making no moan,
Though shrinking wearily
Beneath the load,
Take it up cheerily,
'Tis from thy God.

Bear thy cross trustingly,
Whate'er it be,
Then will it tenderly
Rest upon thee.
Think not to lay it down
Till life is done;
The cross shall wear the crown
When the kingdom is won.

Christian Guardian.

Children's Department.

THE DAISY'S FIRST WINTER.

Somewhere in a garden of this earth which the dear Lord has planted with many flowers of grandness, grew a fresh, bright little daisy.

The first this little daisy knew, she found herself growing in green pastures and beside the still waters where the Heavenly Shepherd was leading his sheep. And very beautiful did life look to her as her bright little eyes, with their crimson lashes, opened and looked down into the deep crystal waters of the brook below, where the sunshine made every hour more sparkles, more rings of light, and more brilliant glances and changes of color than all the jewelers in the world could imitate. She knew intimately all the yellow-birds, and meadow-larks, and bobolinks, and black-birds, that sang, piped, whistled, or chattered among the bushes and trees in the pasture, and she was a prime favorite with them all. The fish that darted to and fro in the waters seemed like so many living gems, and their silent motions, as they glided hither and thither, were full of beauty, and told as plainly of happiness as if they could speak. Multitudes of beautiful flowers grew up in the water, or on the moist edges of the brook.

They did not all blossom at once, but had their graceful changes; but there was always a pleasant flutter of expectation among them,—either a sending forth of leaves, or a making of buds, or a bursting out into blossoms; and when the blossoms passed away, there was a thoughtful, careful maturing of seeds, all packed away so snugly in their little coffers and caskets of seed-pods, which were of every quaint and dainty shape that ever could be fancied for a lady's jewel box. Overhead there grew a wide-spreading apple tree, which in the month of June became a gigantic bouquet, holding up to the sun a million silvery opening flowers, and a million pink tipped buds; and the little winds would come to play in its branches, and take the pink shells of the blossoms for their tiny air boats, in which they would go floating round among the flowers, or sail on voyages of discovery down the stream; and when the time of its blossom was gone, the bountiful tree from year to year had matured fruits of golden ripeness which cheered the hearts of men.

Little Daisy's life was only one varied delight from day to day. She had a hundred playmates among the light-winged winds, that came to her every hour to tell her what was going on all over the green pasture, and to bring her sweet perfumed messages from violets and anemones of even the more distant regions.

There was not a ring of sunlight that danced in the golden network at the bottom of the brook that did not bring a thrill of gladness to her heart; not a tiny fish glided in his crystal paths, or played and frolicked under the water-lily shadows, that was not a well-known friend of hers, and whose pleasures she did not share. At night she held conferences with the dew-drops that stepped about among the flowers in their bright pearl slippers, and washed their leaves and faces before they went to rest. Nice little nurses and dressing-maids, these dews! and they kept tender guard all night over the flowers, watching and blinking wakefully to see that all was safe; but when the sun arose, each of them spread a pair of little rainbow wings and was gone.

To be sure, there were some reverses in her lot. Sometimes a great surly, ill looking cloud would appear in the sky, like a cross schoolmaster, and sweep up all the sunbeams, and call in a gruff voice to the little winds, her playfellows, to come away from their nonsense; and then he would send a great strong wind down on them, all with a frightful noise and roar, and sweep all the little flowers flat to the earth; and there would be a great rush and pattering of rain drops, and bellowing of thunders, and sharp-forked lightnings would quiver through the air as if the green pastures certainly were to be torn to pieces; but in about half an hour it would be all over—the sunbeams would all dance out from their hiding places, just as good as if nothing had happened, and the little winds would come laughing back, and each little flower would lift itself up, and the winds would help them to shake off the wet and plume themselves as jauntily as if nothing had gone amiss. Daisy had the greatest pride and joy in her own pink blossoms, of which there seemed to be an inexhaustible store; for as fast as one dropped its leaves, another was ready to open its eyes, and there were buds of every size, waiting still to come on, even down to little green cushions of buds that lay hidden away in the middle of the leaves down close to the root. "How favored I am!" said Daisy; "I never stop blossoming. The anemones and the liverwort and the blood-root have their time, but then they stop and have only leaves; while I go on blooming perpetually; how nice it is to be made as I am."

"But you must remember," said a great rough Burdock to her—"you must remember that your winter must come at last, when all this fine blossoming will have to be done with."

"What do you mean?" said Daisy, in a tone of pride, eyeing her rough neighbor with a glance of disgust. "You are a rough, ugly old thing, and that's why you are cross. Pretty people like me can afford to be good natured."

"Ah, well," said Dame Burdock, "you'll see. It's a pretty thing if a young chit just out from seed this year should be impertiment to me, who have seen twenty Winters—yes, and been through them well, too!"

"Tell, me, Bobolink," said Daisy, "is there any truth in what this horrid Burdock has been saying! What does she mean by Winter?"

"I don't know, not I," said Bobolink, as he turned a dozen somersets in the air, and then perched himself airily on a thistle-head, singing—

"I don't know, and I don't care;
It's mighty pleasant to fly up there,
And it's mighty pleasant to light down here,
And all I know is chip, chip, cheer."

"Say, Humming-bird, do you know anything about Winter?"

"Winter? I never saw one," said Humming-bird; "we have wings, and follow Summer round the world, and where she is, there go we."

"Meadow-Lark, Meadow Lark, have you ever heard of Winter?" said Daisy.

Meadow-Lark was sure he never remembered one. "What is Winter?" he said, looking confused.

"Butterfly, Butterfly," said Daisy, "come, tell me will there be Winter, and what is Winter?"

But the Butterfly laughed, and danced up and down, and said, "What is Daisy talking about? I never heard of Winter. Winter? ha! ha! What is it?"

"Then it's only one of Burdock's spiteful sayings," said Daisy. "Just because she isn't pretty, she wants to spoil my pleasure, too. Say, dear, lovely tree that shades me so sweetly, is there such a thing as Winter?"

And the tree said, with a sigh through its leaves, "Yes, daughter, there will be Winter; but fear not, for the Good Shepherd makes both Summer and Winter, and each is good in its time. Enjoy thy Summer and fear not."

The months rolled by. The violets had long ago stopped blooming, their leaves were turning yellow, but they had beautiful seed-caskets, full of rows of little pearls, which next year should come up in blue violets. The dog-toothed violet and eye-bright had gone under the ground, so that no more was seen of them, and Daisy wondered whither they could be gone. But she had new acquaintances far more brilliant, and she forgot the others. The brook-side seemed all on fire with golden rod, and the bright yellow was relieved by the rich purple tints of the asters, while the blue-fringed gentian held up its cups, that seemed as if they might have been cut out of the sky,—and still Daisy had abundance of leaves and blossoms and felt strong and well at the root. Then the apple tree cast down to the ground its fragrant burden of golden apples, and men came and carried them away.

By and by there came keen, cutting winds, and driving storms of sleet and hail; and then at night it would be so cold, so cold! and one after another the leaves and flowers fell still and frozen, and grew black, and turned to decay. The leaves loosened and fell from the apple tree and sailed away by thousands down the brook; the butterflies lay dead with the flowers, but all the birds had gone singing away to the sunny South, following the Summer into other lands.

"Tell me, dear tree," said Daisy, "is this Winter that is coming?"

"It is Winter, darling," said the tree; "but fear not. The Good Shepherd makes Winter as well as Summer."

"I still hold my blossoms," said Daisy—for Daisy was a hardy little thing.

But the frosts came harder and harder every night, and first they froze her blossoms, and then they froze her leaves, and finally all were gone—there was nothing left but the poor little root, with the folded leaves of the future held in its bosom.

"Ah, dear tree!" said Daisy, "is not this dreadful?"

"Be patient, darling," said the tree. "I have seen many, many Winters; but the Good Shepherd loses never a seed, never a root, never a flower: they will all come again."

By and by came colder days and colder, and the brook froze to its little heart and stopped; and then there came bitter, driving storms, and the snow lay wreathed over Daisy's head; but still from the bare branches of the apple tree came a voice of cheer. "Courage, darling, and patience! Not a flower shall be lost: Winter is only for a season."

"It is so dreary!" murmured Daisy, deep in her bosom.

"It will be short; the Spring will come again," said the tree.

And at last the Spring did come; and the snow melted and ran away down the brook, and the sun shone out warm, and fresh green leaves jumped and sprang out of every dry twig of the apple tree. And one bright, rejoicing day, little Daisy opened her eyes, and lo! there were all her friends once more; there were the eye-brights and the violets and the anemones and the liverwort; only ever so many more of them than there were last year, because each little pearl of a seed had been nursed and moistened by the snows of Winter, and had come up as a little plant to have its own flowers. The birds all came back, and began building their nests, and everything was brighter and fairer than before; and Daisy felt strong at heart, because she had been through a winter, and learned not to fear it. She looked up into the apple-tree. "Will there be more Winters, dear tree!" she said.

"Darling, there will; but fear not. Enjoy the present hour, and leave future Winters to Him who makes them. Thou hast come through these sad hours, because the Shepherd remembered thee. He loseth never a flower out of His pasture but calleth them all by name: and the snow will never drive so cold, or the wind beat so hard, as to hurt one of His flowers. And look! of all the flowers of last year, what one is melted away in the snow, or forgotten in the number of green things? Every blade of grass is counted, and puts up its little head in the right time; so never fear, Daisy, for thou shalt blossom stronger and brighter for the Winter."

"But why must there be Winter?" said Daisy.

"I never ask why," said the tree. "My business is to blossom and bear apples. Summer comes, and I am joyful; Winter comes, and I am patient. But, darling, there is another garden where thou and I shall be transplanted one day, where there shall be Winter no more. There is coming a new earth; and not one flower or leaf of these green pastures shall be wanting there, but come as surely as last year's flowers came back this Spring!"—Harriet Beecher Stowe.

THE POVERTY OF UNBELIEF.

BY LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

The following was suggested by conversation with rejecters of God's truth in different forms; some believing in immortality in sin and suffering, and others denying the inspiration of the Bible, trusting in revelations from the spirit world. The one is but the offspring of the other. The first insist that there is no punishment in death, and if the wicked dead are not raised, old Noah was grossly deceived when, moved with fear, he prepared an ark for the saving of himself and house; for the Lord was infinitely kinder to those who perished than he was to him who was spared to toil and suffer, and begin the world anew; also with the Sodomites did he deal more mercifully in destroying them instantly when he hastened Lot from all his possessions, if the wicked live not again. Thus, through blindness, making life no blessing and death no punishment. While listening to such and numerous other inconsistencies, how has the book of truth loomed up before me, in mystic grandeur and durability, as never before. I felt to exclaim, "It is pure granite." The unbeliever hurls his missiles at it, yet it moves not: the carping sycophant tries to weaken its foundation, yet cannot dig deep enough to find the source on which it rests: all unbelief combines to rail and sneer, yet there it stands, pure in whiteness, defying their impotence and rage; or, as we may imagine, the angels viewed the Roman legions in their glittering armors, confident in their strength and the powers that placed them there to keep the lifeless form committed to their trust; yet how quickly was this boasted power gone when like dead men they were helpless before the swift messengers of light who rolled away the stone. So the blinded sinner who wrests the scriptures, or pronounces them a cunningly-devised fable, will find when the rain descends and the winds blow and beat against his resting place, it will fall, and great will be its fall; while the Rock of truth on which we may build will stand out in grander proportions as the waves sweep around its base; and those resting on it can rejoice amid the roar of elements, and defy all the combined powers of earth and darkness to move them or pull out so much as one prop that supports the glorious superstructure. Considering this, how poor looks the man, whatever be his condition in life, who builds not on the Rock—and that Rock is Christ. Does the christian consider sufficiently the poverty of such a state, so as to be moved with pity, as we are, when we see rags and starvation, which will hardly compare with unbelief; living in a world created by infinite wisdom, and supplied by the munificence of a kind Father without a grateful recognition of its source, or even an acknowledgment of its Author? a world where the tolling bell announces to us daily that we are mortal; and when eternal life is offered without price, and its acceptance, limited to the uncertain term of present existence, and no effort made to comply with the terms, and even ignoring the terms and denying the whole wonderous plan! O is there poverty like this? There is naught in the universe so deserves the name. Should we not regard them with something of the compassion that Jesus did? He loved, pitied wept, and died. May all who love Jesus improve every instrumentality, especially the powerful engine of prevailing prayer. Jesus is able to save unto the utmost. Then with what confidence we may wrestle. We do not approach an unjust judge, who is only moved by selfishness to avoid importunity. Jesus said, hear what the unjust judge saith; and shall not God answer, or avenge his elect, which cry day and night unto him? Also those who are instrumental in converting a sinner will save a soul from death. What an object to labor for; one which caused Jesus to leave the realms of glory, and inspires the heavenly hosts with rejoicing, and will swell the anthems of praise throughout the ceaseless ages.

Will the Lord strengthen and impart the needed wisdom, that we may fulfil life's great mission and improve to the fullest extent the grace given whereby we are made heirs of eternal life. Your sister in Christ.

"THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION."

We think when a person writes for a paper, occupying valuable space, he should endeavor to make original suggestions, advance new truths that are interesting and valuable. A writer in the HERALD, on the above subject, writes as if he supposed the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE were mere children, only in their teens, and does not seem to be aware that his views on Math. xxiv. are precisely identical with those of Universalists, Swedenborgians, and Spiritualists, and have been refuted by Adventists a thousand times.

The Romanists will be highly pleased with such interpretation of scripture. They have been, ever since the days of the great Luther and the good Zwingle, vainly endeavoring to cast off the odium that the Saviour cast upon their abominable hierarchy by describing their wicked persecutions in advance. All intelligent christian expositors, of any note, with the exception of Albert Barnes, have told us that the papacy was the persecuting power referred to.

Three separate and distinct questions were put to the Saviour by the apostles—"When shall these things be? what shall be the sign of thy coming? and the end of the world?" He, without the least hesitation, frankly answered them. This subject has been too often discussed, and is too well understood by Adventists, to require elucidation.

If the writer in the HERALD, above referred to, is right, then the Catholics are correct, and their church is not, and has not been, an abomination; and it has never committed desolations. It is passing strange that any Adventist should defend the Papal, Swedenborgian, and Spiritualist views, and denounce the great and mighty truth, that the generation on the earth, that should witness the "signs," described by the Saviour, should not pass away, until all should be fulfilled. According to the writer in the HERALD, Titus had no idea when he should attack Jerusalem; for it is said, "No man knoweth the day or the hour." But we are told "whoso readeth let him understand." T.

Scotch Plains, N. J.

THE NAMES OF OUR MONTHS.

BR. STORRS:—The following is taken from F. Shalluck's Tables, printed in 1817. Thinking it would be interesting to the readers of the HERALD, I send it to you for insertion in the same, if you think best.

JANUARY: so called from Janus, an ancient king of Italy, deified after his death. It is the first month of the year. The Saxons called it Wolf month, because of the mischievous wolves.

FEBRUARY: so called from Febrius, Latin; that is, the Febuarius expiatory sacrifices, offered by the Romans for the purifying of the people in that month. It is the second month in the year. The Saxons called it Colewort, or Wort, spring, because then worts began to sprout. Feb. 19, 1401, Henry IV., of England permitted the clergy to burn Wm. Sautrie, a clergyman, for heresy. This was the first execution in England on account of religion.

MARCH: so called of Mars, the heathen god. The third month in the year. The Saxons called it Lengning month, because the days then began to exceed in length the nights. March 6, 1716, the northern was dicovered.

APRIL: (opening, in Latin) because in this month things are, as it were, opened and budded.

MAY: (majus, from majorus, Latin) so called by Romulus, in respect of his senators. The Saxons called it Three Milkins, because they then milked their cows three times a day.

JUNE: (Junius, a juniaribus) ,i. e., the younger sort of people. The Saxons called it Medow month, because their cattle were then turned out to feed in the meadows. It is the sixth month in the year.

JULY: (Juilet, French; Julius, Latin) so named in honor of Julius Cæsar. The Saxons called it Hay month, because they then generally cut their hay. It is the seventh month in the year.

AUGUST: the eighth month of the year, so called from Augustus Cæsar. The Saxons called it Barn month, because they then filled their barns.

SEPTEMBER: (French of Septem. Latin seven,) a month so called (old style) because it is the seventh month from March. The ninth month of the year. The Saxons called it Grist month, because they then carried their new corn to mill.

OCTOBER: (Octobres: Latin of octo, eight) so called as being the eighth month from March. It is the tenth month of the year. The Saxons called it Wine month, because grapes were then usually pressed to make wine.

NOVEMBER: (of novem: Latin) so called, being the ninth month from March. The Saxons called it Windy month, because of the high winds usually coming in that month. It is the eleventh month of the year.

DECEMBER: (of Decem, Latin, ten) because it is the tenth month from March, which was anciently the beginning of the year. The Saxons called it Winter month, because of the cold, then growing intense, and afterward Holy month, on account of the nativity of Christ. It is the twelfth month of the year.

DANIEL OSBORN.

Findley's Lake, N. Y.

AN EXTRACT FROM ALBERT BARNES.

This estimable divine concludes his commentary on the chapter, xv. of 1 Corinthians, in the following strain:—

Thus closes this chapter of inimitable beauty, and of unequal power of argumentation. Such is the prospect which is before the christian. He shall indeed die like other men. But his death is asleep—a calm, gentle, undisturbed sleep, in the expectation of being again awaked to a brighter day. v. 6. He has the assurance that his Saviour rose, and that his people shall therefore also rise. v. 12-20. He encounters peril, and privation, and persecution; he may be ridiculed and despised; he may be subjected to danger or doomed to fight with wild beasts; or to contend with men who resemble wild beasts; he may be doomed to the pains and terrors of a martyrdom at the stake, but he has the assurance that all these are of short continuance, and that before him there is a world of eternal glory. v. 29-32. He may be poor, unhonored and apparently without an earthly friend or protector, but his Saviour and redeemer reigns. v. 25. He may be opposed by wicked men, and his name slandered, and body tortured, and his peace marred, but his enemies shall all be subdued. v. 26, 27. He will himself die, and sleep in his grave, but he shall live again, v. 22, 23. He has painful proof that his body is corruptible, but it will be incorruptible; that it is now vile, but it will be glorious; that it is weak, frail, feeble, but it will yet be strong, and no more subject to disease or decay. v. 42, 43. And he will be brought under the power of death, but death shall be robbed of its honors, and despoiled of its triumph. Its sting from the saint is taken away, and it is changed to a blessing. It is now not the dreaded monster, the king of terrors; it is a friend that comes to remove him from a world of toil to a world of rest; from a life of sin to a life of glory. The grave is not to him the gloomy abode, the permanent resting-place of his body; it is a place of rest for a little time; grateful like the bed of down to a wearied frame, where he may lie down and repose after the fatigues of the day, and gently wait for the morning. He has nothing to fear in death; nothing to fear in the dying pang, the gloom, the chill, the sweat, the paleness, the fixedness of death: nothing to fear in the chilliness, the darkness, the silence, the corruption of the grave. All this is in the way to immortality, and is closely and indissolubly connected with immortality. v. 55-57. And in view of all this, we should be patient, faithful, laborious, self denying; we should engage with zeal in the work of the Lord; we should calmly wait till our change come. v. 58. No other system of religion has any such hopes as this; no other system does anything to dispel the gloom, or drive away the horrors of the grave. How foolish is the man who rejects the gospel—the only system which brings life and immortality to light! How foolish to reject the doctrine of the resurrection, and to lie down in the grave without peace, without hope, without any belief that there will be a world of glory; living without God, and dying like the brute. And yet infidelity seeks and claims its chief triumphs in the attempt to convince poor dying man that he has no solid ground of hope; that the universe is "without a Father and without a God;" that the grave terminates the career of man forever; and that in the grave he sinks away to eternal annihilation! Strange that man should seek such degradation! Strange that all men, conscious that they must die, do not at once greet christianity as their best friend, and hail the doctrine of the future state, and of the resurrection, as that which is adapted to meet the deeply felt evils of this world; to fill the desponding mind with peace; and to sustain the soul in the temptations and trials of life, and in the gloom and agony of death!

REMARK.—The sentiments pervading by far the greater portion of the foregoing extract will find a cordial response in every pious heart. The general tenor of the observations is in delightful accord with the doctrine with the view of Life only in Christ. We give the extract mainly for the good that is in it; but partly, also, to show how a most excellent strain of remark may be despoiled of its legitimate influence by the intrusion of the fabulous conceit, that it is the mission of DEATH—declared by inspiration to be a doomed "enemy"—"to remove" the Christian "from a world of toil to a world of rest; from a life of sin to a life of glory." The reader must make his own further reflections: our page is full.

R. W.

RETRIBUTION.—The Rev. John Pierpont was a steadfast upholder of the temperance cause, and for his faithfulness in waging and advocating its principles he was driven from his pulpit in Boston by the exertions of a wealthy firm, members of his church, who were engaged in the liquor traffic. He was afterwards appointed a clerk in the Treasury Department in Washington. While there it fell to his lot to examine certain invoices of liquor imported into Boston, and feeling satisfied that the price set down as the foreign cost was too low, he called attention to the matter. Investigations were instituted which led to the discovery of extensive frauds on the part of the importers, who proved to be the very parties who had persecuted him and driven him to the very place where their iniquities were revealed to him. They have but recently suffered a terrible penalty for their crime, which bankrupted them in purse and character.

VARIETIES.

SELECTED BY W. M.

The true and grand idea of the Church, that is, a society for the purpose of making men like Christ, earth like heaven, the kingdom of this world the kingdom of Christ, is all lost, and men look upon it as an institution for religious worship, and religious instruction; thus robbing it of its life and universality, making it an affair of clergy, not of people, of preaching and ceremonies, not of living, of Sundays and synagogues, instead of one of all days, and all places, houses, streets, town and country.

ST. PETER'S CATHEDRAL.—You are impressed by the cost of this edifice as well as by its size. Two hundred and fifty years ago, before the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth Rock, its estimate cost was $47,000,000. Since then there has been unlimited expense. It is estimated that the cost at the present time and in the present values, would amount to $225,000,000! enough to build two railroads to the Pacific. By the census of 1860 the total valuation of real and personal property in the State of New Hampshire was $156,000,000, and in Vermont, $135,000,000. Here, then, we have one church which it is said has cost as much as the valuation of all the property in New Hampshire and half of that in Vermont! Think of all the lands, houses, factories, shops, goods, cattle, sheep, horses, money, bonds and mortgages—everything that can be reckoned by dollars and cents, owned by nearly half a million people—turned into this one building, and you will understand what sort of a place the Pope has for the observance of Christmas ceremonies.

The annual cost of keeping the building in repair, saying nothing of new works of art, is about $50,000 in the currency issued by the Pope. It requires a large regiment—not of soldiers but of servants—to scrape up the melted wax, dust the Apostles' faces, and keep the spiders from spinning webs over the faces of the effigies of the old Popes. So much for the building—not for religious service; that is still another item of expense.

The New Jerusalem is thus described, from Revelations chapter xxi, 9. "And he measured the city with a reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length, height and breadth of it are equal." Twelve thousand furlongs, 7,920,000 feet, which being cubed, is 948,088,000,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet, the half of which we will reserve for the throne of God and the Court of heaven, half of the balance for the streets, and the remainder divided by 496, the cubic feet in the rooms 16 feet square and 16 feet high, will be 5,734,750,000,000 rooms. We will now suppose the world always did and always will contain 900,000,000 of inhabitants, and the generation will last 33 1-3 years, 2,700,000,000 every century, and that the world will stand 100,000 years—2,700,000,000,000 persons. Then suppose there were 11,230 such worlds, equal to this number of inhabitants and duration of years, then there would be a room 16 feet long, 16 feet wide, and 16 feet high for each person, and yet there would be room.

The rabbis of Europe will meet in council, at Paris, during the Universal Exposition It is proposed to abolish the laws which prohibit the use of certain kinds of food; to take action against the polygamy which prevails among the Jews in Algiers, where there are said to be more than 40,000 Jewish families; and to recognize the right of females in that country to an equal inheritance with the males.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subcribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy of their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME; BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 169. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 17, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 27.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

Fourth Story, Room 22), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

MAN'S NATURE.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

We are told by our "destruction" brethren that Adam in his creation was neither mortal nor immortal. That he was put somehow in a position where he was susceptible of either. Now, to my mind, it legitimately follows that if this be true, then none of Adam's race are either mortal or immortal. Paul, in speaking of the creation of Adam, declares that, "The first man is of the earth, earthy;" and that, "As is the earthy such are they also that are earthy;" And that "we have all borne the image of the earthy Adam." 1 Cor. xv. 47–49. Here we have it plainly asserted that we as Adam's children exist in precisely the same nature in which Adam was created. If then we can prove what is the nature in which man now exists, we settle it at once what was the nature in which Adam was made.

Turning to Eccl. iii. 18, we read, "I said in mine heart concerning the estate of the souls of men, that God might manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts." The doctrine of this text is this, if God shall so manifest the sons of man as that they see themselves in their true character, they will see that they are simply a race of animals. In harmony with this text reads every portion of scripture where man's nature is given. We therefore settle the question that man in his essential nature is animal only; that as a descendant of Adam the first he is absolutely destitute of any principle of spirituality. Paul is in harmony with this idea when he says, 1 Cor. xv. 45, that the first Adam was made a "living soul," in contradistinction to the second Adam, who was made a quickening spirit. And in v. 46, he positively declares that the first man Adam was not a spiritual man. Now mark, in these quotations Paul is not telling us how it was with Adam after he sinned; but what was the nature in which he was created. He was created simply an animal man. When put on trial in the garden, he was tried as an animal. The law God gave him was exactly adapted to his nature. God addressed himself directly to his animal appetite. It was, eat and die, or refrain and live. I know it has been urged that if man in his nature was created only an animal, he could not help transgressing the law that God gave him. But this reasoning is an assumption that the law given Adam in the garden was spiritual. I readily admit that if that law was spiritual, Adam being only animal in his nature, could never obey it. In that case God was unjust in punishing him for doing what he could not help doing. But what proof is there offered that this law is spiritual? The answer given is, that all law is spiritual. This we think is not true. Does not Paul speak of certain ordinances, that were "imposed on us," till the time of reformation? Certainly, and he says that those ordinances, are carnal. Now those ordinances were a part of "the law of God, which he commanded by Moses." So that after all, all law is not spiritual. It is said that nothing but a spiritual law could emanate from a spiritual God. I see no more difficulty in believing that God, though he be wholly spiritual in his nature, could make a law suitable to man's animal nature, than that he, being spiritual, could create an animal man. Now, certainly this law given to Adam in the garden was not spiritual. There is no spirituality in eating or refraining from eating. I know that some modern self-redemptionists have supposed that abstaining from flesh eating, living on Graham mush, and such like, would make them more holy; but we have personal knowledge that this course of diet has not in the least either lessened their animalism or increased their spirituality. Adam was an animal, and God addressed his law directly to his animal appetite. And there was no necessity for Adam to disobey either. There was enough else to eat to meet all his wants. God made to grow in the garden every tree that was pleasant to the sight, and good for food. Adam might have walked in the path of obedience if he had so willed.

But it is urged, it was in Adam's nature to disobey. I admit that the propensity to disobey was in Adam's nature, that it was created in him. Had it not been so, he could have had no trial. What trial could it have been to Adam to have been required to let alone what he had no disposition to touch. But because this disposition to disobedience was in Adam's nature, it no more argues that he could not help sinning, than that the man who has created by habitual, constant practice an appetite for intoxicating drinks is by that propensity placed beyond the possibility of reformation. Many an inebriate has become a sober, temperate man, without a particle of the grace of God to help. To argue that Adam could not help transgressing God's law because there was in his nature a propensity to sin, is to say that none of us are culpable, though we follow our strongest propensities, and continue in a course of constant sinfulness and crime.

But it is urged again, if Adam was created a mortal man, he must have died in the end, whether he ate of the forbidden fruit, or whether he abstained. I remark, if Adam is thus created and then left to the direct tendencies of his own mortal nature, without any intervening proviso, the conclusion is inevitable that his very condition of nature must eventuate in death; therefore, he would just as certainly die whether he obeyed or did not obey. But there was a provision made to continue Adam's life during his entire probation, be that probation longer or shorter; that provision was the tree of life. But says one, Adam could never have eaten of that tree, for eating of the tree of life would have imparted to him an immortal life. I ask for one text of scripture that says that there was immortality in that tree. But I must ever ask in vain, for no such text can be found. But says my brother, Adam was shut away from the tree of life, lest he should eat and live forever. Certainly, for so the record stands. But to assume that God at the first offered the race of Adam immortality through the eating of fruit, is to assume that "God's original plan failed," and he was under the necessity of devising another. This I cannot for a moment believe. God's only appointed agent through which, from the beginning, he designed to bestow immortality on the race he had created, is the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead. In this, God has never changed his purpose. This is the original plan. It is clear to my mind that Adam did eat of the tree of life. In Gen. ii. 9, we read, And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food: the tree of life, also, in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Verses 16, 17. And the Lord God commanded the man, saying, Of every tree in the garden, eating THOU SHALT EAT (margin). But of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it. Now this is not merely a permit to eat of the tree of life, but a command to eat of all the trees in the garden except the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Please look at the reason of the thing. Would God have placed the tree of life in the most conspicuous place in the garden, and then, instead of placing any prohibition on the eating of it, left it under this general command, and that too while man was yet on trial, and had consequently not yet developed his character; when, according to this theory, he knew that one taste from that tree would make Adam immortal? The idea, to me, is simply absurd.

This tree of life was placed there simply for the purpose of keeping Adam and Adam's race alive during that first trial of the race. And on this principle only, can I see how God could be dealing in earnest with mortal Adam in threatening him with death if he disobeyed. When Adam sinned, God shut him away from the only means he had of prolonging his existence beyond its natural limits, the tree of life; and Adam, being left to the legitimate tendencies of his own mortal nature, went into death.

The next question before us is, Was this Adamic nature sinful because it was mortal? I am sure, not. "Sin is the transgression of the law." And consequently, until Adam's nature was guilty, in the sense of actual transgression, his nature was free from sin. But when Adam, by the promptings of his animal nature, broke the law of God, he became a sinner. Now, as Adam's propensities led him into sin, and as those propensities are in reality, so far as its characteristics are concerned, the nature itself; it follows as a legitimate consequence that the sin is in the nature.

The next question is, What was forfeited when man transgressed? Was it the nature that prompted the act of sinning? I answer, more properly it was the life of that nature. If Adam's physical organism, his body of flesh and bones, was forfeited to the law of God, no plan of God through Christ could ever have redeemed it; for the law will never yield a single iota of its claims; and God would not devise a plan through Christ to cheat the law of its just demands. The consequence would be that Adam could have no resurrection. A something that was not Adam before he died, made to come up in a future life, would be no resurrection, but rather a new creation. Again, if we say that the law claims the nature in the sense that these propensities are the nature, then Adam need not have died at all: it would only have been necessary by some process or other to have extinguished these propensities. But when we say it was the life of the Adamic nature that was forfeited to the broken law of God, all is plain and easy. Then when man gives up the animating principle, the life principle by which here he has a conscious existence, the law of God is fully satisfied. Indeed, it cannot fail of being satisfied, for it has got just what it claims. This forever precludes the idea that Christ "paid our debt for us," as respects the Adamic penalty. Else, why do we die?

[To be concluded next week.]

MISTAKEN CHAMPIONSHIP.

The Herald of the Bridegroom, in its preface to a communication, states that it "was sent to the HERALD OF LIFE for publication," and after being kept "two weeks was returned to the author." The communication came to us without the author's name attached, and we gave notice that it could not be accepted without it, as there were some reflections therein of a personal character. This brought a note directing the return of the article. There was no other objection to its publication than those stated above.

We are sorry to see so much irritation manifested by our cotemporary, because we oppose the time movement. We believe the course of those advocating it is both mischievous in its tendency and contrary to scripture, and we have given abundant reasons for our opposition. Does our neighbor, under these circumstances, desire us to hold our peace? And may we not exercise our privilege to oppose error without our words being perverted to impress on others ideas to excite resentment and unjust reproach? If we have stated anything incorrectly, it has been done inadvertently, and we hold ourselves ready to give a reply to any one deeming themselves aggrieved. We repeat, we have not said one word reflecting on the christian character of those brethren because they preached definite time, or imputed to them any improper motives. They are simply in error—one in character with that which led so many good simple-minded brethren to venture everything in that destructive enterprise to colonize Palestine.

W. M.

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY W. S. CAMPBELL.

It is supposed that the rewarding every man as his work shall be, refers to greater or lesser suffering in the future, on the part of the wicked—the suffering to correspond with greater or lesser degrees of enormity in guilt. Then we will submit if the reward of the righteous should not be graduated in the same way, and, hence, the merit of one's doing is to become the ground of reward, i. e., a greater or more exalted reward will be given to those who have done the most.

In other words, the merit of Christ saves all, in common, to a degree; but the real ground of the saint's reward is what he does—and he gets (not a condition) a degree according to what he has done.

It must come to that, for there is no more reason why a very great sinner should suffer more than a little one, than there is that a great and faithful servant, should get more advantage than a poor one.

Now, nothing of this kind is taught in the gospel. The farthest from it, possible. "Every man his penny," whether he came in at the eleventh hour, or at the first. We shall have done no more than it was our duty to do; and be found unprofitable servants.

"What shall we have, therefore?" The answer will show that there is one common condition for the world to come, "eternal life"—with believers.

The true idea, consequently, is, that "the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." The punishment of the wicked is death. The reward of the righteous, life. There is no intimation that one will die more than another, or more fully, than there is that the righteous, some of them, will live more, or more fully, than others.

Now, as death is the punishment suffered, where is the proof that the suffering of the one in the real punishment is more than the suffering in the real punishment of another? Circumstances may differ. I have nothing to do with them. What is the punishment of the sinners, determined by the law? Death! Then, to suffer it is to receive the reward due, the punishment declared by the law; the penalty written which was all that the deeds could require. While the other class should have the entrance into the kingdom; which seems to be all that is, in the least, arbitrary. The capacity for happiness is another matter. I have nothing to do with that, in this argument.

"Whether the deeds be good or bad," is the idea of character, and this will determine condition. So the casting of the bad away, and saving the good into vessels, conveys the true idea, in the parable, presenting the kingdom by a net.

We are now prepared to notice an objection, viz.: The exceedingly wicked; the great infidels, pirates, slave-holders, murderers, and all the exceedingly and terribly wicked, will be tormented more, must be to secure even-handed justice, than the moral and good, who have not been true christians, nevertheless.

Well, who hath been God's counsellor, to instruct him in the principles of the divine administration. I do not know all the reasons for his action; do you? "How unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" You have, it appears, discovered how much more one man must suffer than another; or how much longer to suffer the same punishment; but all I find, in the law, is that each will suffer death; and this is to be the judgment executed upon the offender. Hence, in scripture, the punishment of the transgressors is defined; and who can diminish or add thereto? It matters not what we may think is demanded; or how we may, by reasoning, come to conclude that God will torment one man more than another: the simple question is, what does the law, under which man is placed, present, as the penalty incurred by the violation of the law? None of your sophistries as to what God should do. He is not man that he should do any work—what will he do?

THE NUMBER "FORTY."

BR. STORRS:—I find the number "forty" frequently occurring in the Bible. For instance—"For.... I will cause it to rain upon the earth for forty days and forty nights." Gen. vii. 4, 12. "And the rain was upon the earth forty days and nights." Ver. 17. "And the flood was upon the earth forty days." "And when he (Moses) was full forty years old." Acts vii. 23, 30. "And when forty years were expired." Acts vii. 36 "Forty years in the wilderness." Ex. xvi 35. "Elijah went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights." 1 Kings xix. 18. "Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights." Ex. xxiv. 18; xxxiv. 28. "Fell down before the Lord.... forty days and forty nights." Deut. ix. 18. "Yet forty days and Nineveh shall be overthrown." Jonah iii. 4 "And the Philistine drew near morning and evening .... forty days." 1 Sam. xvii. 16. "And when he (Jesus) had fasted forty days and forty nights." Matt. iv. 2; Mark i. 12; Luke iv. 1. Are the above passages, or numbers in the passages typical? If so, what are they types of? Yours in search of light.

GEO. U. LEWIS.

Bethel, Vt.

ANSWER TO BR. LEWIS, BY Z. CAMPBELL.

A full exposition of all the places in the Bible where the number forty occurs, would require a volume instead of an article for a paper. We will, therefore, give a few instances, sufficient to put the reader on the right track, and enable him to run through the whole. And first, by way of introduction, the reader should observe that the firmament of heaven is the dial plate of God, on which time is indicated by the two great lights: "the greater light to rule the day, and the lesser light to rule the night." The revolutions of these two lights become the standard by which to reckon time by divine appointment; and all portions of it are but combinations of the revolutions of these lights; or these two true time-keepers. The first is a fraction of the unit. One evening and morning make one day. Second; seven days make one week. The third, also, seven years make one week (of years). The fourth; fifty years make one jubilee.

This finishes that sabbatic series, beginning with seven days, then seven years, and ending in seven times seven years, and one additional year, the jubilee, the fiftieth year, the perfecting of sabbatic times. And it is remarkable that the word seven means perfection; as though God intended, from the beginning, that all things pertaining to the final rest of his people should be accomplished in some combination of the septades. It is also to be observed that God is a perfect being, clothed with seven perfect attributes, viz.; love, light, wisdom, life, truth, justice, and power. That number, therefore, which represents perfection, seems most appropriate to represent the intervening time between the present and future perfect state.

Other measures, however, are used in the scriptures to measure periods longer than a jubilee, but these are made up of jubilees, so that finally all are but multiples of seven. The next period above the jubilee is a cycle of seventy weeks of years; to which must be added the ten independent jubilee years, making in all a period of five hundred years. And next above this we have a wing, which is a period of two cycles of seventy weeks, or one thousand.

We will now refer to a few instances in which the number forty occurs in the Bible. It is so frequently used that it cannot be by accident, but by design; and if by design, its so frequent use is typical: and if typical it must typify time; and if it is typical of time it cannot be less than forty jubilees, or two thousand years; because if less, many things must be past which we know to be future.

We commence with the history of Moses. He was forty years old when he went into the field to his brethren, and slew the Egyptian and hid him in the sand. The next day he went in again, and reproving a brother in fault, was met by the abusive language—"Who made you a prince and judge over us?" They were at that time unwilling to receive him as a deliverer sent from God: so he departed and went into Midian, and married there, and remained forty years. Then, at the burning bush, God showed him he must go again into Egypt and lead his people out into the land promised to the fathers. At this time his people received him as their deliverer; not because their moral condition was any better than it was forty years before; or that they had any more faith in the promises of God; but that their sore bondage had made them willing to receive deliverance from any source it might come. Now, admitting these forties to be forty jubilees, or two thousand years, the age of Moses, when he first appeared before his brethren, presupposes that the Jews existed in some condition forty jubilees before the first advent of their Messiah, which advent was typified by Moses' first appearance before his brethren. And on each of these occasions, they were both met by a similar and abusive rejoinder; to Moses they said, "Who made you a prince and a judge over us?" And of the Messiah—"Away with this man; we will not have him to reign over us."

Now the two distinct manner of people, Jew and Gentile, commenced with the two sons of Isaac, Jacob and Esau, forty jubilees before Christ. During this time their age, as a people, was 2,000 years. So the age of Moses must have been forty before he appeared first to his people as a deliverer. But he was rejected of them at his first appearing; and so was their Messiah. But the second time Moses was received after his absence of forty years. And so Christ will be received by them after his absence from them during forty jubilees, or 2,000 years from his first advent. Not that their moral condition will be any better, or that they will have any more faith in the promises of God, but because of their long afflictions they will gladly receive any one who will deliver them.

Again, Moses was forty days on the Mount Sinai receiving the two tables of stone containing the decalogue. But on taking them down to the people he found them worshipping a golden calf which they had made in his absence. So he threw down the tables and broke them. And after the people were sufficiently chastised for their idolatry, he went again upon the mount forty days more, and received again other two tables, containing the same decalogue as before; and at the end of forty days he brought them down to the people. This time the skin of his face shone with brightness so that the people could not look on him; and he covered his face with a vail.

Now, from the birth of Jacob and Esau, the Israel of God lived in violation of the law of God 2,000 years to Messiah, and during this time their tables of stone were broken. But as Moses was another forty days on the mount receiving the second set of tables, containing the same decalogue, to present to them, and which they willingly received, so forty jubilees will roll away from the first advent before the Israel of God will willingly receive their Messiah, whose face to them will shine with brightness, as did the face of Moses on his second return from the mount with the commandments of God, and as did the face of the Saviour on the Mount of Transfiguration, which was a vision of his second appearing in his kingdom. The vail will then be drawn over the law of Moses, and it will be forever obscured, and having school-mastered Israel to Christ, it will expire with its eyes dimmed and its natural force abated.

We will now gather up the following facts: The first forty years of the life of Moses are forty jubilees from the birth of Jacob and Esau to the time that Christ was baptized by John in Jordan, at thirty years of age, and a voice from heaven proclaimed him the Son of God. But Israel saw no beauty in him, nor did they receive him. The second forty years Moses spent in Midian among Gentiles, out from among whom he chose his bride, and returned to his people, and set his hand the second time to deliver them, and succeeded.

So when Messiah was rejected of the Jews, he went, by virtue of his gospel, among the Gentiles, to choose out from among them his Bride. For Paul says—Now, brethren, we are dead to the law by the body of Christ, and married to another who is raised up from the dead.

And as Moses was forty years in Midian, a shepherd in that country, so the gospel, for forty jubilees, two thousand years, will be to the Gentiles, after which Christ will return to the whole house of Israel, or, rather, they to him, with his Gentile Bride, and they will receive him. The forty years that Moses led the people in the wilderness cover the same ground as the first forty of his life; that is, from Jacob and Esau to Christ, with a special reference to his being a type of the law.

Again: Christ was tempted forty days; so his church will be subject to temptation, not always, but two thousand years, or forty jubilees. His fasting forty days is that of the true church through long fasting, hunger and thirst after righteousness during forty jubilees, when they will be filled; for they are the "blessed." But the reader will perceive that forty jubilees, two thousand years, from the time the Saviour was thirty years old will not transpire until A. D. 2030, and consequently might not expect the Lord until that time. But there will be an age before the 2030, and that is an age of conquest before the age of peace and universal righteousness. For he comes, first, to strike through kings in the day of his wrath; to go forth to judge and to make war; and from conquering to conquer. To accommodate our definite time friends, we will suppose the Lord to come in 1870, and what then? The world will not burn up, but the age of conquest will begin, and there will be 160 years to A. D. 2030. Let these 160 years be the age of conquest, and all is plain. It will take time to subjugate all nations to the righteous reign of Messiah. It is the time required for the stone cut out of the mountain to smite the image on its feet, and to become a great mountain, and to fill the whole earth.

The two dispensations, the law and the gospel, are of equal length. This is evident from the furniture within the vail of the temple in the holy of holies. The ark and mercy seat were in the middle, and a cherub on either side, extending their equal wings so as to span the whole interior; while their inner wings touched each other over the mercy seat. And their faces were turned inward, so that both looked toward the mercy seat. These represented the two covenants. Under one, the law covenant, the Jews looked forward two wings, two thousand years, to the Messiah to come. Under the other, the Gentiles look back two wings to the first advent. Again, by the law it was enacted that for minor offences, not punishable by death, the delinquent should be beaten, not exceeding forty stripes. This was the law of the nation as a nation. No one was beaten forty stripes and then put to death. But if beaten forty stripes, one was restored to citizenship. Now Israel is verily guilty, not of death, because we know they are writhing under the lash of forty stripes, which again are forty jubilees, or 2,000 years. These commenced when the Jews put themselves under the Romans for protection, and the iron yoke was put upon their neck; and their two thousand years are about ending.

We have another typical use of the number forty in the account of Goliah of Gath. He was the champion of the Philistines, a people powerful in arms, and for a while checked the progress of the Israel of God in establishing a divine government and religion in the land. This monster in human shape came out boldly for forty days in succession and defied the armies of Israel's God, and Saul and all Israel were afraid, and greatly dismayed. Thus forty days he stayed the armies of Israel, and then was slain by David, the Lord's anointed, and the arms of Israel again prevailed.

Now the Philistines were Pagan in religion and worshipped Dagon. Some such Dagonic power or powers must, therefore, prevent the government and religion of God from being established in that land for the time of 2,000 years, corresponding to the forty days that Goliah defied Israel. And here we have the fact that such Dagonic or irreligious powers have held the government of the holy land since the Romans first threw the yoke over the Jewish people. In this instance the forty jubilees begin and end with the forty stripes on the back of the Jewish people.

It may be observed here that Goliah typifies the man of sin, and Christ, typified by David, will hereafter slay him; after having slain the lion and the bear, which are England and Russia; and immediately after "the eastern question" will be forever settled. The government will fall into the hands of him whose right it is by divine appointment.

We have another evidence of the day of conquest in Dan. iv. The tree, in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, as explained by Daniel, is made to represent the golden head of the image seen in the second chapter, or the first of the four beasts of the seventh chapter, which was the Assyrian Empire, generally denominated Babylon, from its capital.

This tree, being cut down, was to have its roots left remaining in the earth, bound with brass and iron bands, until seven times passed over it. The brass and iron bands are the Grecian and Roman forms of government to exist in the earth until seven times pass over them; reckoning from the fall of Babylon, or cutting down of the tree. The number forty would not answer here; for more than 2,000 years are indicated, so the inspired penman was obliged to adopt the seven in its year day representation, which, as generally understood, is 2,520, though I think it is 2,555; and they do not end with the end of the forty stripes. And what, then? We will look at the sequel and see what then. Nebuchadnezzar took a homeopathic pill of the great medicine for the nations of the earth. His heart changed to a beast's heart, and he was turned out to pasture with the oxen, and eat grass seven years. And at the end of this time he looked up to heaven, and his beastly heart was taken away, and a man's heart was given him, and he came to a right understanding, and he blessed the Most High, and honored him who liveth forever. Since the fall of Bab ylon, the nations have lost the human heart, and in all their governments we recognize the beastly heart; and as to their religious food, it is hay, wood and stubble, or grass in some form or other. But when the seven times expire, they will come to a right understanding, and look up to heaven, and bless the Most High, and honor him who liveth forever. "Yea, all kings shall fall down before him; all nations shall serve him." Psa. lxxii. 11. The 2,555, as they really are, do not end until in the age of conquest.

There are other places where the number forty is used, but it is not certain that in every case they are typical; even if they are, it is not easy to point out what they typify. This subject may be pursued much further, but the article is already too prolix for the paper. Enough has been said to put the reader on the right track, and this is all that was intended. We, therefore, close, hoping more able pens may, in due time, give further light on this, and all other subjects connected with the great and glorious plan of salvation. We have srarted in the right way, but much yet remains to be brought out of the sacred writings. May we all continue to search, and to grow in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord.

Ritualism Again.

BY ELD. J. PARRY.

There were once a class of people who were very strict in their devotion to outward forms and ceremonies, making broad their phylacteries, and enlarging the borders of their garments, and who made a grand display of their purple and fine linen, while they fared sumptuously every day. In the estimation of such a class, the man in the seamless garment, whose visage was marred with sorrow, care and toil, and who had not where to lay his head, would be of little account; despised and rejected.

Such was the condition of the rulers of the Jewish church at the first advent of Christ. How does it vary now, in the so-called christian church, on the eve of the second advent? What is all this noise and bluster, reaching across the wide Atlantic, about robes and vestments, popish ceremonies and clerical foppery? Such a controversy is worse than childish, it is perfectly ridiculous, if not wicked. "A tempest in a teapot." Valuable time, temper and paper utterly lost and thrown away, just at the dawn of the coming judgment, calling upon all men, everywhere, to repent and turn from these vanities, for the Lord is at hand to reward every man according to his works. What is the reward of such works as these? Those who sow to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption. True, in this world, "fine feathers make fine birds." The "daw, dressed in peacock's feathers," made a great show, and strutted about for a time in great pride and glory; but it was only a silly daw after all. If people choose to make themselves ridiculous, there is no law to prevent them: they are free to choose. Why not let them alone? they are joined to their idols. They are not worth making martyrs of; let them enjoy, like their representative, the gaudy butterfly, their short Summer day: let them have their reward, it is all they are ever likely to have. They are not, however, to find fault with or denounce the votaries of the tyrant Fashion, of the other sex, for their vagaries; they are all passengers in the same boat, bound to the same fatal shore. All the difference is, the one class import their fashions from Paris, the other from Rome!

But I protest against bringing in the sacred name of the religion of Christ to sanction such preposterous vanities in the flesh. Its honesty, sobriety, simplicity, humility, and every christian grace, revolt against such a perversion of the religion of the meek and lowly Jesus. The wedding garment our heavenly Bridegroom has provided for the guests at his marriage supper will not be cut or made, I venture to affirm, after the Roman fashion. The cloak that Paul left at Troas was probably more for use than ornament. The ornament of a meek and quiet spirit is of more value in the sight of God than all the gorgeous robes that priest and monarch ever wore. Those who live for outward show, to be seen of men, may parade a fine and glittering exterior, but when disrobed, the interior may disclose a putrid and loathsome sepulcher. Were we but half as anxious to keep the heart and conscience free from stain as some proud prelates are to display their borrowed plumes, we might not indeed gain the praise of men, and be called "Rabbi" or "D. D.," but when our Lord and Saviour comes to take his ransomed people home, and give them eternal life in his kingdom, it will be honor and glory enough to hear him say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you, from the foundation of the world." In that day the first will be last, and the last first; for that which is highly esteemed amongst men, is had in abomination in the sight of God.

"The Theology of the Bible."

Geo. W. Young has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should sent direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. Halsted, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J.;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The accounts from all parts of the country are favorable for crops of all kinds. The South will have the largest corn crop she has had since the year 1861.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, ARRIL 17, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will est where it ought.

New York City Subscribers.—Those of you who receive your papers by mail should not delay another week, if you are to leave your present residences, in informing us where you wish us to send to your address. If you neglect to do it at once, you may lose a paper or two which we cannot afterwards supply, as we print only just enough to supply all with one number. Do not delay this matter.

Removal.—The Herald of Life will be removed from Room 22, to Room 40, on the floor above where it is now published, after May 1st. For the present the Editor's office will be at his residence, 62 Hicks St., Brooklyn, a short distance from Fulton Ferry; where he will be glad to see his friends, and such as may wish to do business with him. His Post Office address is unchanged: do not forget it is "Box 4658, New York City."

Our Books, Pamphlets, and Tracts can be had of Geo. W. Young, 25 Chambers St. (near Centre St.), New York, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son.

Also, at the store of Wm. H. & L. C. Thorne & Co., 58 White St., just west of Broadway.

Our Opinion.

If our friends will allow us to express an opinion, we would say, in our judgment, enough has been said on "Elijah the prophet," and on the "Abomination of Desolation:" both subjects have been before our readers in almost all shapes, and we doubt if any of them feel that they are likely to receive any further benefit from the continued discussion of these subjects. Let us rest a little from them both, if you please. If any must have Elijah in the future, you may rest assured it will be the very same person who went "up into heaven in a chariot of fire," and not some fancy personage. We personally know of at least four who claim to be the "Elijah;" but we think as they "bear witness of themselves," that therefore their "witness is not true;" yet we confess, one of these is more modest in his claim than the others; for he asks no one to proclaim him the Elijah till he is translated, as he expects to be before any one else; after that, is the time he wishes to be proclaimed. That is right: that is honest: he is no impostor, even if he is mistaken.

The Lord's Supper.

One of our exchanges has more than once asserted that the annual "observance was introduced as the church became backslidden." We might retort, that the more frequent celebration was the result of a loss of spirituality, and placing confidence in outward observances, instead of the inward life. But we forbear such unchristian charges. Nevertheless, it is a fact that the Bible is silent as to a more frequent observance than the Passover season; and exchange resorts to what it calls "history" to prove the weekly one, showing it was not content to hazard the question on Bible authority; and so, like the advocates of inherent immortality, seeks its proof outside of the divine record. So far as history is concerned, they can as easily prove a daily as a weekly communion: such is history!

Let the Bible decide the question and we have no fears for the result. The weekly communionists are famous for talking about "breaking bread," or "the breaking of one loaf;" as if such expressions proved it was the Lord's Supper that was spoken of: a most untenable position. That supper embraces "the cup" as well as the "loaf." In no instance, to which they resort for Bible proof, is the cup, or wine mentioned or referred to. Why then assume it was the Lord's Supper, when Jesus said to his disciples, as he presented them "the cup," "Drink ye all of it; for this is my blood of the new covenant"? &c. Math. xxvi. 27, 28. But this cup is not found at all in any of the cases our opposers present in proof of their weekly clebration. No; nothing is found there but the "breaking of bread;" and they have come to speak of the institution as if it were only to "break bread;" thus, in fact, making light of the "blood of the new covenant." Not willfully, but through the force of prejudice and habit. We are firmly persuaded that the anniversary of Christ's "death" is the proper time to "show forth his death:" and that any other season (tho' it may be tolerated) is out of time, and a work of supererogation. Above all, is the "first day of the week" an improper time, as that was kept in remembrance of Christ's resurrection: and to commemorate his death the same day they did his triumph over death, it seems to us, all must see is decidedly out of place. On the first day of the week the early christians met to rejoice; and some of them, if we trust to "history," held that it was a sin even to kneel on that day, lest it should indicate sorrow on a day intended wholly for rejoicing. On that day they had feasting; not the feast of the Lord's Supper, but a feast provided by the wealthy, in which rich and poor all rejoiced together. These feasts, called "feast of charity," (see Jude 12), or, "Love feasts," were where love sunk all distinction on account of worldly circumstances, and where the rich showed their care for the poor. They all came "together to break bread"—not in memory of Christ's death, but—in memory of their redemption from death by his resurrection, and to increase their love one to another.

In these remarks we have not intended to enter into the controversy; nor should we have said any thing, at this time, but for the attack made on the anniversary feast by our contemporary. If any choose to celebrate the Lord's Supper more frequently, we judge them not; we only ask them not to condemn others who differ with them in this matter. "The judge standeth at the door."

We shall hold our annual feast, for this year, to-morrow (Thursday) eve, at 7 1-2 o'clock at the house of Br. Redhead, No. 261 Raymond St., Brooklyn, just south of Lafayette Ave. Our friends in New York who come, if they cross Fulton Ferry, will take the Fulton Ave. cars, and get out at Raymond St., and go south: those crossing Atlantic Ferry, will take Atlantic St. cars to Raymond St., then go north to No. 261. All who love our Life-giver are cordially invited to participate with us at this feast. Come and welcome.

Christ in the Garden.

'T'was evening. From the supper He had risen
Where, with words of sadness, but of tenderest love,
Into the hearts of his beloved disciples he had sought
To pour the balm of consolation, and nerve them
For the sad, the painful scenes, through which the Lamb of God
Was now about to pass.
With weary steps,
And bruised and sorrowing hearts, He and his loved ones
Crossed the brook of Kidron, and sought the chosen spot
In Olivet, to which with them he had so oft resorted.
Burdened with sorrow, and dismayed in view
Of the vast sacrifice of which he was about to be
The Lamb provided; the pain and agony, the shame
And bitter death of which he was so soon to be the sufferer,
He sought the place of prayer, where he might pour,
Into the ear of his divine and heavenly Father,
His ardent cry for strength and aid, if not his will
The cup of sorrow from his shrinking yet obedient lips
Away might pass.
He leaves the company of his disciples,
And with the three who oft had been selected
As witnesses of deeds and miracles that wonder waked,—
The truth confirmed of his divine and holy mission,—
He deeper plunges in the shades of dark Gethsemane,
And bids them watch, while he shall yonder go and pray.
Into the depths of that deep sorrow,
Which wrung the heart of Jesus in that hour
Of woe and suffering, no human sympathy
Can fully enter. He feared the pain and anguish
Of a cruel death—the loss of life.
He keenly felt the pangs of love so unrequited,
Ingratitude so base from those for whose salvation
He had so labored—whom he only sought to bless.
And as the mighty load pressed on his sad,
And bruised, and bleeding heart, the bitter cry,
"Father! if possible let this cup pass from me,
Yet not my will, but thine be done," came,
And the gushing blood, forced through ten thousand
Bleeding pores, bore witness to the agony
Of that meek, suffering, holy Lamb of God.
Thrice did that prayer ascend to reach the ear
Of Him who heareth prayer. He heard his Son.
An angel came from heaven to strengthen and to soothe—
The fear of death was gone, and all the shame,
And scorn, and rage of cruel foes he meekly bore;
Till on the cross, mid agonies unutterable,
That they might be forgiven, he breathed forth
An ardent prayer, and yielded up his life to God.

John Fondey, M. D.

Phila., April 11th, 1867.

"The Theology of the Bible."

Judge Halsted has permitted us to take the following extracts from letters received by him in relation to the above work. The first is from a clergyman. He says:—

"Certainly confusion is the order of the day upon the destiny of man. The christian world is cursed with a flood of books, which (most of them) have not much real learning, and less light. Universalism cannot be true. Can eternal sin and misery be a fact? Many think it monstrous, and cannot receive it."

Another letter says of the book, "It is the most conclusive and elaborate work of the kind I have yet seen; calculated to forever set at rest the true meaning of such words, employed in the Old and New Testaments, as have been so most wretchedly perverted by Theologians, and made to convey ideas the most grotesque and absurd, and nullify the teachings of holy writ on all the doctrines therein set forth; and by such monstrous perversions have maligned and represented the Deity as a most implacable foe to humanity, delighting in the endless torture of the [orthodox] immortal souls; with an endless train of absurdities in consequence of which the christianity of the present day is degraded below the level of ancient heathen mythology, and equally powerless to save from death."

Another letter from a gentleman who had obtained a copy of Judge Halsted's work, and afterwards directed copies to be sent to several of his friends, says, "Ever since I saw the blessed teaching of the scriptures, and by the light of truth have discovered the errors of the popular churches, I have felt a strong desire that the truth should spread. Believing that a correct translation would (to use the words of another) 'upset every creed in Christendom,' and believing your book to be just such a work, I am interested to circulate it, and call the attention of others to it. I now think of another friend who has fought against the non-reliving of the wicked, which your translation so clearly brings to light as the truth, and am desirous that he should have the benefit of your translation and collection. Please direct a copy to —— ——"

Note by the Editor.—We hope this work may go into every house in the land. You will find a few smatterers in Hebrew and Greek who will attempt to find flaws in Judge Halsted's translation, but you will also find he is able to show the fallacy of their fault-finding when it shall come from a respectable opponent, demonstrated to have ability to make a consistent objection.

The Discussion in Brooklyn.

It will be held in the Hall of the Brooklyn Institute, Corner of Washington and Concord Sts. (a short distance from Fulton Ferry) Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings, the 22, 23, 25, 26, and 27th inst., at 7 1-2 o'clock each evening.

Question:

Does the Bible teach that Man is Material and Mortal; that Men are unconscious in Death; and that the conscious existence of the Wicked ceases forever at Death?

Affirmative—Rufus Wendell, of Salem, Mass.

Negative—"A Clergyman" of Brooklyn.

Tickets of admission can be had at this office, and at the office of the Brooklyn Daily Union, and at the door of the Hall. They are without charge, but none can be admitted except with them.

Much interest is already manifested in the meeting; and we pray it may be so conducted as to promote truth.

Dr. Bartlett's Book.

LETTER FROM DR. J. K. FINLEY.

Niles, Mich., April 9, 1867.

My Dear Friend:—At your request I procured Dr. Bartlett's work, "Life and Death Eternal," and have given it as careful a reading as it required. It was hard work to wade through a book filled with arguments, which, like those of infidelity, have been refuted time and time again, until both the arguments and their refutation fall upon the ear as a "thrice told tale," "stale, flat and unprofitable." The whole book is made up of unfounded assumptions, ad captandum arguments based upon these assumptions, ridiculous sophistries, and as politicians say, appeals for Buncombe, with learned and laborious efforts to prove that when "the sun shines it gives light."

The animus of the man, to use one of his own expressions, "lies upon the surface;" and the merits of the book, or rather, I should say, its demerits, are equally apparent. He writes with all the impertinence as well as the unfairness of one who is fully conscious that he is in perfect sympathy with all orthodoxy, and is fully backed up by its authority, rather than by the weight of argument or the power of truth.

Orthodoxy has always been mean and tyrannical. From the time when at the bar of Pilate it cried out, "Crucify him, crucify him," down to the present moment, it has shown itself bigoted and intolerant, and when it had the power, persecuting and cruel. Dr. Bartlett, in my humble opinion, is largely imbued with its spirit, and only lacks the power and the opportunity to manifest it, in its most hateful characteristics.

He and some others of our opponents have even descended so low as to impute improper and injurious motives to those who differ from them, a species of arguments which truth, in the hands of a sincere votary of truth, will never employ, and which a gentleman, who has a proper respect for himself, and for the truth, will treat with contempt and pass by as unworthy of notice. It ill becomes a man of the caliber and scholarship of Dr. Bartlett to pretend to turn up his nose at such opponents as Archbishop Whately, Chancellor Halsted, Professor Hudson, Rev. Messrs. Dobney, Panton Ham, Moncrief, White, and multitudes of others who might be named. Such demonstrations too forcibly remind one of Shakespeare's dog "baying the moon," and the effect upon intelligent minds in either case will be the same.

In his preface, the Doctor says:

"We have commonly employed the term 'annihilation' to designate the cessation of existence which these writers advocate. We are aware that many of them object to the term as not being fully expressive of their mode of stating and arguing the case. We would only say that we cannot be debarred the use of a convenient, indeed an indispensable term, out of deference to their preferences. We state their views and arguments fairly and fully; and it will be found, we trust, that the validity of our reasoning does not at all hinge upon the name by which we characterize the system."

Now, I would like to know by what claim of right does this mass of self-conceit justify himself before any tribunal, either in heaven or on earth, for using a term to designate our doctrines which he knows was given to us in reproach, and which, he admits, we object to as not expressive of our views. I do aver that in all my experience of human nature in its most repulsive aspects, I have never met with a more perfect exhibition of discourteousness either in a clergyman or a layman.

When I first read the above extract, I supposed Dr. B. meant what he said, and that he intended to use the term annihilation because it seemed convenient, although I could not see why the term destructionist, which we do not object to, which is scriptural, and which was used by our Saviour himself, would not have been quite as convenient. But when in the third chapter I came across the following quotation, his object was very apparent. Some of our writers had, it seems, made use of the phrase extinction of being, and cessation of existence, meaning of course living existence; the Doctor, however, pounces upon them as if he thought he had made a grand discovery of an exceedingly weak point. He prates as follows:

"Death does not literally mean, nor does it include, extinction of being, cessation of existence, or even dissolution; nor is life in its lower sense simply synonymous with existence. The distinction between the animate and inanimate is not between the existent and the non-existent. Here are two trees; one is dead and the other is alive, but they both are in existence, and both are trees. Death does not itself signify even decay or dissolution; for the dead tree is still entire. A dead body is still a body, though dead."

After continuing in the same strain for some time, even ad nauseam, he says:

"Dissolution again is not extinction, only a change of form; for no matter is annihilated."

Now, how apparent it is that all such stuff as this is simply to throw dust in the eyes of his readers, for the Doctor well knows that he will not find a child ten years old, possessed of ordinary intelligence, who will say that death consists in non-existence, in the sense in which he has presented it. There can be no mistaking his principal object, which was undoubtedly to convey the impression that we believe death to mean, literally, the annihilation not only of man but of the particles of matter of which he is composed. Verily, let Dr. Bartlett have whatever virtues he may, he ought not to boast of common honesty as one of them.

In this connection our author gives the definition of death found in Webster's Dictionary, which it seems to me ought to have been sufficient to have opened even his eyes. He says, "The primary meaning of the word, as there given, turns, not on the extinction of being, but on 'the cessation of certain functions.'" Precisely so, most discriminating Dr. Bartlett! Death is ceasing to live, and when it takes place the functions of life cease, as the procuring cause of it: and when these functions cease to be performed, man is no longer subject to the laws of physiological action; in other words, the controlling power of life over chemical action ceases, and then, as a natural result, the particles of matter of which he is composed are brought under the uncontrolled power of chemical forces. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was" before "the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his 'breathing members' the breath of lives, and man became an 'animal of life,' or living creature."

Again, in his first chapter, the Doctor, with characteristic disingenuousness, says, "There have arisen from time to time individuals and bodies of men who have denied that the doctrine of endless misery is in the word of God." (The phrase "endless misery" is certainly not in the Bible.) "But here," he continues, "appears a singular phenomenon: the opposers cannot agree among themselves." He then informs us that the opposers of the doctrine of "endless suffering" (not in the Bible either) "consist of three divisions, viz: The Restorationists, the Universalists who do not believe in any punishment, and 'the third section who teach the complete extinction of the wicked.'" Now, the disingenuousness of the Doctor consists in the implication that all the believers in the inherently immortal soul and endless misery theory, are perfectly agreed and united among themselves—a happy family, there being no "singular phenomenon" amongst them! Whilst no one knows better than Dr. B. that they are divided into an almost countless number of sects, who have heretofore, and are now, spending more of their stregth, ten-fold, in fighting with each other, than in fighting what they call their common enemy. As Chancellor Halsted has well said, "Books of so-called theology have become so multiplied that a lifetime is not sufficient to read and compare the thousand and one different and contradictory views of men on various points supposed to be involved in Theos-logos—God-word—Theo-logy—of the Bible, but which have really no foundation in God's word."

A large part of Dr. Bartlett's volume is taken up in proving that life and death, and various other words, are used in a tropical sense in the scriptures; and he piles up proof upon proof, and illustration upon illustration, as if he really believed that any person in the wide world, of ordinary common sense, ever doubted it. And still further to show the animus of the man, he says that Mr. Hudson and Mr. Dobney both admit that these words are sometimes used in a tropical sense, as if they or any other destructionist ever disputed it.

It would appear as if the Doctor's only object could be to prevent his readers from seeing the real question at issue; which is, not whether they are sometimes used figuratively or metaphorically, but in what sense does God use them, when He designates by them, the penalty of sin, and the everlasting reward of the righteous.

This is undoubtedly the question, and it has been made so unanswerably apparent that they are, and necessarily must be, used in their primary sense, that I do not think it worth while to waste time in analyzing and refuting his so-called arguments. The Bible truth has been fully set forth in "Life only in Christ" by George Storrs—"Bible versus Tradition"—Dobney on the future punishment of the wicked—Prof. Hudson's great work, "Debt and Grace," and many minor works which can generally be obtained from Geo. Storrs, box 4658, New York. A recent work by ex-Chancellor O. S. Halsled, of New Jersey, entitled "The Theology of the Bible, Itself the teacher and its own interpreter," is a most critical and learned book of great labor and research, covers the whole ground, establishing the doctrines of the destructionists beyond any reasonable doubt. Twelve years of study were devoted to it, and it will amply repay its careful study to any one who is honestly desirous of knowing "what is truth." I remain very truly your friend.

J. K. Finley.

Note by the Ed. of Her. of Life.—The foregoing was accompanied by the following letter to us.

Br. Storrs:—I received a letter some time ago from a friend in Peru, a lady of uncommon mental powers and attainments, requesting me to give her my opinion of Dr. Bartlett's book. Owing to severe sickness I have been unable to attend to her request until lately. I was in hopes to have seen something in the Herald on this subject, but as there has nothing appeared yet, I thought I would send you my reply to this friend's request. I have thought there might be some of our friends who might, at least, be confused by his foolish assumptions, and special pleadings, it might do some good to such persons to expose the man. I send it to you to do as you think best. Publish or not, as may appear proper. I think I have done the Doctor no injustice—indeed the whole spirit of the book is such as would justify me in saying more than I have.

For the first time in my life, I have been brought to feel that I was dying. On Christmas day four excellent physicians in consultation pronounced my case hopeless, and told my family I would not probably live half an hour. I shall never feel more certain that I am about to die, than I did for a few minutes during which I was in possession of my senses. But in the merciful kindness of my heavenly Father, I shall live, and I think the summer season will restore me to my accustomed good health. My sickness was inflammation of the lungs, with almost complete congestion of those important breathing members. I have not yet been able to exert myself much, either in body or mind, but am daily improving.

Allow me, even at this late period, to express my most sincere sympathy with you in the loss of your Son; and more especially since learning that he was the Kruptos of the Herald. Nothing would give me more pleasure than to be able to suggest anything, that could lessen the feeling of loneliness, or mitigate the bitterness of your grief for the death of such a son. I know by experience the feeling of desolateness occasioned by the loss of dear ones, and have realized in all its painfulness, as you must now do, the want of the pleasant countenance, the looks and words of love, the vacant seat at the table, and in the family circle, and perhaps above all, the feeling of sadness when you enter your closet, and shut your door, and pray to your Father in heaven, unable any longer to present your petitions in behalf of this loved one, before the throne of his grace.

When I remember how long I suffered myself, and know that you are undergoing the prostrating feelings of a similar experience, my sympathies go out in your behalf most sincerely. As to the consolations that flow from the precepts of our blessed religion, and particularly from the joyous hope of a glorious resurrection, I am glad not only to hope, but to know assuredly, that you can appropriate them all to yourself, and derive from them all the comfort that they are adapted to give, and which can only be obtained from this source. With assurance of affectionate regard, I remain truly yours,

J. K. Finley.

Prayer.

Christians are often exhorted to pray, pray in secret, pray in public, pray always, pray without ceasing. This is perhaps all right and proper enough, especially the former, that being in obedience to our Saviour's instructions, who taught his disciples, "But thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet and pray to thy Father who is in secret, and thy Father who seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." But prayer even in secret will be of comparatively little avail if with it we pray with erroneous conceptions of the scriptures of truth. Now I assume, what will be readily admitted, that error cannot sanctify a man. "Sanctify them through thy truth," is the prayer of Jesus, "thy word is truth." I assume, also, that the reading and searching the scriptures with the belief in the immortality of the soul, we shall never arrive at a correct knowledge of the truth so long as we hold on to that fundamental error. On the immortal-soul theory the scriptures will be to us a book of contradictions and inconsistencies; we shall fail to find a harmony in the Bible. Nor can we expect in that theory to derive much benefit from reading or praying. The holy spirit is called "the Spirit of truth." "Man cannot live by bread alone;" we may add, man cannot live on error; he cannot live spiritually without the truth: but when we have the truth and the spirit of truth with it, our reading and our prayers will harmonize, and combine to our spiritual growth and knowledge in divine things. To pray all the time and neglect to search the scriptures, our praying will be of little if any benefit. We may get an influence of some sort, but it is questionable if that influence is the Holy Spirit; especially if we cherish in our belief a fundamental error like the one alluded to. How many there are, who have a fervor and zeal in religion, who when bible truth is presented to them reject it; call it infidelity. Many do this no doubt in ignorance, through prejudice of education. We will not judge them. Go into a prayer meeting of certain sects, where there is what they call "The life and power of religion:" present bible truth to them, and how soon you "kill the spirit of the meeting!" Nothing will more effectually kill the excitement of such a meeting than to tell them that the soul is not immortal; that their fancied heaven is not the heaven of the Bible. You will at once see that their religion and the Bible do not harmonize; and hence I conclude that their fervor and zeal are spurious; are not in accordance with the spirit of truth. Hence also I conclude that the Holy Spirit is something different from the spirit which pervades their meeting; because the Holy Spirit agrees and harmonizes with the word of God. How important, yea essential, then, is it that we have right belief of bible teaching. I once heard of a minister who went into a meeting where the wildest excitement prevailed; all were happy and noisy. He opened his Bible and read; the excitement subsided very soon, and their meeting was killed. Let us learn that religious excitement is not always of a healthy sort. People may get very happy in meeting, and think that an evidence that the Lord is in their midst. Let us be careful to try the spirits (by the word of truth); if they harmonize with that, it is safe to believe that spirit comes from God, and we may rejoice in it. But if there is an antagonism to the truth, let us beware that we be not drawn into a fire of our own kindling, and mistake the spirit of man for the spirit of God. W. S. O.

Our Opponents: Life from the Dead.

BY G. L. HART.

What is truth? Said Jesus, "Thy word is truth." How grateful we should be that God has been mindful of us, giving us the written word. My mind was somewhat exercised after reading the Crisis of April 3d. In an article entitled, "Resurrection and Judgment of the Unjust," the writer warns his readers of embracing doctrines advanced and promulgated by unstable, unchristian, wicked men. That he endeavors to fasten this character upon the believers and teachers of "No future life out of Christ," we doubt not: as he styles them false teachers, and classes them among the unjust. The writer uses the language of John the Baptist to prove that the wicked dead will live again. The words are found in Matt. iii. 7. "O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?" As this language is spoken to the Sadducees and Pharisees, he argues that they must be raised from the dead at the end of the world; they must be classed among the unjust who are reserved to the day of judgment to be punished. He asks, "What wrath is spoken of? is this death? the destruction of Jerusalem? No. When will this wrath come? at the end of the world. This is under the sixth seal." Thus the writer would seek to hide from view other days of judgment and wrath, which have been executed. John was fulfilling the mission of Malachi's Elijah. His object was to turn the hearts of the people into the testimonies of the fathers. He beheld the corruptness of their hearts; that they would not yield, and the curse would come as Malachi had declared. Says the prophet, "Remember the law of Moses.... with all the statutes and judgments." Let us read Lev. xxvi. "But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments....I will do this unto you; I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague....And if ye will not be reformed by me, by these things, but will walk contrary unto me, I will send the pestilence among you, and ye shall be delivered into the hands of the enemy....and ye shall eat the flesh of your sons and the flesh of your daughters....I will destroy your high places ....and make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation....and ye shall perish among the heathen."

These are the statutes and judgments and laws which the Lord made between him and the children of Israel in Mount Sinai, by the hand of Moses. The apostle says, that tribulation and anguish upon every soul of man that doeth evil, of the Jew first, and also of the Gentile. As many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law. In Matt. xxiii., Jesus is speaking to the same class, Sadducees and Pharisees. He says to them, "Ye serpents, ye generations of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of gehenna?" After thus denouncing them, he adds for being the persecutors of the just, that upon that generation should come all the blood from Abel to Zacharias: and concludes by giving the judgment: "O Jerusalem....your house is left unto you desolate." When will the desolation come? Luke xxi. "When ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation thereof is nigh....for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon the people." At the seige of Jerusalem the sons and daughters were eaten, as Moses said. They were led captive into all nations to perish among the heathen. God delivered his people. Not a christian perished, says the historian. It needed no resurrection of wicked to fulfil the language of Christ or John the Baptist.

The same writer cites 2 Peter ii. False teachers also must be raised to be judged. Peter no doubt refers to the class of apostate christians. Such were and are the same as Paul's mystery of iniquity; and are the same as noticed in Rev., upon which the vials of wrath are poured. Six are already poured out; the seventh, the last, in which is filled up the wrath of God, is next. The Gentile church sheds the blood of saints and prophets, as did the Jewish; and God gives them blood to drink. Seven vials of wrath, in which is filled up the wrath of God, and no resurrection of any upon whom they come is noticed. Soon shall the last judgment draught be given, and Babylon shall sink to rise no more. The last great plague or trouble is at hand; and of which deliverance will come to every one whose name is written in the Book of life.

We may be reviled because we believe God's word; but we must not revile again. God shall be our Judge. Said one of the teachers of the Crisis school, "If that be the case," meaning non-resurrection to the wicked, "let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." Thus virtually saying, if the wicked were not to be tormented a little after death in a future life, it would not hardly pay for the self-denial here.

Blessed kingdom of God: for thee I wait, not needing any torment to drive me into it. Love prompted the blessed God to offer it. Love for it leadeth me to seek with all my heart an entrance.

The truth is progressing. The day star will appear soon. Then truth will become more apparent to every one that believeth. Here we see in part. But a fulness is promised. Glory to God. Then no lover of Jesus will have sharp words of contention to wound a a member of the same body on account of weakness in discerning truth. O thou fountain of wisdom, come: let the watchman see eye to eye; bring again Zion; appear in thy glory. Anointed LIFE-GIVER, creation groans; all nature sigheth with Israel for deliverance. O, when will the discordant jarrings cease? Here "I grieve the friends I love, and they in turn grieve me." O Jerusalem, come; bring the throne of God and the Lamb. Let mine eye behold the river, the streams whereof shall make glad the city of our God, the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High. Beauteous garden with thy fragrant flowers; there, 'mid never-dying evergreen, shall the tree of life appear; more beautiful, more delicious. No cherubim to keep the way; no flaming sword. Eat, ye saved milions, never to die. But best of all, Jesus, blessed resurrection, in the glory of the increate, "the God of the whole earth shall he be called." Cheer the pilgrims. Let brotherly love continue. Life from the dead to all the faithful. Amen.

New Britain, Conn.

Letters and Extracts.

From Helen Robertson.

ALEXANDRIA, VA., April 12th, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Your few lines in the last HERALD OF LIFE make me think that perhaps I have been too neglectful lately in writing for the paper. It has not been, I trust, on account of a lack of devotion to the blessed Master we love, or for His cause. No, nor a lack of interest in the work here; but the spring months have been exceedingly trying, and the faithful discharge of my daily duties has often seemed about all I could do. The climate here is very trying; and, besides, Alexandria is considered an unhealthy location. However, we do not feel at all like complaining or giving up, but hoping for the best. My school still continues large and interesting; and fully compares with any one here. My great desire, ever since engaging in this work, has been to teach these people so that they shall be able to read the word of God for themselves; and in doing so, be led intelligently to know the glorious truth which makes free. The Lord blesses me very much in my school, and I see the leaven beginning to work. There is a softened, submissive feeling pervading my school, and a tenderness when I talk to them of the love of Jesus. It would be an easy matter for almost any one to come among this people and excite a great deal of emotional feeling, which would soon subside; but it is a different thing, altogether, to educate them properly and get them to thinking, and so to find the truth of the gospel of our salvation. Great wisdom is needed; but we know where to go to get it. Still we would say, "Brethern pray for us."

I am rather surprised to see a letter from Br. L. C. Thorne, dated at St. Augustine, Florida. The thought has just come to me, I hope Leonard will visit Alexandria on his way home. Still, I suppose it would be entirely out of his way. I am glad he is going over the Southern field a little, and will so have an opportunity of knowing the importance of this work. I am well aware that some who are looking for the Lord's near approach, think this an unimportant work, and so have no sympathy, but to such we will only say, the day will declare it.

I have been to Washington to meeting lately, and also visited the advent friends. At first they seemed opposed to our view of the life theme; but now seem really interested. I have given them reading matter on the subject, and with regard to our HERALD OF LIFE they say, "it goes deep into the subject." These last articles of Br. Bishop were so good; also sister B.'s and Brn. Grim and Wendell on the mortal resurrection. I do hope they will continue their articles regularly; also Br. W. S. Campbell.

Mr. Boynton, the Chaplain of the House of Representatives, in Washington, has been preaching somewhat on the Lord's near coming. A few of us went to hear him last Sunday. He did not say much on the subject; still referred to it. Also the resurrection. I intend to seek an opportunity to talk with him on the subject. Inclosed find one dollar, with an address, for six months of the paper.

From Emeline Wood.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 8, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—My last week's paper failed to reach me. Be so kind as to send me one. I could hardly believe it would be such a loss. I count the hours after Thursday morning for it to come, and think more about it than about my food. May our Father in heaven make it just such a blessing wherever it goes as He has to me. Glory be to God for such blessings as the HERALD OF LIFE contains; and I wish it may prove a savor of life wherever it goes. I pray that God may accompany the word of truth with his Holy Spirit, and may fruit be produced to the honor and glory of God an hundred fold. I would send the paper all round the world if I had the means. A man, to whom I sent it some months since, in the State of Maine, writes to his daughter, in this city, that he is going to subscribe for it; he thinks it next to his Bible. He sends it all round to his children and neighbors, and it has proved a great blessing to that community. O, that the starving poor, for the bread of life, could be fed by sending the HERALD to them. If those who spend so much money in useless trimmings for their dresses, would use that money to send this messenger to such, they might be the means of preventing much sin and suffering; for it seems wherever this paper goes it makes people feel as though they must live pure to see God. I feel that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin. The man to whom I sent the paper, in Maine, is over 80 years old; and I am so glad it was sent to him, he enjoys it so much, and it is doing so much good among his neighbors. I want bigotry, superstition, and idolatry banished from the land, and the truth and love of God and our Saviour to be taught, and I think it is in the HERALD OF LIFE, and the Tracts, also. May we all attain to that love and goodness of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ that we may be partakers of the glory of that innumerable company spoken of by the Revelator.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

GRAFTON, ILL., April 4, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Truth is gaining ground: the enemy is fast receeding. We have stormed his stronghold and have driven him from his hiding places, until it seems, if honest, they would capitulate. But no; like a drowning man, clinging to a straw, they have resorted to the most absurd idea that was ever invented. It caps the climax of folly. It is the blasphemy of charging God with vindictiveness in raising all the wicked dead to torment them and kill them again.

We were much pleased with several articles in the last HERALD. One from Br. Grim, headed "Mortal Resurrection;" the contents of which is enough to make the advocates of such a blasphemous doctrine blush, if capable of it. Alas, for them. Br. Wendell's, also, with the same heading, is to the point. Go on Br. Rufus. Charge well; fire forcibly, and soon they will have to ground the weapons of their rebellion. Judge HALSTED's 84 pounder makes some of the clay-daubed walls shake. Glory to God, we want to kill them, and we mean to do it by the help of the Lord; for the weapons of our warfare are not carnal but spiritual, and mighty through God in pulling down the strongholds of sin. Amen.

Well, here is my beloved Br. W. S Campbell's article before me, which I have read we much interest. We have long had the same view on the judgment. To talk of general judgment, to prove the resurrection of the wicked, is not in harmony with the Bible; therefore it must fall like all other false theories.

Well, we must close; but not without a word or two on the definite time theory. We indorse Br. "W. M.'s" view on setting time, as uncalled for, and rather presumptuous. We feel very confident that our blessed Lord is coming soon, and would be glad to have it take place this year. Let us all be ready, is the all-important point. I must express my gratitude to Br. Homo for the article on prayer; for we have long been of the opinion that long, fine-spun prayers were not so acceptable with God as short, pointed prayers; and in every place, through the day, and on our pillow, we can ask our Father for just what he is pleased to give; and he will, if we ask in faith.

S. A. KEMP, Florida, Mass., writes:—I send $2 to pay for the HERALD OF LIFE for the poor sister, Springfield, Ills.

Thus has the Lord heard this sister's "knocking on" Him.—ED. HER.

S. COOPER, Windsor, Conn., writes:—As it was some twenty years ago with the doctrine of the unconscious state of the dead, the more I heard and examined, the clearer was the light, until it became to my mind a fixed truth, or a fact. So it is now in these days in relation to the non-resurrection of the wicked dead. Although I thought, some years ago, I was convicted by the word and spirit of truth, yet the last few months have more fully accomplished the work of settling in my mind the fact of its truthfulness and admirableness. I rejoice that you have been enabled to take and maintain the position you have in vindicating and disseminating light upon these important points. Your brother, looking to the resurrection through Jesus.

REMARK BY THE EDITOR:—We never took our present position on the resurrection question till after years of investigation and strong opposition to it; and we saw clearly, that, if our view of man's natural mortality was true, it inevitably drew after it the non-revival of the wicked dead. And we do candidly say, that, in our opinion, not an honest man in christendom, can long hold the view that man is not inherently immortal, without being led to embrace the inevitable conclusion that none but those in Christ will live from the dead, "at the last day."

DR. JOHN BILLINGS, New Rutland, Ills., writes:—I have been preaching in this state since last December; have had a good hearing. The doctrine of life only in Christ has taken such root in this part of the state that it cannot be pulled up by the semi-torment folks. They are stirred all through; but it is of no use: it must and will go: for God is at the foundation. I think we will have some new subscribers after a little while: so be patient. The prospect is brighter than it ever has been. We want some strong, stirring arguments on the resurrection and judgment, and the foolishness of what some call a "mortal resurrection." Some of you, who can write well, take these subjects in hand and show them up from the bottom. Several have done well, but don't stop. Yours for the truth.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The "mortal resurrection" doctrine is a "mortal" sin against God and truth. We think this has been abundantly shown; but some men cannot have their "foolishness" taken out of them, though you should "beat them with a pestle in a mortar." Was not Solomon right?

E. D. HUTCHINSON, Corinna Centre, Maine, sends for tracts and writes:—I received a letter last week from my cousin, living in —— to whom I requested you to send "LIFE FROM THE DEAD." She speaks of it, and says it proves that the wicked dead are eternally dead; and says she hopes it is the true doctrine, for it shows the character of God most perfectly She sees the force of the language and is willing to investigate the subject. She is feeble in health, not able to be about, and reads a great deal. I think she will embrace the doctrine, for she claims the right to think for herself, although a member of the C. Baptist church. I think she is a real christian.

CHARLES HOPE, Abbott's Corner, C. E., writes:—I send $2 to make my subscription $4 for the volume. I hope the good Lord will continue to me and you his supporting grace in afflictions and bereavements we have passed through, or may be called to pass; and and then, afterwards, may we rejoice over all in immortality, eternal life, through Jesus Christ, our Lord.

I think the HERALD OF LIFE grows better and better, fast. I like it better than ever I did. Your brother, longing for eternal life through the LIFE-GIVER.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The events of the week at home are merely of a local interest, excepting, perhaps, the consummation of the treaty by which the United States becomes possessed of Russian America, at a cost of $7,000,000 in gold. The territory is immense in extent, but covers regions of perpetual snow and ice, and on that account is not regarded with much favor by the public generally. The politicians who completed the bargain, by their unanimity, must have thought it of more importance, and as their position gives them the better opportunity of deciding the merits of the bargain, we conclude it will ultimately be accepted by the people as a good stroke of policy.

The effort to stay the enforcement of the Military Reconstruction Bill made through the Supreme Court has been defeated. The movement met with little favor at the South; even those outlawed by its provisions are urging acquiescence as the only escape for the South from its present state of anarchy and destitution. The better day is dawning on that sorely-chastised region.

The United States present to the world a noble example in having reduced their National Debt no less than two hundred and nine millions of dollars during the year ending on the 21st inst.

FOREIGN.

The matter of absorbing interest relating to foreign affairs, just now, is the game being played by Napoleon and Bismarck for the controlling supremacy in European affairs. The world has before this learned to admire the bold and dazzling policy of Count Bismarck. His conflict with the Prussian Parliament, the management of the Schleswig-Holstein war, the secession of Prussia from the German Confederation, the declaration of war against Austria, the establishment of the new German Confederation—all these moves filled the world with amazement at the boldness in which they were conceived, and at the rapidity with which they were executed. Thousands of both friends and foes expected that some or every one of these enterprises would prove a crushing failure; but these anticipations have not been realized. It was found that Bismarck could make good calculations as well as bold moves, and thus he has gradually come to be looked upon as the ablest as well as the boldest statesman of Europe. But never in his brilliant career in the past has Bismarck so surprised the world as he has recently by an act which, only a year ago, would have been deemed rash even to folly. He has called upon the Emperor of France in peremptory language for an explanation of his armaments, and for their immediate cessation, and to notify him that he will be held responsible for all the consequences, is an unreserved challenge to France for the leadership in the politics of Continental Europe. Thus far Napoleon has in every great European complication assumed the air of being the honorary head of the European State system, and the arbiter of all European conflicts. He deemed it his business to interfere in the Crimean war in behalf of Turkey, and, in 1859, in behalf of Italy. He called a European Congress on the Schleswig-Holstein question, accepted from Austria the cession of Venetia in order to transfer it to Italy, and insisted on the establishment of the Main frontier. Though not loved or esteemed by other monarchs, he made himself feared. His partisans of late have had some difficulty in explaining his failure in Mexico, and on the German question. Will they be able to concoct any explanation if Napoleon conforms to the humiliating orders of Bismarck? Napoleon has publicly declared the possession of Luxemburg to be indispensably necessary for France; he has extorted from the Dutch Government the promise to sell it; he has refused to release Holland from this promise when she desired to take it back; he has begun to arm in order to enforce his demands. Now Prussia requires him not only to abandon all expectations of annexation, but to give an explanation of his armaments, and to cease them immediately. Will it be possible for the Emperor to comply with these orders, directly or indirectly, without suffering in reputation more than he has suffered by any previous act of his Government? Napoleon, and with him France, must chafe under the Prussian note. But will the Emperor risk a war? He is unprepared: Bismarck is fully prepared, and knows his vantage, which enables him to press his arbitrary demand and in any event to insure the humiliating overthrow of his adversary.

The Times Berlin correspondent says: In Berlin and all Germany, Count Bismarck has reached the highest step in the ladder of renown in consequence of divulging the secret treaties. Indeed, the merest glance at the situation in which he managed to secure these important arrangements is enough to bring out his diplomatic energy and skill in strong relief. Notwithstanding his decided victory in the field, Napoleon's threat to cross the Rhine had obliged him to spare Austria from destruction, and confine his unifying tendencies to the country north of the Main.

TO COMPLAINERS.—We have been called to task on two or three occasions for not publishing a letter from a sister at Middletown, in reply to our article noticing a discussion there on the time question. We have already stated we should have published it if it had been accompanied by the author's name. The name of the writer we learned only when we received a peremptory order to return the article. Censure should be administered on special charges only, sustained by indubitable evidence. W. M.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO FORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

APPOINTMENTS.

RANDOLPH E. LADD will meet with the church in New Britain, Conn., Sunday the 28th inst.

ELD. GEO. W. BROWN will preach in Temple Hall, Groton Junction, Mass., Sunday, April 28th inst.

CONFERENCE IN NEW HAVEN, CONN.—There will be a General Conference of christians, commonly known as Advent believers, at DAY'S HALL, Broadway, New Haven, commencing April 11th, and holding over two Sabbaths to the 22d, inclusive. Elders A. Ross, J. G. Hook, B. Hitchcock, L. Boutell, are invited to preach the word. Brethren from abroad are invited. By order of the church.

Advertisements.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
(A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE,
LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS,
GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
62 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
OFFICE HOURS, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK.

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON,
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 CHAMBERS ST.,
NEW YORK.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each: MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1; in paper covers to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

WHAT IS A YEAR?

What is a year? 'Tis but a wave
On life's dark rolling stream,
Which is so quickly gone that we
Account it but a dream.

'Tis but a single earnest throb
Of Time's old iron heart,
Which tireless is, and strong as when
It first with life did start.

What is a year? 'Tis but a turn
Of Time's old brazen wheel,
Or but a page upon the book
Which death must shortly seal.

'Tis but a step upon the road
Which we must travel o'er;
A few more steps and we shall walk
Life's weary rounds no more.

Anon.

ALL'S WELL.

The day is ended. Ere I sink to sleep
My weary spirit seeks repose in thine;
Father! forgive my tresspasses, and keep
This little life of mine.

With loving kindness curtain Thou my bed;
And cool in rest my burning pilgrim feet:
Thy pardon be the pillow for my head—
So shall my sleep be sweet.

At peace with all the world, dear Lord, and Thee,
No fears my soul's unwavering faith can shake;
All's well! whichever side the grave for me
The morning light may break!

Children's Department.

LED, NOT DRIVEN.

A mother, sitting at her work in her parlor, overheard her child, whom an older sistet was dressing in an adjoining room, say, repeatedly, as if in answer to his sister,—

"No, I don't want to say my prayers."

"How many," thought the mother to herself, "often say the same thing in heart, though they conceal, even from themselves, the feeling!"

"Mother," said the child, appearing in a minute or two at the parlor door—the tone and the look implied that it was only his morning salutation.

"Good-morning, my child."

"I am going out to get my breakfast."

"Stop a minute; I want you to come here and see me first."

The mother laid down her work in the next chair as the boy ran towards her. She took him up. He kneeled in her lap, and laid his face down upon her shoulder, his cheek against her ear. The mother rocked her chair slowly backward and forward.

"Are you pretty well, this morning?" said she, in a kind, gentle tone.

"Yes, mother, I am very well."

"I am very glad you are well. I am very well, too; and when I woke up this morning, and found that I was well, I thanked God for taking care of me."

"Did you?" said the boy, in a low tone, half a whisper. He paused after it. Conscience was at work.

"Did you ever feel my pulse?" asked his mother, after a moment of silence, at the same time taking the boy down and setting him in her lap, and placing his finger on her wrist,

"No, but I have felt mine."

"Well, don't you feel mine now? How steadily it beats!"

"Yes," said the child.

"If it should stop beating, I should die at once."

"Should you?"

"Yes; and I cannot keep it beating."

"Who can?"

"God."

A silent pause.

"You have a pulse, too, which beats in your bosom here, and in your arm, and all over you, and I cannot keep it beating, nor can you. Nobody can but God. If he should not take care of you who could?"

"I don't know, mother," said the child with a look of anxiety; and another pause ensued.

"So, when I woke up this morning, I thought I would ask God to take care of me and all the rest of us."

"Did you ask him to take care of me?"

"Why should I?"

"Because I did not ask him, and I suppose you did."

"Yes, but you should ask him yourself. God likes to have us all ask for ourselves."

A very long pause ensued. The deeply thoughtful and almost anxious expression of countenance, showed that the heart was reached.

"Don't you think you had better ask for yourself?"

"Yes," said the boy, readily.

He kneeled again in his mother's lap, and uttered, in his own simple and broken language, a prayer for the protection and blessing of heaven.

Suppose another case. A mother, overhearing the same words, calls the child into the room. The boy comes.

"Did I not hear you say you did not want to say your prayers?"

The boy is silent.

"Yes, he did," says his sister behind him.

"Well, that is very naughty. You ought always to say your prayers. Go right back now, and say them, like a good boy, and never let me hear of your refusing again."

The boy goes back pouting, and utters the words of prayer, while his heart is full of mortified pride, vexation, and ill-will. Could it not be managed better?—Selected.

CHARLEY'S TRUTHFULNESS.

One twilight hour I was asking my little Charley of his thoughts and feelings about Jesus. He told me in his confiding, truthful way, many precious things which made me rejoice; and "his mother kept all these sayings in her heart." At last he paused, and I saw a shadow on his brow which led me to ask:—

"What is it that troubles you, my son!"

He replied: "I have meant to tell you the truth, mamma, but I am afraid I haven't, God knows it. When I tell you how I feel another time, I will put in 'guess,' or 'I think so,' because you know, mamma, I can't see through myself as God can!"

I bowed my head in gratitude for the child, in humiliation for myself, and these were my heart's desires:

May as tender a regard for perfect truthfulness ever control my every word of tongue and pen! May as judicious a distrust of my own best efforts at self-knowledge ever abide with me! May as practical a realization of God's omniscience ever follow me!—Congregationalist.

THE BIBLE AND ITS TENDENCY.

I have been accustomed to read the Bible myself from my early youth, and I was always accustomed to hear it read daily by my father so long as I lived in my father's house, and I feel persuaded that the influence of the Bible on myself has always been, on the whole, in favor of what is good and god-like.

It led me to think much of God: it led me to regard sin as a great and terrible evil: it led me to see that the wicked were never safe: that sin is sure to end in death; that the righteous are always safe; that goodness is sure to receive its reward. It awakened my conscience. It led me to think of my own ways, and to excuse or condemn myself according as my deeds had been. It linked sin with fear, and righteousness with hope and confidence. It tended thus to keep me from evil, and to draw me to that which was good. It opened to my view eternal life, and taught me to expect, if I lived as I ought, immortality. It led me to believe in a universal providence, and to feel that the affairs of the world were governed by a wisdom and a power that were infinite, everlasting and unchangeable. It was the Old Testament chiefly that I read when I was a child; and it is the effects produced by the Old Testament that I chiefly remember. I must not have understood the New Testament when I was young; or if I did understand it, I have forgotten its effects on me. But I did understand a great part of the Old Testament, and I remember its effects to this hour. And as I have said, its effects were, in general, wholesome, salutary.

What I have said thus far, refers to the days of my childhood. Since I became a man,—aye, ever since I was sixteen years and a half of age, I have read and studied the scriptures more attentively and carefully. I read them and studied them till they were, in general, perfectly familiar to me. I read and studied them till there was scarce a passage on any great subject of truth and duty, but what had been frequently pondered in my mind. And what has been the influence of the scriptures on my mind and character during this latter period of my life? I answer, so far as I can trace their influence, it has been good. So far as I can judge, the scriptures have tended to make me free, and good, and happy. They have, so far as I can judge, tended to make me benevolent, tolerant, gentle. They have, so far as I can judge, tended to raise the spiritual within me above the carnal, the rational above the animal, the divine above the earthly. They have tended to make me strong in self-denial, patient in suffering, resolute in the discharge of duty, bold in the advocacy of truth, firm under reproaches and persecution, zealous in my endeavors to promote the improvement of my fellow-men, peaceful and happy in reliance on God's providence, and in the hopes of everlasting life. They have tended to wean me from foolish indulgences; to make me prize above all things the pleasures of knowledge and benevolence, and to regard a life of purity and charity, a life devoted to the great work of promoting the improvement and welfare of mankind, as the perfection, the glory, and the happiness of mankind. It is true, that dusing this latter period of my life, my mind has been chiefly occupied with the New Testament; still I have not been inattentive to the Old Testament, nor has the Old Testament been without its influence on me during that period. I say, then, that the influence of the scriptures generally upon my own mind has been, so far as I can judge, favorable to piety, to purity, to spirituality, to charity, to goodness in every form.

I grant that my reading during the period to which I refer has not been confined to the scriptures. I have, in addition to the scriptures, read many hundreds, perhaps some thousands of other books. And those other books have do doubt had their influence on me. They have doubtless exerted influences on my mind and character which I cannot trace. They have doubtless had an influence upon the influence which the scriptures themselves have had upon me. They have modified my views of scripture teachings; they have influenced the direction of my mind, causing me to think more on some classes of subjects, and less on others. But those other books which have had the most influence on my mind, have been books impregnated with bible principles and bible influences, so that their influence and the influence of the Bible have, in a great measure, been one.

I may also add, that during almost the whole of that period, from my seventeenth to my fortieth year, I regarded the Bible as wholly divine. I regarded it as the standard of truth and of duty; as the measure of right and wrong, of good and evil. During nearly the whole of that period, I was accustomed to regard the scriptures as my only and infallible guide. I believed the scriptures to contain all truth in regard to religion, and nothing but truth. I regarded them as the word of God, as pure and unmixed revelations from heaven, as a mass of heavenly oracles. I was accustomed to try what I read in other books, as well as what I heard in sermons and conversations, by what I found in the scriptures; rejecting what did not agree with them, as unsound, and receiving what did agree with them as true and good and right. The scriptures were, in a great measure, my one, my only book. It was my king of books. All other books were but servants and subjects to it; it ruled and reigned alone. It was my body of divinity, my system of politics, my code of laws, my infallible historian, my book of science, my all. I consulted it on all subjects; I pondered it on all occasions; I prized it almost infinitely. It is impossible, therefore, but that its influence on my character should be very great. It is impossible but that its influence on my mind must have been greater than that of any other books which I have read. I grant that other books may sometimes have supplied me with ideas which I have put into scripture passages; still, the constant tendency of my studies was to separate from my mind all that was not in harmony with the teachings of the scriptures, and to separate from the scriptures all ideas which were not originally or naturally expressed by them. I regard myself, therefore, as a scriptural creation or formation. So far as a man's moral and religious character can be formed by the scriptures, I consider mine to have been formed or modified by the scriptures. At first it was formed or modified chiefly by the scriptures of the Old Testament; but since, it has been formed or modified chiefly by the scriptures of the New Testament. Both as a thinker and as an actor; both as a theologian, and a man, I regard myself in a very great measure as the production of bible influences. Even to this hour I know no books that harmonize so perfectly with my views and feelings, with my tastes and practices, as the writings which constitute the Bible. I know books which I regard as freer from blemishes; books which I consider more intelligible; books which I consider better adapted for particular purposes; but I know no books of equal size, which so thoroughly express my mind, which so perfectly agree with my views of truth and duty, with my views of God, and man, of providence and immortality. I say I must, therefore, be in a great measure, a Bible production, a scriptural formation.

I am aware that it does not look well to some people for persons to talk about themselves, especially in cases of this description, where a man, in order to make good his point, is obliged to give himself a good word; but I think those people are too particular in their notions of propriety and delicacy. I do not see why a man should not express his opinion about his own character as readily as about other things. I say, then, that I consider myself as being more thoroughly under bible influences, than any other influences whatever, and that yet I am not aware but that a regard to the will of God and the welfare of mankind, a love of truth, of freedom, and of righteousness, are the ruling principles of my life. I am not aware that I live for any other object than to learn and teach the truth, and by the spread of truth to promote the welfare of my fellow creatures. And if any thing at variance with those great and godlike principles springs up or stirs within me, my bible principles at once wage war against it, and will not suffer me to rest till it is mortified or put to death.

Of course I cannot tell for certain how I should have felt, or what I should have thought, if I had been a stranger to the Bible and its influences; but this is as I feel and think at present. But I know others of the same age as myself, who have placed themselves under other influences than those of the Bible; persons who, though they have been preachers, have never given themselves up thoroughly to the study and the practice of bible teachings; and I should not like to be in their stead; I should be exceedingly sorry to have their character. And I know others who have not only given themselves up to the study and practice of bible teaching, but who have given themselves up to the influence of principles opposite to those of the Bible, who are anything, in my judgment, rather than specimens of excellence and happiness. I have no doubt but I am right in regarding myself as formed or moulded by bible influences, and I am certain that if my notions of goodness be correct, the effect of bible influences is good.

But there are other facts which deserve observation. Many of the best men with whom I have had the happiness to be acquainted, have been great readers and great lovers of the Bible. Whether it was their attention to bible teachings that made them good, or their goodness that led them to delight in bible principles and influences, the result is equally in favor of the Bible. If the Bible made them good, the Bible must be good in its tendency; and if it was their goodness that led them to delight in the Bible, there is an affinity between the Bible and goodness; they harmonize: therefore the Bible must be good in its character.

I have further to observe, that I never knew a bad, unprincipled man, a false and selfish man, a proud, a filthy, and malignant man, that did delight in the Bible. I have invariably found such characters despisers, neglecters, or haters of the Bible. I have known many profligate infidels, and they were all haters of the Bible. I have known many profligate priests, and they were the same. Whether men be infidels or priests, if they are selfish, deceitful, proud, filthy, or malignant, they are equally haters of the Bible. There is this difference: the profligate infidel generally lets his hatred of the Bible appear, while the profligate priest labors to conceal his hatred of the Bible, that he may live and grow rich by pretending to teach its principles. But even infidels themselves pretend to love and revere the Bible sometimes, when it suits their interests; and even priests allow their dread and their hatred of the Bible to appear at times. But whether they conceal or avow their hatred of the Bible, the profligate, the bad, whether priests or infidels, will still be found to be despisers or haters of the Bible.

HOMO.

WHAT IS LOVE?

BY ELD. S. L. WALTER.

"God is love:" hence love is the believer's, "Beatitude." 1 John iv. 16; "God is love, and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him." How glorious to be in God, or love; and God, or love, in us. Verse 17. "Herein is our love (or love with us, Mar.) made perfect." This brings us into the likeness of God, and in perfect agreement with him. Paul prayed for the perfection of the church at Thessalonia, in 1 Thes. iii. 12, 13. "And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love one toward another," &c. "To the end he may stablish your heart unblamable in holiness," (or love, this being the grand principle against which there is no law), "before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." John says, that "perfect love casteth out fear." Fear arises from the want of perfection in love. "He that feareth is not made perfect in love." When love reigns, we can say with the poet,

O, 'tis delight without alloy,
Jesus, to hear thy name;
My spirit leaps with inward joy;
I feel the sacred flame.
My passions hold a pleasing reign,
When love inspires my breast,
Love, the divinest of the train,
The sov'reign of the rest.

John says, "Beloved, let us love one another." Why? "Because love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God:" is obedient to the "Royal law, according to the scriptures, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye love one another." How? Jesus tells us, "As I have loved you, that ye also love one another." It is not loving in word but "in deed and in truth." It is not saying, "Be ye clothed, and fed. No: but it is love like that the LIFE-GIVER manifested when he saw us perishing, and said, "Lo I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O, God." He, in love for us, laid down his life for us. We, then, ought to lay down our life for the brethren, and give, hoping for nothing, because that is the way love moves. "But he who hath this world's good, and seeth his brother have need and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Love is a matter-of-fact way; and it will not do for us to talk about our loving God and at the same time hate our brother; because, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?"

The absence of this principle has caused the world not to believe in our holy religion; because they do not see it in the professed churches of God; they are not moving in this grand orbit, where the faithful lovers of God and man describe their course; they continually move round the orb of day. God is their centre, and their source; and like David, they say, "Thou shalt guide me by thy counsel, and afterward receive me to glory," and, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee."

It is love that gives the assurance that we shall not be held under the power of corruption, because we can say, "We know" (not guess or hope; but know) "that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." See, it is the way. "He that loveth not his brother abideth in death." Then he cannot live again; thank God; not even to be killed a second time. If he "abideth in death," the reason is very obvious. "Whosoever hateth (or does not love) his brother is a murderer, and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life (or a life-giving principle) abiding in him." No: ye need not marvel "if the world hate you." Why? Because as Cain was, so are the world, "their works are evil." Hence, it is no marvel that they do not love us, therefore they are "the children of the devil," or darkness. "He that loveth his brother abideth in the light." That is, in God; for "God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." Hence, "if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son, cleanseth us from all sin;" "and there is none occasion of stumbling in him." No: because, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore it is the fulfilling of the law."

What is love? It is that which gives assurance of the "kingdom." James says, "Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath promised to them that love him?" And also, that "crown of life which is promised to them that love him." So we see what love is. It is to be happy and have a glorious hope of an eternal weight of glory, an assurance that we are in God; the way to obtain life from the dead, through the LIFE-GIVER. Who? "He that loveth me, shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him." And again, "if a man love me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him."

O, for this love let rocks and hills,
Their lasting silence break;
And all harmonious human tongues
The Saviour's praises speak.
Angels, adjust our mighty joys;
Strike all your harps of gold;
But when you raise your highest notes,
His love can ne'er be told.

Hornsby, Ill.

THE SONG OF THE SAVED.

"And they sing a new song, saying: Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals of it; for thou wert slain, and redeemedest us to God by thy blood, out of every tribe and tongue, and people, and nation, and thou madest us unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."—Rev. v. 9, 10 (Revised Text).

Some people tell us that it is quite too low and coarse a thing to think of the earth in connection with the final bliss of the saints. They preach that we do but degrade and pervert the exalted things of holy scripture, when we hint the declaration of the wise man, that "the earth endureth forever," and that over it the glorious and everlasting kingdom of Christ and his saints is to be established in literal reality. But if the ransomed in heaven, with golden crowns upon their brows, kneeling at the feet of the Lamb, before the very throne of God, and with the prayers of all saints, and predictions of all prophets in their hands, could sing of it as one of the elements of their loftiest hopes and joys, I beg to turn a deaf ear to the surly cry of "carnal"—"sensual"—"unspiritual"—with which some would turn me from the "blessed hope." Shall the saints in glory shout, "We shall reign on the earth," and we be accounted heretics for believing that they knew what they were saying? Is it come to this that to be orthodox we must believe that these approved and crowned ones kneel before the throne of God with a lie upon their lips? Shall they, from thrones in heaven, point to earth as the future theatre of their administrations, and give adoring thanks and praises to the Lamb for it, and we be stigmatized as fanatics and Judaizers, for undertaking to pronounce the blessed fact in mortal hearing? Oh, I wonder, I wonder, how the dear God above us can endure the unbelief with which some men deal with His holy word.

Shall we, then, keep silence on the subject? When the living ones and elders fail to sing about it in heaven; when inspired apostles no longer admit the subject into their holy writings; then, but not till then, let it be dropped from the discourses of our sanctuaries, and from the inculcations of them that fear God. And woe, woe, to that man who is convinced of its truth, but, for the sake of place or friendship, refrains from confessing it! Well has it been said of him: "He barters away his kingdom for the applause of men. He eclipseth the glory of Christ to enhance his own." He stultifieth the adoring songs of celestial kings, that he may win a little empty favor by base pandering to the pleasures of an ignorant, unbelieving, and godless world.—Lectures on the Apoc., pp. 291–2.

A FRAGMENT.

[Written July 10, 1862.]

To return to dust and remain there forever—to die and live no more—this is the mighty peril of our race in consequence of sin. This truth is clearly set forth in the fifteenth chapter of first Corinthians. "If Christ be not raised," says the apostle, "your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins"—language by which, as Professor HUDSON truly remarks (Debt and Grace, p. 176), "he evidently meant that if there were no resurrection they were still subject to death, as the consequence of sin; there was NO FUTURE LIFE for them." And that death without any future life is "the consequence" of sins unforgiven, is the only inference which, touching this point, is deducible from Paul's further statement (1 Cor. xv. 18), "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Is it replied that this doom is predicated of the assumption that Christ is not raised? We answer: the non-resurrection of Christ is not here presented as the primary reason why there could be for humanity no release from the embrace of death. If we say that it is, we overlook the relation to the argument of the declaration, "ye are yet in your sins." It is sin that imparts to death its fatal, damning power; hence the apostle declares, "The sting of death is sin" (1 Cor. xv. 56). If "sting," in this passage, does not mean the power by which death retains his victim in his embrace eternally, we can conceive of no rational sense which the word could be made to bear. Who will undertake to show that it has some other meaning? We solicit a response from some person holding the view that the wicked dead are doomed to the curse of a miserable temporary future life. To return: We say, therefore, that sin stands between mankind and their attainment of any future life, and that death must hold us forever unless our sins are taken away. Here comes in the blessed work of redemption through Christ Jesus. Through faith in His blood we may have pardon, purity and deliverance from death. Our sins being forgiven, and we justified, the imperative reason why we must perish is taken out of the way. God can now be just and yet grant us deliverance from "the bondage of corruption," even life everlasting. But this deliverance, by His divine pleasure, is to flow to us through the medium of His beloved Son, our Lord Jesus Christ. If, however, Jesus did not rise from the dead, we were never pardoned; and, more than this, the only appointed LIFE-GIVER is himself not alive! Sin was our disease—death the result. Infinite love provided a physician, and "in him was life." But we could never partake ourselves of this life if He were not "alive forever more." While, therefore, it is true that the resurrection of Christ is the basis upon which rests the believer's hope of life from the dead, the previous fact, and that which appealed to the benevolence of God, was this, that in consequence of sin we were, as a race, exposed to the danger of forever perishing out of existence.

R. W.

Severe shocks of earthquakes were felt in Santiago de Cuba on the 23d ult. There was a heavy fall of hail preceded by a rainstorm of short duration, which caused some damage to the sugar plantations, and the next day a great many birds were found dead. In some places the ground was covered with hail to the depth of two inches. Advices from Cardenas speak of the same phenomena on the same day. The hailstones weighed two ounces each.

The liberal party in the English Parliament have at length announced their intention with regard to the Reform bill introduced by the Government. At a recent meeting, they resolved to offer a determined opposition, and to bring it to a test vote as soon possible. They confidently expect the defeat of the Ministry, who, in that case, will tender their resignations.

Mr. Manning has stated that the Ritualists "have taken out of the hands" of the Romish priesthood "the labor of contending for Romanism."

The Italian Ministry have tendered their resignations to the King, and a new Ministry will be formed.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the ine of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use al available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Chris alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a wo-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subcribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy or their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"GEO. STORRS,
BOX 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 170. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 28.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fourth Story, Room 22), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

A CURIOUS LETTER.

The following letter was written to one who had been engaged in battling for truth against various errorists, and had endeavored to organize churches that should be free from sectarianism; but was exceeding fond of "challenging" his opponents to "discussion," as some sincere ones are in these days. The writer of this letter, after referring to several efforts at reform in which his friend had been engaged, proceeds as follows:

The next time I met you was at Free Church Organization, a little city, built on a sandy foundation, in the land of Perplexity. The inhabitants of this place were reared in the land of Sect, and banished from that country on account of their opinions. They talk much about liberty, but few of them understand the meaning of the term. They speak against Sectarianism, but it is too often in the spirit of Sect. They decry all human authority, but often desire, in some measure, to control their brethren. You appeared to be very much perplexed with this people, and I have since heard that you had thoughts of leaving the place altogether, and sailing for the land of Liberty.

The last time I saw you was at a village called Christian Sociality, in the neighborhood of Free Church Organization. I was led to visit this place, by a report that the manners and customs of the people were the same as in the land of Liberty. When I arrived, I found the inhabitants all neatly dressed, with bright shoes, clean hands, and smiling faces. They talked of love and liberty, of brotherly kindness and charity, with such earnestness, that I had almost concluded that what I had heard was truth. But I looked, and behold they were eating the bread of self-indulgence, and drinking the life blood of the poor. When they had finished their repast, one of them stood up and said, "I propose that we make us a king to rule over us." One or two free spirits objected to this, but the multitude cried, Nay, but we will have a king, like all other people. So they made them a king, and erected a throne, on which he took his seat, amidst general acclamation. A number of chosen ones were then invited to court, and took their seats on the right and left of the throne, whose business it was to harangue the inhabitants by his Majesty's permission. They read addresses, and moved resolutions, they made long speeches, and heaped honors one upon another, while the people clapped their hands, and stamped their feet, and seemed by their actions to say, these are not men, but gods. At length you arose and said, Brethren, I propose that we all agree to honor the King for his able conduct on the throne; and all with one consent again clapped their hands, and cried, "So let it be." At this moment I awoke, as from a fit of forgetfulness. I remembered that I was born in the land of Liberty. I upbraided myself as a traitor to my country, and left the place determined either to find my native land or perish in the attempt.

After this I visited the land of Thought, where I travelled for some weeks, not knowing which way to turn, when one day a person put into my hand a little book, written within and without and on all sides; from this book I learned that you had been spending the last three months of your time at Theological Debate. This place is governed by two kings and an emperor. Those kings have each a privy council to assist him in ruling the people, but the emperor's word is absolute, and unalterable as the laws of the Medes and Persians. The inhabitants are divided into two great clans or factions, each having an oracle chosen to be the mouth-piece of its opinions.

While reading this little book, I felt a strange weariness seize my frame, my eyelids became heavy, and I fell into a deep sleep and dreamed a dream. Methought I was in a large cemetery or burial ground, where there were a great number of persons of both sexes walking among the tombs. I was pleased with the people's appearance, but was dissatisfied at being found walking among the dead; I therefore left them and walked alone, thinking about my native country. All at once I felt myself lifted from the earth by some unperceived attraction, and carried as on the wings of the wind I know not whither. At length I alighted on a beautiful plain, where were growing all kinds of useful fruits, corn, and vegetables. This plain was bounded on the east by a narrow river; on the west was a high hill, on which I could perceive a village, but saw no inhabitants.

Hearing myself accosted, I turned round, and saw one approaching me with a smiling countenance, to whom I addressed myself in the following words: "My friend, I am desirous to know the name of the place where I now stand." "This," said he, "is the land of Liberty, the place where you were born. The name of this plain is Peace; that narrow river is called Death; on its opposite bank is the gate of Glory. Before you is the mountain of Perfect Freedom. Yon village you see on the top of it is Free Speech; it contains the whole of the inhabitants of the country, who, though they are few in number, are, nevertheless, exceedingly happy. They acknowledge but one King and lawgiver, even the Lord Jehovah. They have no governor or president; they have no chosen oracle, but each speaks his own thoughts at all times and in every place; they live in love and freedom, and have all things common."

At this moment my companion seemed to fix his eyes upon the little book, which I still held in my hand; seeing which, I immediately gave it to him. He had no sooner looked upon it than he appeared to be acquainted with its contents. "This book," said he, "is called the history of the city of Theological Discussion; but that is a fictitious title: the real name of that city is Party Strife; it lies far away in the back settlements of the land of Sect; it has a strange kind of government and the inhabitants are the wickedest and most inconsistent people on the face of the earth. They will acknowledge the authority of governments, and pledge themselves by solemn oath to passive obedience, and pay a tax in token of their servility, and the same hour they will exhibit fiery wrath, they will clap and stamp like madmen, shout and roar like wolves, and hiss like serpents—they will rise in rebellion, dethrone their kings, and banish the emperor, and turn the city into one great mass of perjured confusion. Then they will subside and restore their kings, and elect another emperor, and again take the oath of allegiance, and pledge themselves to silence and inactivity, but it is only to prove that

'They who swear will lie:
While the truthful tongue needs but to speak,
And credit's given.'"

"But tell me," said I, "what is the reason that my friend should spend so much time in such a strange place."

"Know, then," said he, "that your friend is a good, but fallible man. He strongly desires the salvation and happiness of the human race, and he believes that in order to this, it is necessary to refute the errors of orthodoxy, and spread the simple truth as it is in Jesus."

"But," said I, "why choose such an unfavorable position."

"This," said he, "is the effect of a certain fever which he caught while in the land of Sect, which makes him impatient of being heard, and, not satisfied with the privilege of speaking his own thoughts at all times, he is ever and anon challenging those of opposite sentiments to meet him in discussion."

"But is there no way of curing him of this infirmity?" said I.

"There is one way to benefit that good man," said he, "for although he is bold and unflinching before the face of his enemies, yet he is flexible as a little child towards those who who seek his good.

"You must invite him to the land of Liberty, and tell him to ascend to the very summit of the mountain of Perfect Freedom, where he will find a brazen serpent erected upon a pole; here he must forget all that ever he saw or heard in all his life—he must forget both the works of reformers, the lives and writings of the fathers, and the acts of the apostles, and fix his eyes upon that brazen serpent—he must look steadfastly, observe every shade, and recognize every feature, at the same time, taking good heed to the motions of his own heart.

"He must then take up his abode at the village of Free Speech, and never leave it more. And assure him from me, that that is the most favorable position in which to labor for the salvation of the world. Here, instead of reading old books and musty parchments, and telling old men's stories, he may speak the living truth of God from its fountain in his own soul. Instead of being shut up in a narrow room, with angry, prejudiced, and perjured hearers, he may speak to all the world. His voice will become like a trumpet, and sound through all the earth, and penetrate the soul of every human being.

He'll shake the despot stern and hoary
Till he totter on his blood-cemented throne,
And tell in the warrior's ear the story
Of days when deeds of blood shall be unknown.

"Thousands will be aroused and emigrate to the land of Liberty. Priests and hypocrites will rave, and speak evil, but tell him to heed them not; if they wish for discussion, let them come to the village of Free Speech.

'For truth can never fight
Unless it's free.
'Tis falsehood's work to fetter,
Then claim the victory.'

"It is true he will often have to walk on the brink of this river, and will undoubtedly at last be plunged into it, but he has nothing to fear, for I have a commission from the Most High, to attend him in all his faithful movements, and never leave him till he be landed safe in the land of Beulah, where there is fulness of joy and pleasures for evermore. And a number of shining ones are commanded to watch over his wife and children; the hairs of their heads are all numbered, and nothing can harm them, if found faithful to the truth."

With this I awoke, and determined to write the vision.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—We confess that "vision" so well corresponds with our feelings in relation to "challenges for public discussions" that we thought best to publish it, even if some expressions in it are not quite accurate. We do not feel exactly willing to condemn all public discussions, or debatings, yet we have always feared they would engender or perpetuate strife, rather than promote truth. We speak especially in reference to public oral debates, where there are always two parties, each anxious that their champion should get the victory, rather than the truth should be promoted. Let the spread and triumph of truth be our object; so shall we please God and benefit our fellow men.

MAN'S NATURE.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

[Concluded from last week.]

If God accepted Christ as our substitute, why are we compelled to go too? Take an illustration. In the late war, in this country, by a law of Congress every man who would furnish a substitute was exempted from going to the war himself. Now suppose you or I had, according to the provisions of that law, furnished our substitute; that substitute had been accepted by the government, and mustered into the service; would it be just, after all this, to force us to go into the war? All will answer, No. "And shall not the judge of all the earth do right?" Will he accept Christ as our substitute, with respect to the Adamic penalty, "to die in our stead," and then let us die just as much as though no such plan had been devised? Away with such inconsistencies. The law reads, "The soul that sinneth IT shall die;" not somebody die for it. But says one, we did not sin; it was Adam who sinned. Don't be too fast, brother. Let us hear Paul. Rom v. 12. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon ALL MEN, for that ALL have sinned." Not merely Adam is found in this difficulty, but, according to Paul, every man of Adam's race. But, says one, I cannot see how I had anything to do with Adam's sin. Well, one thing is certain, Paul teaches us that by that first transgression every child of Adam is made guilty before, and brought under condemnation of the law of God. And it was in this sense he, Adam, was our representative. And he represented us faithfully, too. He had our nature, with all its promptings, its intuitions and propensities. And when he transgressed he did just as any and every one of us would have done had we been there to act for ourselves. We are possessed of that very nature that sinned: and the life of that nature is our only life as children of Adam. That life, let it be found where it may, whether in Noah, Lot, Abraham, or Paul, or in you or me, or even in Christ, is forfeited to the law. And the law will have its dues. What life did Christ lay down? Surely it was not his spiritual life. It must have been the Adamic life. Now until it can be shown that the blood, or Adamic life of Christ was not forfeited to the law of God, it will be vain to talk about his death being a substitute for the death of the race of Adam. Christ, in laying down his life, did so as our example. He showed us in that example just what the law demands, and just how we must all satisfy the demands of that law. He showed us that the law of God is just in all its demands. And that we must all, without an exception, yield implicitly to its claims. That there is no hope that we shall escape its grasp, and thereby either have this life perpetuated or restored. Death, or its equivalent, to all of Adam's race is just as inevitable as God's law is immutable. And whenever the race of Adam, either one or all of them, have given up this Adamic life, the law is satisfied. Satisfied with respect to the race; satisfied as respects every individual of that race. Satisfied because its demands are fully met: it has received to the last jot all that it ever claimed.

But satisfying the law does not save those concerning whom it is satisfied. After a man, under the death penalty has been hanged till he is dead, the law, whose penalty has been inflicted on him, is certainly satisfied. All its demands have been fully met, and fully satisfied. But this does not save the man. When we come so far on, in our investigations, we begin to see the need of a Christ. We see plainly that unless there is some way of escape beside a restoration of the Adamic life, we can never come out from death's dominion.

The question now arises, What saves us? Is it the death of Christ? I answer, Christ might have died ten thousand times, and if he had done nothing more, all of Adam's race are eternally lost in death. But says one, We are redeemed by the blood of Christ. But in what sense? Not in the sense of giving us a future life. Christ took on him our nature. The life of that nature is in the blood. God made Christ exactly suited to the purpose for which he sent him into the world. He endowed him with a life which he knew was forfeited to his law. This was necessary in order that he do what God designed he should do, viz., make known to a lost race the conditions of a reconciliation. How did Christ become reconciled to the law? By giving to the law just what belonged to it. This he did on our account, as our example. Now I believe this, through faith in this great transaction I see how I am to be reconciled to the law. Paul says, Rom v. 10, For if, when we were enemies, we were reconciled by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life. But says one, The sinner is just as much reconciled to the law as the righteous. I answer, Not so. It is true, when the sinner is dead he owes nothing to the law; but there is a difference between owing the law nothing and being reconciled to the law. To illustrate; I owe a man one thousand dollars. It is all I possess in the world; and I am determined he shall never have it. But by a process of law he compels me to pay the last farthing. His demands are satisfied, but there is no reconciliation. But another man owes the same amount. He has an upright heart. Of his own choice he goes to his creditor and pays him all he owes him. He does it cheerfully because he knows the demand is just. There is a perfect state of reconciliation between these two men. This, to my mind, illustrates exactly how the believer is reconciled to the law of God. But how came he to see this plan of reconciliation? I answer, he believes in Christ, and believing in Christ, the great example, he sees how Christ satisfied the demands of a holy and just law, and he gladly embraces this alternative, lays down, cheerfully gives up this mortal, corruptible life; for still believing, he looks to the great pattern, and he sees a better life beyond. But Christ is not only our example, or pattern, but also our representative. And like as Adam the first represented the race in the fall, so, in the restoration from the fall, Christ represents, stands for, all that believe.

This leads us to another text. Rom. v. 19. "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners, so by the obedience of one many shall be made righteous." A great deal has been said and written on "imputed righteousness." The popular idea of imputed righteousness is this: Christ was possessed of a superabundance of righteousness; more than he needed for himself, and he made it over to us as I would give to the destitute what I did not need myself. I object to this view for several reasons: among them is the following; I cannot conceive how any being can be more than righteous. Again, I think it is contrary to the revealed divine arrangement. Paul says, Abraham believed God, and it was accounted (imputed) to him for righteousness. This is the only bible doctrine of imputed righteousness. The question arises, in what sense were many made sinners by Adam's disobedience? The only answer that can be given is, that by Adam's transgression the very nature he transmitted to us and in which he represented us, was made a sinful nature. I repeat, the sin was in the nature. Following this principle, if we are ever made righteous, it must be by becoming possessed of a righteous nature. Paul says, we are saved by the life of Christ. What is the life of Christ? I answer, "This is the record, that God hath given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." The only life that is peculiarly the Christ life, is spiritual life. This life we are made partakers of by faith. The philosophy of it is this: Faith is, according to Paul, believing God's word. The word of God is wholly spiritual in its character. "My words they are spirit, and they are life." Christ. But we cannot believe the word of God in a manner to constitute that belief genuine faith, only as we believe through the agency and power of the Holy Spirit. Genuine faith then is wholly spiritual in its character.

The change that is wrought in us by this believing must of course be a spiritual change. So this is how we are made righteous by faith. Faith makes us partakers of a righteous nature. This nature no one of Adam's race could ever have got hold of, only as God instituted a plan through Christ to save us. This spiritual nature is "the life of Christ" that saves us. Just so far as we are made partakers of it here, so far we approach towards the "divine image." But we can never attain to its fulness in this mortal state. Here there will be a continual warfare between "the flesh and the spirit." In this warfare we only expect to be victorious by the mighty efficiency of that spiritual divine nature, of which we are made partakers through faith in Christ. But the warfare will not always last. There is a morn not far in the future, when the glorious plan through Christ will be consummated. Then the conflict will be over. Then that glorious divine life that is begun in us here, by faith in Jesus Christ, will culminate in immortality, and incorruptibility. May God enable us to know, each for himself, that this principle of a future life is abiding in us, and give us its glorious consummation in the end.

THE ADVENT. THE DIVINE PENALTY.

[Written to a Methodist minister six years ago, while the writer was preaching in Hartford, Conn.]

Yours of the 26th ult. was received on the 28th. I thank you heartily for directing my attention to Dr. Clarke's Preface to 2 Thessalonians. I read it, and much else besides that he has written on the same subject. He was as blind as a bat on the teachings of the New Testament concerning the Lord's second, personal coming; and I am satisfied that his writings on that theme have had a very deplorable influence on your mind, and on the minds of thousands of others. May God deliver you speedily from the spell that binds you on this subject. Dr. Clarke sees Jerusalem's destruction in nearly everything the N. T. says of Christ's coming, and I reject his views on that subject with all my heart. I did not know fully the disastrous work he has made of these Scriptures until, at your solicitation, I read the Preface referred to above. I would like to point out his contradictions and inconsistencies, but have not time. Had you read Buck's Exposition of Matthew xxiv. to any purpose, you would feel much less confidence in Clarke's blunders, and not stand where you do. Are you aware that Whedon and Clarke do not agree on Matt. xxiv.? If you are, pray tell me why you cite me to Dr. Clarke's Jerusalemizing theories and to Whedon's exposition at the same time. Whedon once said in the Methodist Quarterly Review that Clarke's exposition of Matt. xxiv. was the cocatrice's egg out of which more Universalism had been hatched than from any other work, or something to that effect. Buck has proved, with entire success, that Clarke's Jerusalemizing work is all wrong; and it is too late in the day for you to influence my mind in the least in that direction. Clarke and Macknight have at least five comings of Christ, while the Bible has two. Paul says in Hebrews that "unto them that look for Him shall he appear the second time"—not the fifth—" without sin unto salvation."

I never told you that I believed the early christians were taught to expect that the Second Advent would take place during their lifetime; and, what is more, I never believed so. I preached twice yesterday from 2 Thess. ii. 2 (thanks to your letter), and devoted the morning discourse entirely to Dr. Clarke's "Preface" and expositions. In the afternoon, I gave the true view of my text, which Clarke and other expositors, as Dr. Lillie's work shows clearly, entirely misapprehend. The word rendered "at hand" in verse 2 occurs seven times in the original; five times it is translated "present;" once, it is rendered by a phrase equivalent to that; and it should be translated "present" in the text. It is so rendered by the American Bible Union in their preliminary Revision.

The Thessalonian believers, and all the apostolic churches, were taught to wait for Christ's coming, to look for his coming, to love his appearing, to haste unto his coming, and, what is more, they rested all their hopes of future glory on that event and the Resurrection; and they did all this without having read "Storrs's Exposition of the Rich Man and Lazarus." Take your Salt Springville text— Colossians iii. 3, 4—and tell me if that does not necessarily run counter to your going-to-heaven-at-death theory. If saints are now with Christ in glory, why say "then shall ye also appear with him in glory?" I should like exceedingly to fill an appointment for you at S. S., some time, and preach from that text. I must believe that, with your views of the whole subject, you must have given the trumpet an uncertain sound.

In regard to the doom of sinners, I have not time to notice all you say. If death—the loss of life—extinction of being—the loss of the eternal joys of the redeemed—is no punishment, then you represent my faith correctly, in saying that I deny any future punishment—otherwise not. Luther Lee, in his 39th letter to A. C. Thomas (Universalist), said that "annihilation would be endless punishment." I believe all the Bible says about the judgment, the lake of fire, &c., but I reject most cordially the interpretations which find eternal torture in those scriptures. You once told me that you would rather be yourself annihilated than have one of your children die out of Christ—and yet you think none but those given over to believe a lie and be damned will entertain a view of the Divine government which can be reconciled with the feelings of a sanctified heart! To my mind, nothing is clearer in the Bible, than that the wicked will literally perish; and I am glad to tell poor sinners that "God is love," and that their life depends upon their receiving Christ. When I came here last, I met on the cars a man who confessed to me that he was a "blackleg" by profession, and also said that he expected to go to hell unless he repented. He declared his hearty belief in eternal misery; what is its influence upon him? God's word declares that men's hearts are set in them to do evil because the execution of judgment is delayed. Shall I hence argue that the delay which the Bible affirms is a fiction? The fact that men will despise God's goodness does not prove that their rebellion is never to cease. Why do you fail to cite me to the text that says "fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them?" Will it devour immortal beings? I write in much haste, and must close. You do not "hurt (my) feelings" by what you write. I am glad to know how you feel and what your views are. Write often.

R. W.

WHERE WE ARE.

The year 1866, which many students of divine prophecy have long looked forward to as a decisive year in connection with the fulfilment of prophecy, is gone. A great relief is felt by some that it did not bring the end of the world. Worldlings laugh and scoff the more, nestle themselves in deeper self-security, and say with a certain editor: "The fact of the world now having survived, and its being in excellent condition to survive for an indifinite period, has made these false prophets quite chopfallen. They accordingly again most reluctantly announce a postponement." Poor souls! I envy not their boastful consolation. The world "in excellent condition!" Almost every day's issue of the paper which makes this declaration announces scores of murders, robberies, incendiary fires, desertions by husbands and wives, and crimes of the blackest dye multiplying everywhere. "In excellent condition!" when the jails and penitentiaries are over crowded with convicts, and no one scarcely is safe in the streets of our cities by day or by night! "In excellent condition!" when the whole land is swarming with pickpockets, gamblers, assassins, swindling associations, and shameless debauchery of all sorts. "In excellent condition!" when every nation on the earth is exerting all its energies in preparation for war and bloodshed, and the hearts of men are failing them for fear of what is coming. "In excellent condition!" when the whole world is filled with strange and ominous shadows of coming judgments. From such excellence, good Lord, deliver us!

But we are not moved by the sneering and scoffing of the unbelieving world. It is but further evidence of the truth of our position, that the world has about run its course. The Master, whose speedy return we await, has told us that, as the days of Noe were, so shall it also be as his coming draws near. Paul tells us "that in the last days perilous times shall come. For men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers," &c. (2 Tim. iii. 1, 2.) "In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons; speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron." (1 Tim. iv. 1, 2) And Peter says, "There shall come in the last days scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" (2 Pet. iii, 3, 4.) And though nothing occurred in 1866 to convince the scoffing editors that the end is near, my faith in the speedy personal coming of our Lord is firmer than ever. Their own behavior and words help to make me confident that the end is close upon us, and stimulate my prayer to God that I may be ready every moment for the coming of Him who has promised to come, and who will come, and will not tarry.

But though 1866 did not bring the end, which some perhaps expected, it has still not been fruitless in fulfilments of divine prophecies touching upon the end. The Pope of Rome, the pretended successor of St. Peter, who claimed and exercised the right will have occasion to remember 1866, as the most notable year of the Papacy since 606—as the year which doomed his earthly empire in a way which is verily the beginning of the end. Hardly will Pio Nino agree with our wise editors, that things are "in excellent condition."

"Of raising monarchs to their thrones,
Or sinking them with equal ease,"

The Ottoman empire will have occasion to remember 1866, for the straits and entanglements which that year has entailed upon the Sublime Porte, drying up its power and destroying its dominion. Hardly will the Sultan agree that things are "in excellent condition." And with strange eyes must men view the political perplexities and disturbances which are upon our own country, India, China, Mexico, South America, Spain, and indeed the whole world, to see in them only an "excellent condition." True, the Paris Expositoin approaches, where the world is about to gather its glories to prove that it is "in excellent condition," and that its beautiful millennium is at hand; but God's word is, "When they say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." "As the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth even unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be."

The developments in the direct line of the approaching end are remarkable and numerous, and they follow each other in quick succession. The man must be blind, indeed, who cannot see them. God is accomplishing his purposes, and the world is adjusting itself in every particular to the picture foredrawn on the pages of his holy word, when his Son, whom he has appointed to judge it, shall come. And the scoffing infidelity and want of faith, and blindness of men, so alarmingly prevalent, proves that the end of this "excellent condition" of things is verily at hand.

We cannot expect the world to favor us in attacking its corruptions, and preaching up only disappointment to its fond persuasions and Christless hopes; but still it is our duty to cry aloud and spare not.—Prophetic Times.

Sudden Prosperity.

Prosperity in the beginning of a great action, many times undoes a man in the end. Happiness is the cause of mischief.

For while we expect all things laughing upon us, like those we have passed, we remit our care, and perish by neglecting.

How many have lost the victory of a battle, with too much confidence in the good fortune which they found at the beginning? Surely 'tis not good to be happy too soon.

Precocious children oft fail in their age, of what their childhood promised. This holds not true in temporal things only, but even in spiritual. Nothing slackens the proceedings of a christian more than the too early applause of those that are fixedly honest. This makes him think he is far advanced of those who have gone before him, and thus being lifted up with pride he may slide into self-admiration, and instead of advancing, really go backward, till he becomes a dwarf in all that relates to the great and really important things of the divine life. How many had ended better, if they had not begun so well! Pleasure can outdo a man at any time if yielded to. It is an inviting gin to catch the aspiring man in. Crœsus counselled Cyrus, if he meant to hold the Lydians in slavery, that he should teach them to sing, and play, and drink, and dance, and dally; and that would do it without his endeavor.

If the action be of worth that I take in hand, neither shall an ill accident discourage me, nor a good one make me careless. If it happen ill, I will be the more circumspect, by a heedful prevention, to avoid the like in that which ensues. If it happen well, my fear shall make me warily vigilant. I will ever suspect the smoothed stream for deepness, till we come to the end. Deceit is gracious company; for it always studies to be fair and pleasing; but then, like a thief, having drawn us from the road, it robs us. HOMO.

Where is the Soul Located?

The following item from Harper's Weekly was sent us a short time since. It is a very good take off for immortal-soul hunters. That thought is evolved by the brain, is an undoubted fact. But that there is this fancied immaterial soul there, about which its advocates talk, remains to be proved. The more they "explore" the brain, or the man, the greater will be their discomfiture in their search for an immortal entity in man. Such a soul as they hunt for cannot be found, simply because no such soul exists; or if it has an existence, no revelation has been made to men of its nature or location. Here is the item from Harper's Weekly:

LOCATION OF THE SOUL.

From immemorial time in all countries the seat of intellect is universally admitted to be in the brain. Very patient and very learned anatomists have explored that organ to find the exact location of the soul, but without any degree of success. Still, all unite in the admitted fact that it is somewhere in the brain. By a blow or concussion the mental powers are deranged or suspended; and when the delicate mechanism of the cerebral mass is diseased, aberrations of the mind immediately follow. Therefore all are agreed upon that one point—that the characteristic manifestations of the intellect are performed in the brain.

Now for an anomaly. In hydrocephalus, water may so distend the brain from within toward the circumference as to really make it appear almost like a simple sac, and yet the operations of the mind remain apparently almost normal. All the upper surface of the brain has been repeatedly torn away, even to severing the olfactory and optic nerves, exposing their lacerated extremities without impairing the intellect for hours, till inflammation commenced. An iron bar one inch in diameter and four feet in length, was blown by powder entirely through the centre of the brain of a railroad man at Cavendish, Vermont, a few years ago, carrying away both bone above and below, besides forcing a column of the brain before the end of the bar, mutilating the interior delicate structure within, and rending arterial twigs by the dozens, and yet he recovered, with all the usual mental and moral powers intact. Where is the soul lodged, "Messieurs, Philoso-?"

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, APRIL 24, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

OUR SON'S AGE.—Br. Wendell called our attention, a day or two since, to the fact that we had said nothing in the HERALD of our son's age at the time of his death. We supposed we had, but find ourself mistaken. He fell asleep in Jesus Feb. 2d 1867, and would have been forty-one years old had he lived to the 7th. He was born in Lisbon, N. H., Feb. 7th, 1826; our own age being at that time 29 years. We hoped, then, he would live to preach the gospel after our own decease; but God's ways are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts. Our son was matured before us through the grace of God, amid sufferings and afflictions, and he rests from his trial to await the call of the "blessed Jesus" for his revival into "eternal life," which he so clearly saw before him while he was closing his eyes on all mortal objects. Then shall he enter on a life, where, if counted by years, no figures can tell the number. In view of such a life, who would repine at the trials of this fleeting vapor called life, in our pilgrimage to that better inheritance? O, happy day, when in that land the friends of the "blessed Jesus" meet to sigh no more, and where abatement of joy will never come. May we all, dear christian friends, meet together there.

Inherent Immortality.

We renew our talk this week with the new-fledged "D. D." He says:

"It is in the interpretation of Gen. iii. 19, that the advocates of this new theory first stumble. That only which was of the dust was to return to it. But Adam was something besides dust: What did God breathe into his nostrils? Did he blow dust into them? It was the immortal soul."

Did the Lord "blow an immortal soul" into man's "nostrils?" It is easy to make a witty remark to excite a smile at an opponent; but not so easy, always, to give proof of an assumption. Where is the evidence that God breathed an immortal soul into man's nostrils? or any soul, mortal or immortal? We want just one text. The LORD God breathed the breath of life into his nostrils, and "man—formed of the dust of the ground—became a living soul." Not, became possessed of an immortal soul, or any soul; but he—the man formed as described—became a living soul. Such is the testimony; and when "his breath goeth forth he returneth to his earth: in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. cxlvi. 4. His Maker and Judge said to the man—not to a body merely—"dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 19. There is no "stumbling" here on our part: the stumbling if any, is on the side of the assumers of man's inherent immortality—or man's possession of an immortal soul. In proof of the Doctor's last assumption he speaks thus:

"'The Spirit beareth witness with our spirit.' If our spirit in this text is material, the Spirit of God must be so too. God is a spirit, and must be worshipped in spirit and in truth. If the spirit worshipping be material, why not the Spirit worshipped be so too?"

When have we ever denied that man has a spirit? or affirmed that that spirit is material? The question is, Is the spirit of man an entity, or a distinct being from the man? Can it live and have intelligence when man has returned to dust? and is it immortal? Till you settle these points you may "blow dust" into men's eyes, but you do not touch the question at issue. "God is a Spirit," or, spiritual, in distinction from the Temple "at Jerusalem, where," the Jews said, "men ought to worship"—in distinction from those "carnal ordinances," which were to be "done away." Christ taught the woman of Samaria that God was not to be worshipped with men's hands, like the idols, or like the mere external worship of the formal Jews; but that He required men to give him their affections, or heart; and that no service where this was lacking was a service in truth. But our D. D. adds:

"'The body without the spirit is dead,' plainly proves that man has a living spirit within him."

The whole text reads thus: "For as the body without the spirit is dead, so faith without works is dead also." How does this prove man has a living spirit in him that does not die as well as the body? The fact is, whether we can "translate Hebrew or Greek" or not, the translators have themselves inserted "breath" in the margin. And Dr. Adam Clarke says the marginal readings, in a majority of instances, are preferable to the text. How then does this text "prove man has a living spirit within him?" Try again, Doctor. There is nothing like trying to show one his errors and mistakes. It seems to us you would not have travelled from Genesis almost to Revelation for proof of your theory, if you could have found it nearer the third chapter of Genesis, where you said we first stumble. You seem to have stumbled a long way to find a text, which, after all, demolishes your own theory: for Moses saith, the LORD God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul; and James saith, "the body without the breath is dead." Is the breath "a living, conscious spirit?" If so, the spirit must be material. But our D. D. grows warm, and says:

"This worse than Universalian doctrine would not only blot out of being all spiritual existences—not only would it make the whole of God's creation, between heaven, his throne, and earth, his footstool, one vast, empty space, but goes far towards obliterating the very idea of a God."

We suppose this outburst was intended to "warm up" the dish that it might give a relish to the performance. But perhaps we are mistaken in the design. Universalism is in harmony with the D. D., except in the final result: and hence we should expect he and his coadjutors would give them the preference to us, who believe immortality is the gift of God, through Jesus Christ, and bestowed only on the holy, while "All the wicked God will destroy." Ps. cxlv. 20. But we ask the Doctor what else his theory of spirits makes "the whole of God's creation, between heaven, his throne, and earth, his footstool," but "one vast, empty space?" What is a spirit, according to the Doctor? He says, It has neither form, weight, nor color, and cannot be seen, felt, nor measured." Now, how much "space" would any number of such fill? We think he has made a little mistake. It is his theory that leaves the universe of God "one vast, empty space." Ours occupies it, at God's good pleasure, with substantial beings, that can be seen and felt. And we trust, by and by, to "see Jesus as he is, and be like him:" 1 John iii. 2; yea, to have "our vile body changed, and fashioned like to his glorious body." Phil. iii. 21.

May the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ—our LIFE-GIVER—lead us into all truth, and save us from all that would dishonor his name, injure his cause, or be hurtful to our dying fellow-men. Let us all remember it is but a small matter that we hold the truth, if it does not control our hearts and lives. We may hold the truth in unrighteousness. We do this when we do not give it a continual influence in all our ways; and when we so live as to give men reason to think we disregard the truths we hold. Better would it be for us not to know what truth is than, having known it, to fail of conforming to it in all things.

"I am God, and not Man."

If God is as good as man, then the doctrine of raising dead men to life to kill again, or that of endless torture must both be false and a libel on our MAKER. Where can a man of any sensibility, to say nothing of special goodness, be found, who, if he had power to make and people a world, would deliberately so constitute his arrangement as to make it certain that a large portion of that people would be eternally miserable, or that they should be made alive by him, after being dead, to torture and kill them again? Where could an intelligent being be found, who had a spark of kindness left in him, or any sense of justice, that would not pronounce such a proceeding or administration, an outrage, fit only for such tyrants as Nero, or the imaginary devil! How then can any be guilty of charging God with such an unnatural and diabolical administration? Especially, when He challenges all such, saying, "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked." Yet there are men, professing to be christians, who virtually charge the blessed God with an administration over the work of His own hand that involves falsehood and the most outragous cruelty; and they think to stop our mouths by crying out, "Who art thou, O man, that repliest against God." Let such know, it is not against God we reply, but against their blasphemous assumptions of what God will do. We vindicate God's government. They blaspheme it; ignorantly, we wish we could say.

Prove that God is as good and wise as a respectable man, and their theories of torment, in a life to come, whether temporary or eternal, not designed for any good to the tormented, are shown to have originated somewhere else than with the God who made heaven and earth. Woe to theories which cannot stand without proving the God of love and wisdom to be worse than one of his frail, erring creatures.

Ask one of the advocates of a future, hopeless torture, either temporal or eternal: Is God as good as a decent man? Is he as kind as a respectable human being? and when they have answered these questions the dispute is ended. If they answer affirmatively, they overthrow their theory of hopeless torment. If they answer negatively, it is folly to spend breath to dispute with them. "Let them alone." "They are joined to their idol." Let them continue to bow down to it, if they will. "Their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges.... their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter: their wine is the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps." Deut. xxxii. 31-33.

"Forever and Ever."

BY A PRESBYTERIAN MINISTER.

"And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone where the beast and the false prophet are, and shall be tormented day and night forever."—Rev. xx. 10.

"And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever; and they have no rest day nor night who worship the beast and his image," &c.—Rev. xiv. 11.

A traveler returns from California by the way of Cape Horn, and tells us that the ship encountered a fearful storm, and that the waves ran mountain high; or a hunter tells us he saw an eagle pounce upon his prey with the rapidity of lightning. Now, the Alleghanies are 3,000, the Alps 15,000, and the Himalayas 28,000 feet high, and lightning is supposed to move at the rate of 200,000 miles in a second. Does any one then suppose the waves of the sea are ever 3, or 15, or 28,000 feet in literal height? or that an eagle ever moved at the rate of 200,000 miles in a second? Certainly not. Every one understands their meaning. The waves ran very high, and the eagle flies with great rapidity. This is the universal method of employing figurative language. It is understood to be indefinite. In eastern countries greater license in the use of figurative terms is used than in our own, as every one knows who is acquainted with Persian or Arabic poetry or tales. Nevertheless we once heard a preacher, an expounder of God's word, say that the terrific imaginery in which the Bible denounced future punishment expressed far less than the reality: that, as the stars are millions of times larger than they appear, so future punishment will be a million of times more dreadful than the figurative terms of scripture express. We think this just as absurd, just as far from any true and common-sense interpretation of God's word, as if he had said, after reading the language of the traveler or the hunter, that the ocean waves were a million times higher than the Andes, or that an eagle flew a million times faster than lightning!

Now, nowhere is figurative language employed with greater freedom than in Isaiah and Revelations; and it is to be interpreted, obviously, just as it is elsewhere; at least, if the writers intended to be understood.

Does any one suppose that, in those naval wars spoken of in Rev. xvi. 3, 4, the sea and rivers became literally blood, or red with blood; and that every fish in them died? These passages, Croly supposes refer to the destruction of the Spanish Armada, and Keith to the battles fought for centuries in Lombardy, which he supposes the land of rivers, pre-eminently. Certainly, no such reality was ever experienced in the sea or anywhere on the land. Or again, in the great battle described in Rev. xiv. 20, does any one suppose that after any battle ever fought, or to be fought, blood covered the earth up to the horses' bridles for the space of 200 miles?

Again. Is it a historical fact that the land of Idumea ever became as burning pitch, or that no one ever passed through it since its destrution? and yet this was foretold. The true and common-sense interpretation is, that it was terribly destroyed, and that afterward it ceased to be the path of caravans to the east.

Now, in the passages at the head of this article, the beast and the false prophet are devoured. Who are they? Whether Popery and Mahometanism, or Paganism, is immaterial. They are false religions. But false religions will not exist after the judgment. They will certainly be exposed and destroyed; and commentators are generally agreed that the language refers to the terrific judgments visited upon the nations professing Romanism and Mahometanism for the last 50 or 60 years. Now, how long shall they be tormented in these flames of war and civil and priestly tyranny and internal anarchy?—throughout endless duration? The writer of the Apocalypse says, "forever and ever." What does he mean? In Exodus xxi. 6, the writer describes the ceremony of binding a servant, and after its conclusion adds, "He shall serve him forever," i. e., during the life of the master or servant. Here, beyond all dispute, it means an age—the age of master or servant. Again. Lev. xxv. 46, "They shall be your bondmen forever;" and Deut. xv. 17, "He shall be thy servant forever;" and so in numerous passages. The word as used by the same writer, whatever some lexicographers may define it, means indisputably—an age—the life of a man. Again. It means the age of the Jewish economy. As in Exodus xxxii. 13, The Jews should inherit the land which God had given forever; i. e., as long as their economy lasted and they continued to be a distinct nation. In 1 Chron. xxiii. 13, Levi and his sons should burn incense before the Lord forever—i. e., during the age of the Jewish economy. Again, Isaiah lx. 21, "Thy people shall inherit the land forever." Then, also, it is said many times, the Lord shall reign forever—i. e., throughout endless duration.

The word forever, therefore, does not always mean endless duration. It means—an age—a cycle—whether it be the age of a man, a dispensation, the world, or the eternity of the Divine existence. What then does it mean in those passages of Revelation? This must be determined by the age of the beast and the false prophet. Now in 2 Thess. ii. 8, this mystery of iniquity, or anti-Christ, which all Protestant commentators, at least, agree, means the beast or the false prophet, or both, it is said, "The Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming." Even Mr. Barnes, holding as firmly as he does the dogma of endless misery, and denying as confidently as he does the premillennial advent of the Saviour, even he admits these words must mean the literal second coming of Christ to judge the world. Then, according to the apostle, the beast and false prophet shall be destroyed and consumed. Forever and ever (an amplificate of the word forever—like Verily, verily), therefore means, in these passages—not endless duration—but the age of these heresies—whether they shall terminate premillennially, or with the end of the world. This not only explains the meaning of the words, but saves us from the absurdity of supposing that false religions can be held, and their worshippers be punished for holding them, throughout an endless duration.

The Call of Abraham.

No man becomes at once, and of a sudden, either a fiend or a saint. His descent into a lower, like his ascent to a higher condition, is gradual—always accomplished, though more rapidly in some cases than in others, step by step. Of this the history of idolatry presents a striking instance. Look back on Greece and Rome! There, in Bacchus, and in Venus, and in other divinities, we see how men, as they do still in India, made gods of the vices which they practiced; not only glorying in their shame, but throwing the halo of religion around the grossest immoralities. But mankind had not sunk so low as this, nor become worshippers of stocks and stones, of birds, beasts, and creeping things, in the days of Abraham. That Sabian faith in which he was born, and which his fathers followed, and which still lingers on earth among the Parsees of Bombay, was the least gross of all idolatries; the one into which man first fell, and was most prone to fall. The idolatry of this religion began with the worship, not of false gods, but of Jehovah, the one, living and true God—under the symbols of the heavenly host. That, man's first declension, and downward step, was one to warn us; but not much to wonder at. Even in these last days, with God's word in our hands, amid the full blaze of gospel light, we find it difficult to walk by faith and not by sight; and the corruptions which popery has engrafted on christianity, the eyes of her devotee turned on cross and crucifix, the walls of her churches crowded with images, prove how prone man is to lapse into a sensuous religion, and to seek by means of some visible object to fix his wandering thoughts and inflame his cold devotions. For this purpose the sun, moon, and stars—especially the first of these—were chosen as images, visible symbols of the invisible God. It was in this character that the sun, at least in the first instance, was worshipped. And certainly if God was to be adored through symbols, none could be found so appropriate as that imperial luminary, the ruler of the seasons, the source of all light and heat, the very life of nature, which, clothing the forests anew each year with leaves, the pastures with grass, and the fields with corn, resumes his daily course with unabating vigor, shows no sign of growth or of decay, and, throned in heaven, shines down from its azure heights with resplendent, dazzling glory.

This, the earliest, was certainly the least gross of all idolatries. But that soon befell it which has happened to the images of the Roman Catholic, and the pictures of the Greek church. The sign came to usurp the place of the thing signified. Ere long it was not the Being symbolized, but the symbol itself that was regarded as an object of adoration. And now, when the Church of Christ has her course to steer between Rationalism on this hand, and Ritualism on that, let not the Bible only, but the history also of this earliest and least gross idolatry, warn her against setting much store on symbols, or leaning towards a sensuous worship. The tendency of every such worship is to become more sensuous; to depart further and further from the simplicity of the gospel.

It was out of the Sabian religion, as well as out of Ur of the Chaldees, that Abraham was called. The Jews, and the Mohammedans also have curious legends about his conversion and the sufferings he had to endure for the truth. They say that, when he was, according to some, fourteen, according to others forty years of age, his mind took a religious turn. At this time observing a star when night overshadowed him, he said, "This is my Lord!" but keeping his eye on the luminary, and observing it sink ere long, he abandoned all faith in it, wisely remarking, "I like not gods which set." As the night wore on and left him in painful perplexity, the moon rose up in silver splendor. He turned to her with the delighted exclamation, "This is my Lord!" But following in the wake of the star, she also set; and when her bright rim dipped below the horizon, with her set his faith in her divinity. By-and-by, from the purple east, the sun leapt up, illuminating the heavens with splendor and bathing the world in light. All his dark doubts now scattered with the morning mists before its beams, "This," exclaimed Abraham, throwing himself down to worship, "This is my Lord!" But when hours had rolled on, the sun also began to sink; and when, following star and moon, it vanished from his gaze, old legends tell how Abraham rose from his knees to cast aside the faith of his fathers, and worship Him who alone rules both heaven and earth.

Nor is this all these old legends tell us concerning Abraham on his being converted from idolatry. He is said to have taken advantage of the absence of his people to enter their temple, and, sparing only the biggest of their idols, break all the rest in pieces. Discovering, on their return, the havoc which had been wrought, the people were roused to frenzy. They cried, who hath done this to our gods? and on being told that it was Abraham, they exclaimed, Bring him forth! Hast thou done this to our gods? they said. Nay, replied he, in mockery, Nay, the biggest of them hath done it, but ask them! Thou knowest, was their answer, that these speak not. Abraham now had them in a corner. To this very point he had wished to lead them. So, turning on them, he demanded, Do ye then worship, besides God, that which cannot profit and cannot hurt you? fie on you! Burn him! burst from the lips of these early persecutors, these fathers of the Inquisition. And the old legends go on to tell how a fiery furnace was forthwith kindled; and how this bold witness for the truth was cast among the roaring flames; and how he came forth unhurt—God having spoken out of heaven saying, O Fire, be thou cold, and a prevention unto my servant Abraham!

The Bible is silent as to the manner, and means, and time of Abraham's conversion. But whatever these might be, the work was divine—wrought in his heart by Him who gave his servant grace to rise at another call, and go forth, he knew not whither; an exile from his native land, to wander in a land of strangers. Let it be remarked that in whatever manner he was called and converted, his case presents a remarkable example of the power of divine grace. We are to remember that the true religion was not altogether extinct in Abraham's day. Like stars shining, one here and another there, through the clefts and openings of a cloudy sky, like those Alpine summits whose snows I have seen glowing in rosy sunlight when all the valleys lay wrapped in the sombre shades of evening, there were families at that time of general idolatry where God was worshipped, not only in spirit, but in truth. Such was Job's, for instance. It is highly probable that he lived about the same period as Abraham. There is no allusion to be found in the book which bears his name to any of those remarkable events which distinguish the exodus of Israel; and we may therefore conclude that his era was not coeval with that of Moses, but preceded it. But there are plain allusions in that book to the Sabian worship, to the adoration of the heavenly bodies; and this makes it highly probable that Job lived about Abraham's time, and among those whose religion corresponded with that of his compatriots. While that is highly probable, this is certain, that Melchizedec, whom Abraham met, and to whom he paid tithes, was a worshipper of the true God; and that those among whom this mysterious personage filled the office of a priest, must have been so likewise. Yet, passing by these, God repairs to a family of idolators, and out of them selects a man to be the father of his people, and the great progenitor of his incarnate Son. Verily his thoughts are not as our thoughts, nor his ways as our ways. His grace is free as the wind that bloweth where it listeth; and here, as in many other cases of conversion which present most unlooked-for results, we see that "the first are last, and the last are first." Abraham is a childless man, and God chooses him to be the father of a mighty nation; Abraham is an idolator, and God appoints him conservator of true religion, and the ancestor of the world's Redeemer. By this early, as by many other signal acts of free, sovereign, and almighty grace, how does God teach men never to despond, or to despair? His way is in the sea and his path in the mighty waters: nor can we know what purpose He intends to serve by us; what usefulness may be ours; what honors may await us; to what blessings and blessed work we may be called. "He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghill that he may set him with princes, even with the princes of his people. He maketh the barren woman to keep house, and be a joyful mother of children. Praise ye the Lord!"—Sunday Magazine.

Working and Thinking.

I beseech you to set to work, and spend your time and strength in doing good. If you do not work, your reading and thinking will be of no use. If you do not work, your knowledge will increase your condemnation. If you do not work, your reading and thinking will be in danger of driving you into error rather than of leading you to truth. Intellect ceases to be intellect, if it be cultivated alone. Food ceases to nourish, and even kills the very body that it should have kept in health, if it be taken in too large quantities, and unaccompanied with exercise. So the understanding if it be worked too hard, or loaded too much, while the rest of our spiritual faculties are left idle, may be turned to madness. All the faculties of the mind should be worked or cultivated; they should be cultivated in harmony. Our will and affections should have work, as well as our understandings. We should be doing as well as learning; working as well as reading. Every power becomes extravagant and monstrous, if cultivated alone. Look at the man who is always exercising and cultivating his love of gain, while he neglects the cultivation of his understanding, and benevolent affections: he becomes a miser; a miserable monster of covetousness. Look at the person who is constantly laboring to excite his religious feelings, while he neglects to cultivate benevolence and intellect: he becomes a fanatical fury, or a wild and superstitious maniac. And so with the man that cultivates his intellect alone; his intellect breaks down, and he becomes a pitiable and miserable wreck. If a man would not be a monster of folly, let him cultivate his affections by charitable and pious labors, as well as his understanding by reading, and thinking, and talking.

I know certain persons who, as I believe, have erred most grievously; and I am persuaded that this has been the cause. They have not been working much. If they had been teaching the young to read and write; if they had been visiting the sick and the poor; and if they had been laboring to promote righteousness, they would have gone on surely and happily: but they have neglected these things, and given themselves up wholly to intellectual pursuits, and the consequence is, they are in danger of utter ruin. I beseech you, be on your guard against this danger. God appears to be determined, that if men will not use their light in doing good, it shall turn into darkness. He has so ordered things, that if we will not have his way, and cultivate our powers in harmony, we shall not be allowed to have our own way. He has so ordered matters that if we will not improve all our talents, those which we think we will improve shall be taken away. He has manifestly so ordered things, that they only shall be truly intelligent and wise, who make their intellects subservient to piety and charity; and that they shall prove the greatest fools or maniacs, who sacrifice benevolence or piety to intellect. Those who would try to hasten the speed of a carriage by urging one wheel forward, and leaving the other behind, would only break the carriage; and those who are so eager to increase their knowledge, that they urge on their intellect before their affections and other powers, will be likely to break up their spiritual constitution, and become a complete wreck.

We are far from wishing to keep people back from knowledge: we wish to help them forward. We wish them to learn as fast and to learn as much as possible. We would have every man as wise as the wisest, as wise as it is possible for man to be. What we fear is, lest men should pursue a course which will prevent them from excelling in knowledge. What we desire is this, that they should pursue such a course as will conduct them in their studies safely, and render their pursuit of knowledge certainly successful. We are persuaded that the student who labors—who exerts himself in efforts to benefit mankind—who exercises his social and benevolent affections—who makes his knowledge subservient to practice, is the man who will gain most knowledge in the end.

And there are plenty of opportunities for exercising your benevolent affections. There is plenty of work to do. There are multitudes of ignorant and miserable people around us, who need instruction and help. There are plenty of youths to be instructed and guided. There is work for all; there is work in every direction.

And there is no life so happy as a life spent in doing good. Even the acquisition of knowledge itself is happiest when it is sought in connection with labors for the welfare of our fellow-men, and for the purpose of assisting us in our benevolent labors.

Work then, my friends. Work hard and constantly. Be resolved to do something at once for the welfare of your race. Work while you seek for truth, and seek for truth while you work; and you will then both secure yourselves, and promote the best interests of your race.

HOMO.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. S. L. Walter.

HORNSBY, ILL., April 3, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I am home, and in good health. Received the HERALD OF LIFE yesterday. It still contains treasures of light on the glorious truth of life only through the LIFE GIVER. And every additional ray of light shows more clearly that man by nature is a perishing being; and without he obtains life through the LIFE-GIVER, he must remain under the dominion of corruption; and "shall be as though he had not been," "so are the wicked no more." How? "As the whirlwind passeth." "They are dead, they shall not live;" "whose end is to be burned;" "be punished with everlasting (life? No, but) destruction."

How gloriously Judge HALSTED sweeps away the stronghold of orthodoxy, in his "THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," in the rendering he gives, as presented in the HERALD, on Acts xxiv. 14, 15. We see that when, as he says, at the close of his expositions, "And by filling the ellipsis (as before) and taking out the comma and the improper words used in the E. V., the verse is perfectly plain: And having hope toward God, of a resurrection of dead; which resurrection they themselves expect shall be of dead, both of just and unjust." That shows why Paul sought for a resurrection from among dead ones. Thank God for light. I had this text, Acts xxiv. 15, presented to me in the store, yesterday, before I got home with the HERALD. I told them to take away the glossing of the translators, and get a perfect knowledge of Paul's faith on the subject of the resurrection, and the Pharisaic doctrine of the resurrection, and they would see that neither Paul or the Pharisees believed that all the unjust would be raised. They had no life from the dead for Gentile dogs. No: to Israel, fleshly Israel only, were the promises made. They lost sight of God's purposes.

And look at God's love. It is seen in all his dealings with man; not only in giving the wicked the wages of sin, which is death, but, also, in giving life from the dead to all believers in the LIFE-GIVER. O, see his love to them, "I will raise him up at the last day." I will deliver him "from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the sons of God." O for a trumpet voice to cry, "Behold what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us that we should be called the sons of God." Paul says. "If children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Then "reign in Life" with him. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him shall not perish, but have everlasting life." Well might John say, "God so loved" the dying world. What angel tongue can tell the love of God that saves from perishing in death? O, give thanks unto the Lord, for his mercy endureth forever.

I was struck, in reading Gov. Yates' Address, before the Congressional Temperance Association. It was quite a stirring speech. What arrested my attention was, his "feeling" in regard to drinking and its effect on the human system, and the poor "immortal soul." He said, "I would, as I feel now, as soon drink fire from hell as whiskey; for it is hell and damnation too. It destroys the health, and mars the beauty of the body; it can bow down to earth the most gigantic intellect, and make it as weak as that of a child. It demoralizes and annihilates the immortal soul," &c. Here is a strange thing brought before the advocates of the "immortal soul," that their indestructible soul can be annihilated by whiskey; which the fires of hell, according to orthodoxy, cannot destroy. I think he was quite right, when he said, "Whiskey, demoralizes, and annihilates (all) the immortal soul" that man has. The fire of hell must be awful if what Mr. Furniss says is true, when he said, "Take one spark from hell, throw it in the ocean, and in a moment it will dry up all the water, and set the whole world in a blaze."

The books you sent came safe. It is my impression that Br. Lewis got his. I would say to the friends, that I thank them, and pray that the blessing of the Lord may be their portion in both worlds. I hope that friends of truth will see that we cannot get along without a little help, and that if all would do a little, in some way, when we come among them, we shall have enough. There are a few brethren from whom we may say, that we get almost all our support. God will bless them.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

ELSAH, ILL., April 16, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—This is to let the dear saints know my whereabouts; for no doubt some are saying, I wish I could hear from Br. Lewis. Well, you see from this that I have not yet gone up to old Fulton Co., for this reason, we have not heard from the brethren up there who encouraged us to hope for desired help to go. We still hope for the best, and no doubt it will work for good; for we have had time and opportunity to sow the seed. Br. Walter is with us once more. He preached three times on the hill, in our neighborhood, much to the comfort of the little band, and the advancement of the truth, and we expect to preach some in this place, and also at Grafton. Glory to God for the spread of truth. It is gaining ground. May the Lord reward all the dear friends with a more excellent life in the kingdom for their kindness to the poor old one-armed preacher.

From Eld. John Craig.

WESTFORD, MASS., April 18, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I write you a few lines to inform you and the readers of the dear HERALD OF LIFE that I am about my blessed Master's business. I went a few weeks ago to preach to a people who have been listening to fables; yea, to the fables of these last days. I first showed them what man is; his origin, history, and future destiny, if found in Christ; viz., eternal life. If not in Christ, eternal death; just as the word says, life or death. I then showed that without a resurrection through the LIFE-GIVER we all must perish forever; and that we get this life through Christ at the resurrection, and not before. These, and kindred subjects, I have presented to them, which were gladly received; and now the way seems to be open for the gospel in full; which I intend, God willing, to give them. They see now that we take the Bible, and the Bible alone, for our guide, and they like it well. I intend to give them a history of the past in the different governments of the world, &c. In so doing, I feel very much in want of a chart of the visions of Daniel and John. If any of my dear brethren in Christ have one that they can spare, will they send it to me, and trust the good Lord for their reward. I think I can show it clearer by having a chart to point it out. I should like to have one as soon as possible, as I intend to give them the whole truth. Truth is mighty and will prevail. Your Servant for Jesus' sake.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We have sent you a chart by mail; but do not know as it will be exactly what you want; hope it may answer, however.

From Samuel J. Brimhall.

MAPLETON, Kansas, March 27, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Another day of toil is closed up, and the issues of the same are to remain sealed until the parting heavens shall reveal the King of Saints in his glorious majesty and power.

The darkness of night is upon the earth, and the king of night has cast his sable mantle over things animate and inanimate; and this halo of darkness is only interrupted by the distant prairie fires, which to-night can be seen in almost every direction, casting a bright shadow of light upon the horizon, which is thrown back upon the earth, giving a solemn and romantic appearance to the face of nature; which would be a very impressive and sublime view to one not accustomed to such sights.

"Night and day." What a history! What a journey! How long the wheels of nature have rolled; and ceased not to bring about these successive changes, each in their turn. Nature's wheels never cast band. The purposes of the great Creator shall stand. But do night and day continue on, in the ceaseless ages of the untold future? Does darkness cover the earth half the time? Is unceasing toil requisite, forever, to gain for man a scanty sustenance? Will the earth be forever filled with losses and crosses; with murmurings and strife, dishonesty and discord?

Dear reader, ponder well the pages of the HERALD OF LIFE—our only life preacher in Kansas—and your mind may be led to a solution of some of these questions.

Methinks I hear the still, soft echo of some christian brother, saying:

My God, I thank thee for the light
Which in the Scriptures shine,
Betokening a day of rest
All heavenly and divine.

Have mercy on poor sinful man;
Give me a heavenly crown,
Where perfect day excludes the night,
With Jesus to sit down.

No moth nor thief shall enter there,
Corrosive to devour;
Begotten in God's image dear.
All heaven shall be ours.

From John R. Scott.

PHILADELPHIA, April 8, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I was in the Custom House, but am there no longer. This is the third time I have been turned out of (I may say) the synagogue: twice for political heresy, and once for believing in the personal reign of Christ on the earth, and that "all the wicked will God destroy." But I bless God, I have privileges and blessings which the world cannot give or take away. Yesterday I heard a sermon upon these words, "What will the end be of those who obey not the gospel?" Among a number of the passages quoted, to show his hearers how great would be the punishments, was the one in Hebrews, the "sorer punishment" of those who tread under foot the Son of God, and count the blood of the covenant an unholy thing. How can such passages be applied to those who were never under that covenant? Can any of the denunciations of Christ, prior to his resurrection, be applied to us Gentiles?

I am enjoying much of the love of Christ. The longer I think of the goodness of God in opening a way of salvation for us poor Gentiles, the more I praise and bless his holy name; and when I think how God has led me on, from infidelity to where I now stand, I cannot refrain from weeping; but they are tears such as Mary wept at the feet of Jesus; tears of joy; and I can say, Bless the Lord, Oh my soul, and all that is within me, praise his holy name. Yours in love, and waiting for the coming of our Lord.

S. HART, Unionville, Conn., writes:—The cry will soon be made by an immortal, incorruptible, undying throng, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? This cry cannot be made until mortality puts on immortality, and corruption incorruption. For the sting of death is sin, and all have been stung, and therefore must die, or be changed. The cry can never be made, O grave, where is thy victory? as long as we hear death knells ringing in our ears every day, and some one is constantly borne to the silent grave. But the day is not far distant when earth and ocean will yield up their righteous dead, and upon the air will be borne the victorious cry, O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?

M. C. HARRIMAN, Warner, N. H., writes:—Please send me a copy of the BIBLE VS. TRADITION. I have had two of them before, and would like many more, for I find some that are willing to read the truth; and this is the best work of the kind that I have seen (Judge HALSTED'S not excepted), for those who have not the time or disposition to make but a brief investigation. Judge Halsted's work is glorious; but he is too deep and hard for weak heads, and still weaker hearts. His book, for those who love to study, to search for truth as hid for treasures, is joy and peace. BIBLE VS. TRADITION is plain and easy to be understood by any who wish to understand the truth. O, that every person who could be induced to read the work could have the opportunity. It is in my power to do but little in this direction; but what I can do will be done cheerfully, and leave the rest with Him who doeth all things well.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The work—BIBLE VS. TRADITION—of which our friend speaks, has had, first and last, a circulation of some three or four thousand copies, if we remember right. It was first published in 1853. Yet it has never had that circulation its value demands. If our friends would circulate it by thousands now, and let Judge HALSTED'S keep it company, they could hardly do a better work. We have, for lack of funds, been able to print only very small editions of BIBLE VS. TRADITION, and cannot therefore sell it at less than the present price: but it is cheap at that, as paper, press work, and binding are now. We shall soon need to get out another edition of that work, and also of LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST: the two principal works in our catalogue of books; and we shall need funds to accomplish this, as well as for continuing our issue of the HERALD OF LIFE. Shall our work be trammeled in spreading the truth by the lack of means? Will all the friends of the Life views bear in mind that now is the time to sow the seed, and to do it bountifully; so shall we reap an abundant harvest. For the last issue of the above works a friend loaned us $100 and took his pay in books; but made donations of some half of the amount to the Western Mission and the Freedmen's Mission. Who will continue the work in like manner, or by similar means? Can you do good, in spreading truth, more effectually?

The Brooklyn Discussion.

FIRST EVENING.

For several months past, efforts have been put forth to secure a debate on the Life views in Brooklyn, but the difficulties were many and discouraging. But our indefatigable Br. Charles A. Righter was not the one to be put off with anything that could be overborne, and he finally effected all the preliminaries, and the opening evening showed his success in every thing not only perfect but brilliant. The hall is high-vaulted, commodious, well ventilated and lighted, and in every respect the most admirable place for the purpose. It seats 1,000 people. So well had the interest of the public been excited and directed to the discussion by Br. Righter, that although there was a violent storm of rain, leaving the weather still doubtful, the hall was densely packed at an early hour. Not by a gay, fashionable crowd, either, seeking but pleasurable excitement. It was composed of men and women, sober, thoughtful and intent on seeking for truth and knowledge. A gentleman of culture and refinement, President of the Loyal League Association of Brooklyn, was chosen to preside during the debate. A prominent and accomplished Congregational minister was appointed to open and close the meeting with appropriate services. And finally, in the speakers were just the qualifications to give zest and interest to such an important matter as that living and thinking throng were gathered together to hear discussed. Br. Rufus Wendell on the affirmative, and the Rev. Joseph Henson on the negative. The former is a master hand at debate—cool, wary, well poised, with clear, flexible voice, energy that under great impulse, such as this occasion offered, enables him to rise to the highest stage of eloquence.

Mr. Henson is not an incapable man by any means. Although not so fluent or polished as his opponent, he is ready with his tongue, which he can employ in many forms of speech. He is possessed of much self-confidence, and is dogged in his adherence to his conceptions of what the truth is. More intellectual men might have been selected, but probably none who could have protracted the debate until its close, and directly and indirectly, kept up its interest.

There can be nothing urged, on witnessing such an assemblage as this occasion brought together, against the public debating of our views. A thousand or fifteen hundred earnest listeners thus enabled to hear not only the power of God's truth but the folly of man's wisdom in its opposition. A few, or many even, went there as bigots, and necessarily came away as such. But it is not for such the gospel is preached at all. It is for the fair-minded men and women who are always to be found in promiscuous assemblages, and in whom the truth will ever take lodgment when presented with skill and gentle propriety, no matter what prepossessions it has to overcome. If but one mind were freed from the bonds of such superstition as this debate is to overthrow, and brought into the comforting and blessed light of God's word, and that one were any of us, we should esteem all the trouble and expense of this meeting as nothing compared to such benefit.

We cannot go into a criticism of the debate at this early stage. We are not alone in deeming the affirmative impregnable in his position taken at the opening. It was based on 1 Cor. xv. 18 and 32. He did not permit himself to be diverted from his leading point, but held his adversary close and firm, until he overwhelmed him by compelling him to take the ridiculous attitude of non-committal, where he had boasted his readiness to come "boldly to the light and meet the issue squarely." We do not deem this a prejudiced view; it was the expressed opinion of many opponents to our views. We do not mean that Mr. Henson said nothing smart and keen. He did all that, and showed a pleasantry that aided, no doubt, to give life and interest to the meeting. We leave the points of the discussion, with the other anticipated matters of interest, for a future occassion.

W. M.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The U. S. Senate adjourned on Saturday, without completing all the business that called it together; this was owing to the difference in opinion between it and the President as to the character of the men who should fill the responsible offices of the country. The President has, through the Attorney General, declared his intention to carry out the Military Reconstruction measure of Congress. This will facilitate the pacification of the South, which has been progressing satisfactorily ever since the adoption of that measure. The crop of cotton will undoubtedly be larger this year than for some time past, and with the receipt and distribution of the money paid for it, business will revive, and apathy will give way to the prevailing spirit of enterprise. The accounts from all other parts of the country are favorable for a large yield of all kinds of crops. Business remains dull—more so among the commercial classes than the manufacturing. The general aspect of the country, taken in connection with its history of the past five years, is, however, one for profound gratulation, and especially so if we turn our eyes anywhere upon the rest of the world. General peace, increasing confidence between all sections, plenty of food, labor abundant and well remunerated—certainly makes it such.

FOREIGN.

The aspect of affairs continues warlike between France and Prussia. The greatest preparations are making by each of these great powers, as if a life and death struggle was close at hand. Notwithstanding the rumors of a peaceful solution of the question and the proffered mediation of the other powers, there is no indication on the part of those most interested of any other solution of the quarrel than a resort to arms. France has been insulted: she demands of Prussia the evacuation of the important fortress of Luxemburg. The latter contends that her hold on that small Duchy is indispensable to her preservation of the Rhine Provinces, on which Napoleon has cast his covetous eyes, and for which he made rude demands and received the first contemptuous snubbing from Bismarck. The importance of this difficulty has absorbed all other interests. Still there are continued movements of importance going on elsewhere, especially in the East. The Cretan rebellion is still progressing, and Turkey is being torn asunder in both Europe and Asia by her dissatisfied provinces. The crisis to settle its existence seems close at hand.

Several thousand persons have been killed and wounded by the earthquake at the island of Mytilene. Shocks are still felt there from time to time, and it is feared by the inhabitants either that the whole island will be submerged or that the subterranean fires will break out on some of its summits.

Reports from Matamoros confirm the news recently received from Havana that the Mexican Liberals have captured the City of Puebla, and that Maximilian had offered to surrender on conditions which President Juarez, who insists on an unconditional surrender, has rejected.

Next month will be a memorable and wonderful one in the ancient double city of Buda-Pesth, the Hungarian capital. Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria, is to receive the crown as a recognition of the distinct existence in his dominions of the kingdom of Hungary.

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J.;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO-FORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—R. M. Cooper, John L. Swain, Edward Dealing, Delia Clark, Oliver Traver, Sam'l J. Brimhall, John M. Robb, Timothy Oliver, Harrison Price, S. Hart, Mrs. C. Purinton.

Two Dollars each from—Timothy Quimby, James Battersby, Mary E. Howard, Abraham Beasley, Daniel Butler, Jerome Barton, William King, Mrs. S. A. Colvin.

Various Sums.

A. G. Merwin, $4; E. L. Wadleigh, 50 cts; Jabez Adams, $3.

Freedmen's Mission

For Helen Robertson.

S. Cooper, Windsor, Conn.	$2
Dr. Joseph Traver, Lockport, N. Y.	$5
Mrs. J. K. New York	$3
A. M. Kemp, Rockland Lake, N. Y.	$4
L. C. Thorne, New York	$5
Mrs. S. A. Colvin, Albion, R. I.	$1

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity," as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested; showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 800 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY; or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by DR. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

GEO. STORRS,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper covers to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

"THOU SHALT CALL AND I WILL ANSWER."—Job.

Wake me early in the morning
When the Elder Brother comes:
O, wake me at the dawning
Of morn upon the tombs.
O, let me see the glory,
And hear the exultant cry
Of all the risen pilgrims
Who shall live, no more to die.

Wake me early, when the trumpet
Its notes begins to sound,
When the sleeping myriads, summoned,
Rise from beneath the ground.
And when the quickening spirit
Revives their precious dust,
O, let me feel the power
That brings to life the just.

O Christ, thy spirit seals me,—
Death's bars for me must break,
And from its silent slumbers
My weary soul will wake.
No cords of sin to hold me,
No law on me has claim;
I shall waken in the morning,
Rejoicing in thy name.

Oh! 'tis a darksome valley
Where Death his captives leads,
And greedy is the monster
That on his captives feeds.
Thank heaven for the victory
That saints alone shall know,
Awaking in the morning
With an immortal glow.

MARIA M. WEAVER.

Westfield, Mass., 1867.

Children's Department.

UNREQUITED LOVE.

Did you ever see an undutiful, ungrateful child? one who has kind, affectionate parents to watch over and care for him, whose loving hearts are constantly devising some way to promote his happiness, yet he, unmindful of all this love, seeks only to please himself and gratify his sinful desires, while he despises alike the warnings, reproofs, and counsel given him, caring nothing for the tears shed or the prayers offered in his behalf, nor yet the anxiety and grief which are causing the locks to turn gray, the brow to grow furrowed as if by age, and perhaps bringing his loved ones with sorrow down to the grave? It is a sad, sad picture, yet one which has frequently been seen in the past, and much oftener now in these days, when children, with but few exceptions, are "unthankful, unholy, disobedient to parents, without natural affection," as the Bible says they would be in the last days.

There is one such instance recorded in the word of God, and that is the case of David and his son Absalom. David, you will recollect, was chosen by God to be king over Israel, after Saul, who was the first king, had sinned and wickedly departed from the Lord. David, at the time the prophet Samuel was sent to anoint him king, was a mere stripling who had the care of his father's sheep. I presume you are familiar with his interesting history from that time until he was established upon the throne, and became a very great and prosperous king. He seemed to possess a kind and forgiving disposition, for after Saul had tried in many ways to take his life, he manifested no desire to take revenge, although he had frequent opportunities for doing so.

He had many children, and no doubt was a good, affectionate father. His son Absalom seems to have been a kind of favorite with him, although Solomon, whom the Lord loved, was appointed by him to succeed him in the throne. Absalom was probably of a prepossessing appearance, for "in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty: from the soul of his foot to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him." The hair of his head was so abundant and heavy that he was obliged to have it cut off every year, and the weight of it is said to have been two hundred shekels, or about six pounds. The king showed his affection for Absalom in many ways, and one would suppose that he would have been grateful, and glad that his father was so honored and beloved by his subjects. He certainly ought to have given all his influence to sustain him in his government; but instead of that he seemed to have forgotten all his obligations to his father, and as he came to be an old gray-headed man, he began secretly to alienate the hearts of the people from him and to undermine the government. He pretended to sympathize with all who were in any trouble, and by a show of affection for them, it is said, "he stole the hearts of the people." This was continued for a long time, until he openly conspired against his father, in order that he might obtain the throne himself, although he knew he was exposing his father's life by doing so.

How sad the old king must have felt to know that so many who had once been loyal subjects and warm friends, had revolted and turned against him to follow and support Absalom; and hardest of all to know that a dear son should prove to be such an ungrateful traitor. No wonder that, as he and the few who remained faithful to him, fled for their lives, it is said, "David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went barefoot: and all the people that were with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up."

Absalom was advised to gather all Israel, and go with them to battle against David and his few followers, and consented to do so. David rallied his people and numbered them, preparatory to going out to battle. He divided them into companies, and appointed captains over them, intending himself to go out with them, but they refused to let him go, fearing he might be killed. He consented to remain, and stood by the gate side as all the people passed out. And now see how his fatherly heart still yearns over his wicked and rebellious son. He commanded his captains, "Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom. And all the people heard when the king gave the captains charge concerning Absalom." So the people went out to battle in the wood of Ephraim, and the servants of David were victorious, and twenty thousand men of Israel were killed. Absalom met the servants of David in the wood. He rode on a mule, and as it passed under the thick boughs of an oak, his hair caught hold of the tree and lifted him up between the heaven and the earth, and the mule went away from him. A man who saw it told Joab, David's chief captain, who asked him why he did not smite him to the ground. He replied, "Though I should receive a thousand shekels of silver, I would not put forth my hand against the king's son:" and he reminded Joab of the king's commandment concerning Absalom. But Joab, who never seemed very conscientious, took three darts in his hand, and finding Absalom still hanging in the tree, thrust them through his heart while he was yet alive, and thus killed him. He then with his young men took him down and "cast him into a great pit, and laid a very great heap of stones upon him." Joab blew the trumpet and the people returned, and Israel fled every one to his tent. Thus the Lord showed his displeasure by suffering Absalom to be killed with so many of his followers, and the rest defeated.

But the king all this time was sitting between the two gates and waiting with anxious heart to know the fate of his son, and as the messengers who were sent brought tidings that his people were victorious, his first inquiry was, "Is the young man, Absalom, safe?" The answer came, "The enemies of my Lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is." How must the heart of David have sunk within him. His sorrow was too great, too sacred for others to witness, and "he went up to the chamber over the gate and wept; and as he went, thus he said: O, my son, Absalom! my son, my son, Absalom! would God I had died for thee! O, Absalom, my son, my son!"

The victory was turned into mourning when the people heard how the king grieved for his son, for "he covered his face and cried with a loud voice, O, Absalom, my son, my son!" Whose heart has not been touched by the affecting account of a father's anguish, mourning over a wayward and lost child. And Absalom had sinned against much light, for no doubt he had often heard the law of God and his commandments, one of which he openly disregarded—"Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may be well with thee, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee."

The Lord will surely fulfil his promises to those who regard his commands, and as surely execute his threatenings upon those who lightly esteem the counsel of the Almighty, as in the case of Absalom.

We are here reminded of the love of a kind and tender Being, whose every act shows the deepest interest and care for his creatures; and who, even while they were forgetful of him, withheld not his only Son, but freely gave him to die for the sinful and perishing, that they might obtain eternal life. And how is this great love requited? By honoring and believing on his Son? or by a rejection of his words and disobedience of his holy requirements? Let each reader of this article examine his own heart, and settle the matter with the Lord.

AUNT LOUISA.

"IT MATTERS BUT LITTLE."

Mrs. Phœbe Palmer, in the Guide to Holiness for Nov. 1861, gives expression to the deep interest she has long felt in the subject of the second advent of the Saviour. "My conviction," she writes, "deepens, that the drama of this world's history is fast winding up." Her surprise at the apathy on this subject, so prevalent in Christendom, calls for a word. Would that it might fall under her eye, and that she could be induced thoroughly to ponder the point to which we call attention. Mrs. P. says—"To my mind there is that which is so emphatic in the scriptures of truth on this solemn yet glorious theme, that I am amazed christians of the present day do not feel more like the early christians, who would fain have hastened the day by their eager longings for it."

The longing cherished by the "early christians" for our Lord's second appearing is easily explained. Their only hope of a future life was associated with the event. Had they believed that death would translate them to the presence of the Redeemer, and introduce them to the "pleasures forevermore," the interest they felt in Christ's return from heaven would be a very proper subject of amazement. But they cherished no such faith. "The resurrection," as Dr. Hodge truly remarks in his note on 2 Cor. iv. 14—"the resurrection, therefore, was the one great, all-absorbing object of anticipation and desire to the early christians, and should be to us." "And should be to us," remarks Dr. Hodge. It should be indeed! but is it? Emphatically, we reply, No, it is not. And so true is this, that Mr. Spurgeon, of London—who admits that "the very staple of the preaching of the apostles was the resurrection of the dead"—declares that "there are very few christians who believe the resurrection of the dead." This statement is doubtless too strong, but it is hardly more sweeping than the remark of Dr. Adam Clarke, who says respecting the resurrection, "There is not a doctrine in the gospel on which more stress is laid, and there is not a doctrine in the present system of teaching which is treated with more neglect." Aside, however, from the admissions here cited, the palpable fact which presents itself throughout the length and breadth of Christendom is this—that the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead is very greatly neglected, and has very little influence in "exciting the followers of God to diligence, obedience, and cheerfulness." And we affirm unhesitatingly that any explanation that will account for this defection from the primitive faith, will also give the reason why so little interest is now manifested by professed christians in the coming of the Lord.

What is the explanation? We have already anticipated it, but we wish to show that in her article Mrs. Palmer herself avows the very sentiment which has so effectually and deplorably turned away attention from that longing for Christ's return which was so marked a feature in early christianity. First, however, let us look at another remark of Mr. Spurgeon. "By the resurrection of the dead is meant something very different from the immortality of the soul; that, every christian believes, and therein are only on a level with the heathen, who believe it too." Of course, we deny the allegation of Mr. Spurgeon that every christian believes the soul immortal. His assertion that in believing it a christian is "only on a level with the heathen," we willingly leave with those whom it will be likely either to flatter or offend. Mr. S. declares that the resurrection of the dead and the immortality of the soul are "very different." Very true; and it will be found that just in proportion as the latter doctrine is made prominent, the former is shifted into the background, its place being usurped by a sentiment which loads the body with disgrace and gives the believer his reward at death. When Mrs. Palmer shall have accomplished as much in correcting the errors which prevail in the church of the present day respecting the believers' condition in death, as she has, by her untiring and faithful labors, in awakening an interest in the subject of personal holiness and entire consecration to God, she will have less cause to be amazed that "eager longings" for Christ's coming do not more generally prevail among believers. But, alas! her own mind is in darkness in respect to the time when saints will be rewarded. In proof of this, we have only to cite the remark with which her letter in the Guide to Holiness concludes. It is as follows: "But I have unexpectedly permitted my pen to run on in the contemplation of this glorious subject until I have little room for anything else. Through grace I am daily enabled to apprehend more fully that to live is Christ. And whether I tarry till Jesus comes, it matters but little. Life at the longest is but for a moment."

'Or pass through death triumphant home,'

Here we have the theology which should dispel Mrs. P.'s amazement. Death is exalted to a level with the coming of Jesus. Through it the saint goes "triumphant home." Through it saints have been thus going home for these six thousand years. Truly! if this be the case, "it matters but little" whether Jesus ever comes again! and since Mrs. P.'s theory of passing "through death triumphant home" is the prevalent one in the religious world, and since death stands ever ready to carry believers to glory, having been constantly about this work since the demise of the first saint, it is not strange that in these days Death is permitted to wear the honor which an uncorrupted faith eighteen hundred years ago was wont to bestow upon the coming of the Lord and the resurrection of the dead.

To believers in man's entire mortality is committed an important work. The coming of the Lord Jesus, "without sin unto salvation," is the "blessed hope" of the gospel. To make men see and feel this, we must show them from the Bible that future and endless life comes by a resurrection from the dead, and that Jesus, our LIFE-GIVER, is to achieve this mighty work at his appearing and kingdom. The notion that death brings triumph to the saint must be exhibited in contrast with the glorious revelation of Jesus and the resurrection. The lustre of the God-given disclosure of Life only in Christ is destroyed by the fable of the immortality of the soul. Let us evince our gratitude for the light we have received by putting forth unceasing efforts to make known the glad tidings to the unenlightened and the perishing.

R. W.

"THE ABOMINATION OF DESOLATION."

BR. STORRS:—I have noticed that a writer in the HERALD, in explaining the xxiv. chap. of Matt., takes the ground that the abomination of desolation, spoken of therein, refers to the Roman army under Titus; and that the time of trouble, alluded to the 21st verse, had its fulfillment at the siege and capture of the city of Jerusalem by the Romans.

For many years I have been settled in the conviction that the above view is not correct, but, on the contrary, is in direct conflict with other plain declarations of prophecy.

I will not here give any opinion as to whom, or what this abomination of desolation may refer to: if it can be shown that the time of trouble, in connection with the setting up of that abomination, has not yet had its fulfillment, it will follow as a consequence that the abomination, which was to co-exist with that time of trouble, could not have stood up in the holy place at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem, but must, like the time of trouble, be yet in the future.

Let us look at the 21st verse. It reads thus: "For then"—when this abomination stands in the holy place—"shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, NOR EVER SHALL BE. In Dan. xii. 1, 2, we read: "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great Prince which standeth for the children of the people: and there shall be a time of trouble, SUCH AS NEVER WAS SINCE THERE WAS A NATION EVEN TO THAT SAME TIME: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall wake: some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt."

The time of trouble, spoken of in Dan. xii. is said to be the greatest ever witnessed up to that time. It is also connected with the resurrection of the dead. Consequently, as it is greater than any time of trouble which has preceded it, and is associated with the resurrection, that time of trouble caused by the siege of Jerusalem, by the Romans under Titus, could not have been the one spoken of in Matt. xxiv. But as the trouble referred to in Matt. xxiv. 21 is represented as being greater than any preceding, or ever succeeding it, and as the one spoken of in Dan. xii. is also said to be "such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time," and as it is connected with the resurrection, we must, if we reason logically, conclude that the time of trouble spoken of in Dan. and Matt. are not two different or distinct events, but that they refer to one and the same thing; consequently, the time of trouble spoken of in Matt. xxiv. is yet unfulfilled, and is connected with the resurrection of the dead, and the abomination of desolation does not therefore refer to the Roman army under Titus at the siege of Jerusalem.

Thus, a comparison of Matt. with Dan. settles clearly the point that they both refer to the same time of trouble, and that this event is connected with the time of the end—with the time of the resurrection. May we all be led into the light of the truth as revealed in the word of God, and "be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of man." Yours in hope of eternal life.

JOHN FONDEY, M. D.

Phila, April 12, 1867.

THE END OF THE AGE.

"Ye know not when the time is."—Mark xiii. 33.

"Ye, brethren, are not in the darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief."—1 Thess. v. 4.

"Of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you. For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night."—1 Thess. v. 2.

"When these things begin to come to pass, lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh."—Luke xxi. 28.

These divine declarations are certainly all true. If they seem contradictory, they cannot be so in fact. Nor are they hard to reconcile. The not knowing when the time is, has reference only to the precise time: we may know the proximate time. Yet it might be asked: Granting the millenarian doctrine to be perfectly scriptural, and able to endure the closest scrutiny, on what grounds does the expectation of the speedy coming of the Lord rest? Let us, then,—leaving specific calculations, as, in the view of some, unreliable, or even dangerous—look at the general indications that present themselves.

1. Our blessed Saviour pointed out that, in the world, his church would have tribulation; and that, during the period of his absence from the earth, wars, pestilences, famines, earthquakes, signs in the atmosphere, &c., should succeed each other in unbroken succession. But he has also left us to conclude that, at the time of the end, these horrors would greatly multiply, and be intensified. This we now see. And this, then, is the first sign of the nearness of the approaching end.

In order, however, that these disturbances shall give a clear indication, and that we may not be misled by attaching undue importance to passing events, merely because they strongly affect us, it is necessary that the aggravation shall be clear and sharp, and surpassing what was known before.

And that such is the fact, what attentive observer can deny? It is true, there are persons on whom the clearest proofs make no impression. But what of it? Such were they who in the days of Noah, "knew not;" but not for want of proof, or of opportunity. And so, the Lord says, it will again be.

With most marked augmentation and steady pace, wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, &c., have, in an unexampled manner, been increasing for the last few years. From the ends of the earth, from every land, have come continuous rumors of war, or narratives of wholesale slaughter. During the latter half of 1866, especially, this was the case. The report of a new war, or of threatened hostilities, or an account of some sanguinary conflict, came almost as regularly as the morning paper. The daily news looked like a running commentary on the predictions of scripture. Thoughtful minds pondered these things, and asked, whither are these things tending? But few reflected that they might be be precursors of the Anointed King. Cast your eye over the globe, and point out, if you can, what region has not been agitated, embroiled, or full of turmoil and bloodshed. It is not necessary to recapitulate the facts; they are fresh in every one's memory; for the whole world is now so bound together in commercial intercourse, that it has become one vast newsfield, every part of which is, more or less, an object of interest.

Demosthenes, when asked what were the three essentials to successful oratory, is reported to have replied: "Action—action—action." And if it were asked, what are the prominent marks of the politics of our day, it might be similarly said: "Agitation, agitation, agitation." Post me deluvium.

Disasters, were multiplied to an extraordinary extent, in the past year. Floods and flame, and tempests, ravaged both hemispheres to an unprecedented degree. Large portions of some cities were laid in ashes; and it is a remarkable circumstance, that in nearly every leading city of the United States the chief theatre was burnt down. The losses by fire exceeded those of average years as three to one. The reports of murders and unnatural crimes multiplied to an unprecedented degree. The world seems out of joint.

Look at the spirit of the age. Have we not reached the "perilous times" of the last days? The tendency is to glorify man. Man's genius, man's inventions, man's intellect, human progress and human perfectibility! And we are assured by the sacred scriptures that all this will culminate in man-worship—in idolatry. Incredible result! And yet perfectly natural. "Reform, reform, reform," is the cry. Society (as well as political arrangements), must be "remodelled" and "reconstructed," say they; and effete customs, hoary with age, but relics of superstition—(Bible principles mainly)—be laid aside, like a discarded vestment—useful once, perhaps, and admired, but no longer serviceable. This is a "fast" age; and everything hurries to its climax.

Nor is any uncommon sagacity required to perceive the nature of the new mould in which these ideas shall receive shape. If we compare the prophetic word with the developments around us, it plainly appears. Its name is Spiritualism, Demonism, or,—if you like it better—Intellectualism. But inasmuch as it still lies perdu, the influence which this system of demon-virtue has on the community is underestimated by most persons. Yet occasionally a fact comes to light which shows the powerful hold it has taken. Thus, one of the leading United States Senators, to whom many have fondly looked as a champion of justice and equal rights, draws his inspiration regularly from the "Banner of Light;" one of, perhaps, the most wicked and satanic sheets that ever was devised by the combined ingenuity of men and demons. Take another instance. From San Francisco an able correspondent writes: "Three things make the upper classes of society here completely rotten: the saloons, spiritualism, and the greed of gold. When the outer crust is pierced some of the excellent of the earth are, indeed, brought to view; but it takes a long while to find them out. 'Spiritual affinities' dissolve the most sacred relations everywhere; but here they seem to be already the rule." Such, in substance, is the account of the correspondent, who goes on to illustrate, at some length, the ruin brought upon hundreds of families.

Now, is not this a fearful state of things? And yet this is but one example. Pierce the varnished crust of modern "society" and you find a rotten dust-ball.

The wickedness, too, that has always been in the heart of unregenerate men, is now reaching the climax of outward expression. Does any one doubt it? He reads no "advertisements" in the daily papers, nor ever looks into what is going on all the time around him. The sins of the flesh, in secret, riot around him. The very privacy of our homes is invaded by handbills, describing, or pretending to describe, inventions, the mention of which, in a truly God-fearing community, would confine the authors in the penitentiary, as the worst sort of deliberate poisoners. Never were such times known before.

And if we now turn to the outward church, how lamentable the spectacle, regarding it as a whole! God be praised, true disciples abound. But the wheat disappears from view in the vast heap of chaff. The religion of the day is a feeble religion, "lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times." It is a hollow religion, "marked by activity and excitement, but with a soul not at rest." It is an easy-minded religion, "without self-denial and sacrifice." It is a second-rate religion, "with no all-constraining love." It is an uncertain religion, "not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon."

"Men will praise thee when thou doest well to thyself." But now, the church has adopted the standard of the world—success. Everything, to be well thought of, must be, more or less, connected with outward show. The church coaxes the world into good-will. Looking at the present standard, one might suppose that Mary had made a mistake in choosing the good part in the way she did; or, rather, did not. Why, she just did nothing at all. How many "souls" did she gain? None, that we read of. But in heaven they have another standard—devotedness to Christ: Christ is all. And he who is truly constrained by the love of Christ, and devoted to his redeeming Lord, even though debarred at present from outward activity in his service, is more thought of than he who should convert ted thousand souls, or gather a hundred congregations, or contribute $500,000 at once, and yet be lacking in this important quality "What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord." Shall we say, with a well-known writer, that the "soul" is become—unwittingly to many, we may hope, but none the less practically and actually—the idol of the church? In other words, that sacred things have usurped the place which belongs to Christ alone? Is it not true that many of the fundamental truths of our most holy religion are rarely or never heard in hundreds of our leading pulpits, the occupants of which have learned to take their tone from the audience? What was it, we would ask, that made the Master's teaching so very unpopular? Is not the inspired photograph of 2 Tim. iii. already now depicted, even if not yet "developed?" This subject demands more attention than the space at command will at this time permit.

But it is a fact universally deplored by all true believers, that the church of our day, whilst outwardly prosperous as regards numbers, popularity, influence, property, and costly edifices, is so very feeble, unspiritual, and worldly-minded. Not all the tinsel and glitter can hide the lamentable fact, instinctively perceived by every renewed heart, that there prevails, on every hand, in the church—to sum up all evils in one—"the form of godliness without the power thereof."—Selected from Prophetic Times.

FAMINE IN EUROPE.

The recent mails from Europe are filled with accounts of suffering for lack of food, not only in Great Britain, but on the Continent as well. Accounts had been previously received of bread riots in London, Liverpool, and Madrid, and to-day we print a dispatch from Paris announcing the suppression of a formidable popular outbreak in Marchiennes, a manufacturing town in the northern part of France. Yet these do not tell half the story. Italy shares to such an extent in this general suffering that the statement is wrung from a Roman Catholic journal, that her people, from the Alps to the Apennines, are hungry; and so scarce is food that in some portions of that country the people are actually subsisting upon roots, which the fear of starvation compels them to dig and eat. Throughout the manufacturing districts of Great Britain, the distress is appalling. Relief committees have been organized in many cities and towns in the United Kingdom, and so general is the dearth of food that the London Times calls for the appointment of a general relief committee for the whole of England. The same steamer which brought these tidings also brought letters from English grain factors expressing great apprehension about the supply of wheat, and orders from Antwerp for rye at prices which will make the cost of it delivered there one dollar a bushel in gold, while, heretofore, its average price in that market has been but three-fifths of that sum. In a word, the facts at hand warrant the statement that Europe, from the North Sea to the Mediterranean, is crying for bread.

The question at once arises, Whence are to come the supplies to meet this pressing demand? The wheat crop of Great Britain in 1866, like that in 1865, was short, and, according to the latest calculation, 64,000,000 bushels will have to be imported to supply the average consumption until the harvest of 1867. This would naturally come from the Continent and the United States, but from the latter little can be expected save from California, and of the whole Continent none has any surplus but Russia. The stock of wheat now in store in the principal markets in this country is, in round numbers, 4,000,000 bushels, which is about two-thirds of the quantity in store at this time last year, and it is not accumulating. It is further estimated that the total supply of wheat at the grain markets of the world (taking into account the reduced quantity remaining from 1865 and the short crop of 1866), is but two-thirds of the average supply of previous years.

As before hinted, it is mainly to Russia and California that Europe must look for relief, and, were the former to withhold supplies, a general famine would be the result. Herein may lie the reason for the apparent apathy of France and England towards the action of Russia in reference to the Eastern question, since they are in no condition to go to war if that course should be rendered necessary by the conduct of the Czar; and it is among the possibilities that the Emperor of all the Russias, conscious of his opportunity, may avail himself of it to seize the long-coveted prize of the key to the Bosphorus.—N. Y. World.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy or their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage as his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"GEO. STORRS,
BOX 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 171. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 1, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 29.

THE HERALD OF LIFE.

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

A DOCTOR OF DIVINITY BEWILDERED.

BY S. W. BISHOP.

In the World's Crisis of April 17th, the editor has copied an article written by the Rev. John Todd, D. D., headed "Fashionable Murder." This article is commended by the editor of the Crisis to the attention of his readers as noting a peculiar sign of the times. We wonder if the editor of that paper sees the peculiar pith of that article. The great burden of the lamentations of the Rev. D. D., as he wails over the practice he condemns, seems to be this: The crying sin of this practice consists in that "It is quenching immortal existence." These are Dr. Todd's own words. We must all concede that the practice the Rev Doctor condemns is very wicked: but most certainly if the result is as he states, it enhances the enormity of the crime in an infinite degree. Only think, some wicked mortal puts forth his puny arm, and by some course of drugging or other process, puts out of existence, annihilates, an immortal being!! This is certainly murder of no ordinary degree. We need not wonder that the pious soul of the Rev. Dr. is stirred to its depths with holy indignation and religious horror in the contemplation of such an awful crime. But could not the learned D. D. somehow persuade himself to believe that these unborn immortals were by some process, on the committal of this crime by the mother, sent to his spirit heaven? Then, though he might still think it a crime of great magnitude, it would not be so direful in its consequences, and thus the Dr.'s feelings might peradventure be relieved somewhat of their intensity. Or is there something in the Rev. D. D.'s creed that forbids the salvation of such infants, though they be immortal? If this be so, we must all admire the Dr.'s benevolence in letting these innocents pass out of existence rather than sending them to a hell of torments, notwithstanding that in doing so he virtually repudiates his own orthodoxy?

But to our mind it is perfectly easy to account for, why the Rev. D. D. gets into the tangled position in which we find him, in the article copied into the Crisis. When Job declares that had it happened to him after the same manner of which the Dr. speaks in the article under consideration, he should have had no existence at all (see Job iii. 16), he not only talks in harmony with all other teachings of the holy word, but he is also in strict harmony with the science of human existence. The Dr. being a learned man, knew that as a consequence of the committal of the crime against which he writes, whatever life the infant possessed was extinguished. It being a nice point to determine where, in the history of the child, immortal life commences, unless it be at that point where is the beginning of any life, the learned Dr. tacitly admits that there is its first beginning. Now as we have before observed, he knows, scientifically, that all life becomes extinct in all such cases as those of which he writes. Therefore without premeditation as to its absurdity, he lets drop from his pen, the only legitimate conclusion that can possibly be drawn from his premises, and his mind is so intensely absorbed in the contemplation of the heinousness of the crime against which he is writing, that it does not strike him at all as being ridiculously absurd to suppose that a feeble piece of mortal clay can by a simple dose from the apothecary put out of existence an immortal, deathless soul.

But the Dr. crosses his own track; for, before he closes his article he says that the practice he condemns is a direct war against "a child which would otherwise have an immortal existence." This statement amounts to saying, that but for this "war" on the child it would have had an immortal existence; but this war prevents the child from entering on such an existence. How is this, Dr.? How can you "quench" what does not yet exist? But after all, in this last statement the Rev. D. D. is nearer the truth than in the first place. If he will stick to this statement with a little qualification he would be in harmony with the oracles of divine truth. For, according to the holy scriptures, all who are put on probation in this life will, if they obey the conditions of their probation, attain unto an immortal life. Immortality is only offered our race on conditions.

"To those who, by perseverance in good works, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality, to them he will give life eternal." Murdock's translation. Rom. ii. 7.) But the Dr. turns another summerset; for, at a little further on we find these words—"I appeal to our New England women, the daughters of an ancestry who never quenched life immortal," etc. What a remarkable ancestry these women had! Men who had never murdered an immortal being! O, what a budget of incongruities, diabolical inconsistencies, and God-dishonoring presumptions, and brainless vagaries go to make up the theology of the present day. We ought to render to a God of love and mercy everlasting thanksgiving that, though it has subjected us to the anathemas of the religious world, and though it has cost us our all of this world, we have been led by the divine Spirit—the Spirit of truth which he has sent into the world, to see a reasonable position; and have been enabled to purge from our system of theology such horrid inconsistencies as are continually landing, not only Dr. Todd, but many other learned and estimable men, in the most unreasonable absurdities. I am more and more satisfied, every day of my life, with the glorious advanced position held by our dear brethren of the Life Union, on the doctrine of a future life. It sheds such rays of light and glory on the divine plan, as shields our hearts against skepticism, and makes us to see that all is plain, reasonable, and godlike, in that arrangement appointed by infinite wisdom to save us. Viewing this plan in all its divine excellency, all the miserable subterfuges got up, and the pettifogging, special pleadings and dodges inaugurated by men who would gladly, if they could, overthrow the truth of God, are not so much as the chaff to the wheat. Among them all the most sickening and absolutely silly that any foolish man ever concocted, is the whim held by some that Christ and his saints get nothing but mortal life by a resurrection from death. Thank God for a system that needs no daubing with "untempered mortar." Amen.

OUR LORD AT CAPERNAUM.

[Continued from No. 164.]

The men whom Jesus thus publicly rebuked—characterizing them as a generation of vipers—for the moment were silenced. Some of their party, however, now interposed. Jesus had unequivocally asserted that his works had been wrought by none other than the mighty power of God. Let him prove this as Moses, Joshua, Samuel, Elijah had done. The works themselves were not enough to do this. The popular belief was that demons and false gods could work signs on earth. It was the true God only who could give signs from heaven. Such a sign they had asked Christ to show. "The people gathered thick together," we are told, to hear Christ's answer; but, as at other times when the same demand was made, our Lord would point to no other sign than that of the most remarkable foreshadowing in Old Testament times of his own resurrection from the dead. This allusion to the extraordinary incident in the history of Jonas was doubly unsatisfactory to his hearers. It was no sign from above, but rather one from below. It was a sign of that of which they had as yet no conception—in which they had no faith—it carried with it to them no additional or confirmatory evidence. No other sign, however, was to be given to a generation which was acting worse than the heathen inhabitants of Nineveh, the Gentile queen of the south; a greater than Jonas, a greater than Solomon, was among them, yet they depised his wisdom and would not repent at his call. A brighter light than had ever dawned upon them was now shining—nay, set up conspicuously for them to behold it; but there must be an eye within to see, as well as a light without to look at, before any true illumination can take place. And if that eye be evil—be in any way incapacitated for true discernment, whatever the external effulgence be, the body remains full of darkness. Even such a darkness was now settling over a people who were going to present but too sad a type of what was sometimes seen in cases of demoniac possession, when an unclean spirit, for a time cast out, returned with seven other spirits more wicked than itself. From among the Jewish people, from and after the Babylonish captivity, the old demon of idolatry had been ejected. For a time the house had been swept and garnished, but now a sevenfold worse infatuation was coming upon this generation to drive it on to a deadlier catastrophe.

The exciting intelligence that in the presence of a vast multitude Jesus had been accused by the Pharisees of being nothing else than an emissary and ally of the devil; that, not satisfied with defending himself against the charge, he had in turn become their accuser, and broken out into the most open and unrestrained denunciation of their whole order; that the feud which for months past had been secretly gathering strength had ended at last in an open rupture, was carried to the house in which Mary and the Lord's brothers were dwelling. A fatal thing it seems to them for him to have plunged into such a deadly step with the most powerful party in the country. They will try what they can to draw him out of it. They hasten to the spot and find the crowd so large, the press so great, that they cannot get near him. "Behold," says one who is standing next to Jesus, "thy mother and thy brethren stand without desiring to speak with thee" A mother who, if fond enough, was yet so fearful, who once before had tried to dictate to him, and had been checked at Cana; brethren, who thought that he was beside himself, none of whom as yet believed on him—what had they to do to interrupt him at his work—to move him from his purpose? "Who is my mother?" said he to the man who conveyed to him the message, "and who are my brethren?" Then pausing, looking "round about on them which sat about him," stretching forth his hands towards his disciples—"Behold!" he exclaimed, "my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." A woman in the crowd, who had been standing lost in a mere human admiration of him, hears his mother spoken of, and cannot in the fulness of her womanly emotion but call her blessed: "Yea, rather, blessed," said Jesus to her, "are they that hear the word of God, and keep it."

So, when in the very heart of his mission-work on earth they spake to him about the closest human ties, his nearest earthly relatives—close as these were, and willing as he was in their own mode and sphere to acknowledge them, so resolutely did Jesus wave them aside, so sublimely did he rise above them, setting himself forth as the elder brother of that whole family in heaven and earth named by his name, and who are followers in the footsteps of him who came not to do his own will but the will of him that sent him. The earthly and the heavenly bonds, the common and the christian ties, do not always coincide, neither are they always in harmony. If ever they interfere—if mother, or brother, or sister, or dearest friend should once tempt us away from him in nearness to whom standeth our eternal life—then let us remember the scene in Capernaum, and ask our Lord to give us of his own Spirit, here as everywhere to follow him.

Jesus did not go out to his mother and brethren when they sent for him, did not go even to their house when fatigue and exhaustion called for a brief repose. He accepted rather the invitation of a Pharisee to take a hurried repast in a neighboring dwelling, the multitude waiting meanwhile for him without. In haste to resume his work, and knowing withal that it was no friendly company he was asked to join, Jesus went in and sat down at once, neglecting the customary ablutions. The host and his friends were not slow to notice the neglect, nor was he slow to notice the sentence against him that they were passing in their hearts. The men around him here were part of that very band whose vile imputation of confederacy with Satan had already released his lips from all restraint, and called for and vindicated his addressing them as he had done. Nor does he alter now his tone. We may not, indeed, believe that all which St. Luke, in the latter half of the eleventh chapter of his gospel, records as spoken by him—the woe after woe pronounced upon the Pharisees and the lawyers—was uttered indoors, as soon as he had seated himself at the table. Knowing how usual a thing it is with the three Synoptical Evangelists to bring together into one discourse sentences that were uttered at different times and upon different occasions, we are inclined rather to believe that the greater part of it was spoken after the hasty meal was over, and Jesus stood once more the centre of a vast concourse, with Scribes and Pharisees urging him vehemently and provoking him to speak many things, lying in wait for him to catch something out of his mouth that they might accuse him. They got this out of his mouth: that here in Galilee, a year and more before that memorable day, the last of his public ministry, when he stood within the Temple and closed the exciting controversies with those terrible denunciations which St. Matthew has preserved to us in the twenty-third chapter of his gospel, in briefer and more compendious terms, the very woes that were then rolled over the heads of the Pharisees of Jerusalem, were rolled over theirs in Capernaum. A new phase of our Saviour's character—very different from that which we had before us in his treatment of the penitent sinner—thus reveals itself to our view; his firmness, his courage, his outspokenness, the depth of his indignant recoil from, the sternness of his unmitigated condemnation of, the inconsistencies, the hypocrisies, the haughtiness, the cruelty, the tyranny of the Scribes and Pharisees. He had a right to speak and act towards them which none but he could have. He was their omniscient judge. He knew that in hating him they were hating his Father also; that the spirit of persecution which they displayed sprung from a deeper source than mere personal animosity to him as a man. As no other can ever occupy the same position to his fellow-men as that in which Jesus stood, so to no other can his conduct here be a guide or precedent. One thing only remains for us to do: to try as thoroughly as we can to enter into the entire harmony that there was between all the love, and pity, and gentleness, and compassion that he showed towards the ignorant, the erring, the sinful who manifested the least openness to conviction, the least disposition to repent and believe, and that profound, and as we may call it, awful antipathy which he displayed to those who, built up in their spiritual pride, under the very cloak of a pretentious pietism indulged some of the meanest and most malignant passions of our nature, wilfully shutting their eyes to the light of heaven that was shining in the midst of them, and plunging on in the darkness towards nothing short of spoken and acted blasphemy against the Holy Ghost.

[To be Continued.]

SEVEN YEARS OF CHANGE.

Rev. R. S. STORRS, of the city of Brooklyn, gave a lecture at the Academy of Music, in that city, on the "Seven Years of Change among the Nations," from which we give the following extract. He said:

It is about four years since President Lincoln proposed to Congress the plan of a compensated emancipation of slaves, to take effect in the year 1900, and yet to-day not a slave remains in our country. Five years ago the emperor of the French commenced the movement for the establishment of a monarchy in Mexico, and in October he proposed to Russia and England a joint intervention in our affairs, which meant war, by these powers, against the United States for the purpose of setting up the South as an independent nation. The result of his efforts in both directions was not such as to induce him to repeat the experiment. (Applause) While these great events have been transpiring at home, there have been great events abroad, full of importance as bearing upon the future progress of mankind. The prominent events that have grouped themselves in these seven years are likely to be of great importance to the ultimate future of European Christendom. First, looking to that empire whose relations with us have become so friendly, and are likely to become more and more so in years to come, Russia. Russia at the close of the Crimean war was depressed, not so much at the comparatively trifling loss of Bessarabia, as at the destruction of the Russian hope of making Constantinople a Russian city and the Black Sea a Russian lake. The Russian national symbol of the crescent surmounted by the cross was veiled in mourning. The Czar who had commenced the war, did not see its close, but bequeathed to his son Alexander the herculean task which he himself, with all his energy, dared not undertake, the attainment of the elevation of Russia by the emancipation of her 22,000,000 of serfs. On the 3d of March, 1861, the Czar promulgated his ukase decreeing the emancipation of the serfs within two years, and in July, 1865, the great scheme of freedom was legally accomplished. The provisions for securing to the emancipated serfs an ownership of the soil had been attended with immense political and moral changes, not the least of which was the investment of the serfs with the right of suffrage in the communes, enabling them to be represented in the provincial diet. Russia, in 1865, appropriated $5,000,000 for purposes of education, and the emancipated serfs have increased this sum vastly by voluntary contributions. Colleges have been established, the scriptures have been circulated extensively, the censorship of the press relaxed. In 1864 there were 1,836 books published; new lines of railroad have been built, and the national interests developed in every way. But the Czar could not make the emancipated serfs at once intelligent citizens by a ukase. Time alone must complete the work, until Russia, with her 80,000,000 of population, her 8,000,000 square miles, and her 40 spoken languages, shall assume her true position among the nations of the earth.

Turning to Prussia, Dr. Storrs traced the early history of that empire, and its gradual progress from an insignificant power, through the eminent military achievements of Frederick the Great, until at last, in 1866, it was a kingdom of 108,000 square miles, with a population of 18,500,000; a kingdom singularly divided, not split in the center, but divided into two parts, absolutely 18,000 square miles on the west, and 30,000 on the east—divided as much as Alabama divides Georgia from Mississippi. All these intervening territories are now embraced in the kingdom of Prussia. She has expanded her territory to 158,000 square miles, and to 23,000,000 of people during the past year, adding 30,000 square miles and 4,500,000 people. In Russia one figure stands prominent—Alexander. In Prussia also one figure stands prominent—not that of the emperor, but of another, a stout, active, determined man, full of the old Prussian grit. It is Von Bismarck, who has been prime minister of Prussia since September, 1862; who walks the streets with the most signal disdain of other men; a man who has shown such wonderful political sagacity, and such invincible tenacity, that he has made himself feared of all men in Europe as he was before the most hated of all men in Germany. How have these great results been brought about? They began in 1864 with the confiscations of Schleswig and Holstein, with the nominal protection of those provinces from Denmark, their subsequent partition among Austria and Prussia, and the final determination of Bismarck that they should become permanently incorporated in the kingdom of Prussia. Then followed the swift and victorious action of Prussia. The protests of Austria against the decision of Bismarck were regarded as declarations of war. The smaller German states were immediately overawed by Prussian armies—conquered before they knew it. Like the man the Sultan beheaded, their heads were off before they had time to cough. [Laughter.] Prussia put 630,000 men into the field, and left about 100,000 in garrison. The war was prosecuted with vigor, beginning June 14, with the invasion of Saxony and Hanover, and closing with the victory of Sadowa, July 3, when the last great Austrian army was destroyed, and the Prussians took up their march for Vienna, leaving great Austrian fortresses with their garrisons behind them. The Prussians won 36 victories in 30 days.

The financial administration of Prussia comprises a sinking fund, and its scheme contemplates a speedy extinguishment of the national debt. Thus, in its educational, its religious, its military, and its financial characteristics, Prussia possesses the elements of greatness. Napoleon sees it, but sees it too late. He thought Bismarck a mere schemer to secure his own power, and he now tries to impose upon military France the military system that Germany has had for years, and which Bismarck has used to such advantage. He seeks to unite Holland, Switzerland and Belgium with himself. He tries to buy Luxemburg. When Napoleon gets it he will be likely to let the world know it. [Laughter.] The congress of Vienna, intended to keep Germany down, is overthrown at Sadowa. Thiers will sooner see the sun become a gas lamp than see the diplomacy of Vienna re-established in Europe. [Applause.] While in Russia one figure stood pre-eminent, that of Alexander, and in Germany one figure, that of Bismarck, in Italy there were three, Cavour, Garibaldi and Victor Emanuel. To Cavour, now dead six years, more than to any other man, was to be attributed the immense change which has taken place in Italy. He was the brain of the movement of which Garibaldi was the fervent heart, and Victor Emanuel the strong right arm. His great power in Italy came from the fact that he embodied a spirit which was centuries old, the spirit of Italian unity. There had been three policies proposed for the renovation of Italy, that of Mazzini, who desired at once to establish republican institutions; that of Louis Napoleon, who desired to establish a confederation of separate states similar to the German confederation; and, thirdly, that of Cavour, who determined to make Piedmont, the continental part of the Italian kingdom, so prominent that the other states should gravitate towards it, be annexed to it, be pervaded by its influences, and so Italy should be unified under the king of Sardinia. He entered upon this plan as early as 1852, in his efforts to promote the material prosperity of Piedmont. When the Russian war with Turkey broke out, his first step was to send 15,000 men to the Crimean war, so as to procure the right to sit in the congress which should arrange the terms of peace, when peace came. There he won the respect and confidence of Napoleon, with whom, soon after, he formed an alliance against Austria. In the war which followed, the victories of Solferino, Magenta, and San Marina were won, and then followed the hasty peace of Villafranca. The lecturer recounted in rapid sucession the additions of territory to the kingdom of Victor Emanuel, one after another coming in, till all are included except Rome. The great exploits and the disinterested character of Garibaldi were duly mentioned, and a review of the present condition and future prospects of Italy with her 108,000 square miles of territory, and her 24,000,000 of inhabitants, yet with her 1,200,000,000 of public debt, her enormous expenses, and her uneducated population. The government was making praiseworthy efforts to improve the intelligence of the people, and the prospect was that with increasing prosperity, reviving commerce, and widening edncation, the country would at least be fairly started on its career. Still, Italy will never be complete until the empire of the Pope, as Ricasoli says, is an empire of souls—until the temporal dominion is merged into the spiritual, and until all the other splendid capitals have Rome at last for their majestic front.

JOB'S MANNER OF LIFE.

"If I have seen any perish for want of clothing, or any poor without covering; if his loins have not blessed me, and if he were not warmed with the fleece of my sheep; if I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless, when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulder-blade and mine arm be broken from the bone." Job xxx. 19—22.

Job had no respect of persons. He fed the wicked as well as the good; he clothed his enemies, and lifted up his hand against none. Who can say as much as this, and have it come from the heart of truth? Reader, have you made gold your hope, or your confidence? Do you rejoice in your wealth, or because your hand has gotten much? Do you rejoice at the destruction of him who hated you, or lifted up yourself when evil found him? Have you closed your door against a traveller and caused him to lodge in the streets? Much more could be asked, but this is sufficient to test the life of any. Let us all act while it is day, and not deceive ourselves and finally perish forever in our own corruption.

SANFORD HART.

Unionville, Conn.

RITUALISM IN NEW YORK.

The best argument, probably, to show the character of Episcopal ritualism, is to present an account of their services. The following is a description of the services in one of our New York Episcopal churches, on Easter Sunday (April 21st) taken from the report in the Tribune. Such services are well calculated to draw together lovers of show, always numerous among the rich and fashionable in our great cities, and by them will no doubt be made popular in all places. W. M.

In the morning the sermon was preached by the Rev. Mr. Noyes, and the mass was celebrated by the Rev. Mr. Morrill, the Rector. In the evening 23 candidates were received into the church by the rite of confirmation, Bishop Potter officiating. A number of the catechumens about to be confirmed were dressed in white, a custom now generally disused among Protestants, but once much practiced in this country, especially in the German churches. The church was very full, both morning and evening, and many persons were compelled to turn away long before the candles were lighted for the beginning of the service. At the evening service all the altar candles—seven on each side—were lighted before the appearance of the procession, but not the two on the altar itself. This done, the procession filed into the chancel by the vestry-door, first the cross-bearer, then the chanters and clerks, then the officiating ministers, and last the Bishop—all reverencing the altar. The Bishop only bowed to the altar, as did also the priests, and at once went to his chair in the chancel, to the right of the sanctuary. The ceremony was the order of evening prayer and the form of confirmation prescribed in the Book of Common Prayer; but the intonation and chanting was something altogether different from the repetition of the responses in other Episcopal churches; beside which the more devout worshippers crossed themselves on entering the church, and reverenced the altar at the mention of the Sacred Name. When the confirmation service commenced yesterday the hymn from the ordinal was sung by the choristers, the priests took their places before the altar, and the candidates ranged themselves in the chancel, the Bishop meanwhile remaining at his chair. When all was ready he entered the sanctuary and confirmed the candidates in the manner prescribed, by the laying on of hands. Before dismissing them he spoke a few words of counsel and encouragement, and expressed his satisfaction that among those in the choir to whom he had spoken a year ago, were a number to be confirmed in their most holy faith. At the conclusion of the service the singers and clergy left the church very nearly in the order they had entered—first the choisters and clerks, then the acholyte bearing the cross, then the rector and assistant minister, and last, the bishop, the rector and his assistant separating at the vestry door to permit their superior to pass through.

TRUST IN GOD.

Wesley, in a sermon at Doncaster, in 1790, related the following circumstance: "A poor woman of the Romanist persuasion having had the misfortune to break her china crucifix, immediately went to her priest to inform him, mourning greatly on account of the sad occurrence, and frequently crying out, 'Now I have broken my crucifix, I have nothing to trust in but the great God.'" When Wesley repeated these words he appeared to feel strongly, and in a manner peculiar to himself, exclaimed, "What a mercy she had a great God to trust in!" A respectable Romanist, who occasionally visited the chapel, was present, and was powerfully affected. "The great God to trust in" touched his heart. He was very deeply convinced of his need of salvation, and joined the Methodist Society, became an ornament to religion, and to the day of his death was an ardent admirer of Wesley.

Wm. Allen thus replies to a question as to his mental impressions:—Those who are in the spirit of the world are so apt to ask, How do you know whether what you take for a divine impulse, may not be the working of your own imagination? It sweetly occurred that it might be known by the same test that our Lord gave to distinguish his followers from those of the world—by the fruits.

The Resurrection.

"How are the dead raised up, and with what body do they come?"—Paul

If the above question is of any importance it is worth having a proper answer. Now there are some of us who do not understand the work of the great LIFE-GIVER as a restoration; that is to say, restoring this universal system, and thereby bringing to pass what we call the resurrection; but we look upon him as the beginning of the creation of God; and those who come subsequently in the resurrection as belonging to, and being part of, that same creation; and I think that is what Paul argues in answering the above question. Hear him: "It is raised a spiritual body." Was it sown "a spiritual body?" O, no. Then is the same thing raised that was sown? Not unless the natural body and the spiritual one are the same. But it is said that we "deny the resurrection of the body." Well, we acknowledge the resurrection of just such a body as Paul sets forth in I Corinth. xv. and positively deny all others. We hail him as our able exponent on the resurrection, at least. Hear him again: "Thou sowest not that body that shall be, but bare grain." "Not that body that shall be." How then do some say, in speaking of Adam, a something that was not Adam before he died made to come up in a future life would be no resurrection? Paul believed there would be a resurrection notwithstanding "thou sowest not that body that shall be." Now take a kernel of wheat, according to Paul's figure, and plant it in the earth and watch the result. First the blade, then the ear, then the full, ripe wheat in the ear. How much of the first wheat, that which you planted, is actually in the full ripe wheat in the ear? I venture to say not a bit. But how then is it a resurrection? "God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body;" and, as in the case of wheat, it is the seed sown body in identity, even if there is none of the former body in it; and its bearing the identity of the former body justifies us with the apostle in calling it a resurrected body; and its being spiritual, whereas the former body was natural, makes it a new creation. But I am reminded that some will say, "Well, Christ came up as he went down; and he is the first fruits, or pattern." Ah, indeed! but will you claim that he was sown a natural body as we are? I apprehend that "the second man was the Lord from heaven" "the first is of the earth, earthy." I hail him as spiritual from his conception, hence if it can be shown that he came up as he went down, it will not follow that the saints come up as they go down; for they were not thus spiritual in their conception, but they belong to the earthy in their physical conception. Now we are informed, by men of science, that the entire system of a man is changed once in seven years, so that we do not contain, at the present time, a particle of the matter we had seven years ago; and yet we retain our identity and remember many things that we learned more than seven years ago. Is it incredible, then, that God can raise the identity, and that to perfection, without the aid of the old matter? It is not incredible to me. It would be deplorable in the extreme for us, after having been blessed with such glorious light, to adopt the notion of a corruptible resurrection. No, we shall have had corruption enough to deal with, not only physically, but morally and intellectually, while here. Thank God, we shall be free from it all, when raised from the dead. And again I say, Thank God. Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, praise the Lord. DANIEL.

Manchester, N. H., April 18, 1867.

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO FORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

THE EDITOR of this paper will take up the text Math. x. 28, which Mr. Henson charged him, with others, as "always evading," at Sawyer's Hall, as above, next Lord's day evening.

BR. WENDELL will preach at the same place one week from next Lord's day evening on Acts xxiv. 14, 15. The "Resurrection of the Just and Unjust." Probably also in the afternoon. Notice will be given in daily papers.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, MAY 1, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not; he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

NO PAPER NEXT WEEK.—Before another paper is issued our office is to be removed, which will necessarily produce some derangement and delay. In addition to that, the EDITOR will be absent several days next week, at Albany, attending to the interment of his son, who was deposited in the "Receiving Vault" of the Albany Cemetery, in February last, and who is now to be placed in the ground. This sad office will take up most of his time next week. For these reasons it is thought best to omit our issue at that time. This can be done without interfering with the arrangement of issuing twelve numbers each quarter of the year, making the 48 in all. Without this omission of one week's issue, we would have thirteen numbers this quarter. The omission of four weeks, during the year, must occur somewhere; and it is certainly better to have them distributed into one each quarter than to have them all together. Now, do not forget that next week you are not to expect a visit from the HERALD OF LIFE; but the week following it will come again as usual. Brethren and sisters, pray for us; and may our gracious LIFE-GIVER enrich you all.

THE EDITOR'S OFFICE, till some other arrangement is made, will be at his residence, No. 62 Hicks Street, Brooklyn, where he will be glad to see all who have any business to transact with him. It is but a short distance from Fulton Ferry. His Post Office address is unchanged. It is still "Box 4658, New York City" Do not forgot that. Persons who call for their papers in New York will find them at the office where the compositon is done, viz., "Room 40," one floor above where it has heretofore been published, at 37 Park Row.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND TRACTS can be had at the Editor's residence; of GEO. W. YOUNG, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at "Room 40" as above named.

The One Text of the O. T.

In the discussion last week, in Brooklyn, between Rufus Wendell, of Salem, Mass., and Joseph Henson, a minister of the Methodist E. church, Mr. H. found but one text in the Old Testament to support the idea of the revival into life of the wicked dead; that was Daniel xii. 2. After it was shown not to answer his purpose, he challenged the production of a man, who understood the original, to sustain his opponent's position. Mr. H. dealt largely in assumptions without proof; and frequently told the audience what we held, and how we "dare not meet" such and such texts, and calling "Geo. Storrs" by name with others, said "They always evade the text, 'are not able to kill the soul.'" We responded, audibly, "Never." It made no difference with him, however; on he went assuming and asserting what he pleased regardless of any corrections that might be made; for when told that we did not hold to certain positions which he charged on us, he paid no attention to the correction, but reiterated it again and again. We could not help thinking he learned such an ungentlemanly course—to say nothing of its unchristian character—from such a source as Robert W. Landis' work, published some years since by the Methodist Book Concern; a work for unfairness and misrepresentation which ought to make any man, who regards truth, blush. But our object at this time is to call the attention of our readers to JUDGE HALSTED'S remarks on Dan. xii. 2, found in his work, THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE, pages 580–1. Read this and you will see how much such "challenges" as Mr. Henson's amount to.

In this v. Dan. xii. 2, we have only to insert are before 'to (a) life eternal,' and are after 'others,' and this v. teaches what all scripture teaches, namely, the resurrection of the just, and the non-resurrection of the unjust. The Heb. Scriptures rarely, almost never, use the substantive verb to be in any of its parts. Hence we have are, shall be, is, was, were, &c., inserted all through the different versions, including the E. V. And many such insertions are found in this very book of Daniel. And in this very chap. xii. alone we have inserted in the E. V., v. 1, that shall be; v. 6, was, and it shall be; v. 7, was, and it shall be; v. 8, shall be; v. 9, are; v. 11, there shall be. And in this very verse James's Ecclesiastics actually did insert a word, and that a word wrongly inserted; the Ital. having inserted e, which is generally rendered and, though the E. V. somes renders it yea. The Ital. gives, the ones to life eternal, and the others to infamy (e) to infamy eternal: the Lat. gives alii .... alii; to be rendered, some. .... others: the Douay gives, some .... others: Gr., houtoi, these ...... houtoi, others. The E. V. could insert a word it had no right to insert, but not a word which the sense requires, to be inserted or to be understood, and which it inserts in numberless instances all through the Bible. And Orthodoxy not only will not insert the proper word; nor agree that it is to be understood; but, in the first place, refuses to read, these ...... others, as if perceiving that these would refer to the many that shall awake; and, next, (as it so becomes necessary it should do), for many, reads, all shall awake; and thus insists that this verse teaches, not only the resurrection of the just, but also, the resurrection of the unjust, to Orthodoxy's eternity of misery; and, having got thus far in its attempt to derive its dogma from this verse, (which is its standard Old Testament text for the dogma), it must of course crucify,—subdue—the verse to the end, and insist, that shame (and) everlasting contempt, mean, eternal conscious misery. The insertion of are once in the verse, that is after these, is sufficient: these, that is, the many who shall be awakened, are to a life eternal; but others, (necessarily meaning those who will not be awakened), to contempt to contempt eternal. Indeed, without inserting are at all, the verse is perfectly plain: Heb., yea many sleeping ...... shall be awakened; these, i. e., these many, to a life eternal; others, i. e., those who will not be awakened, to contempt, &c.: the word are would necessarily be to be understood after these, and after others."

Had Mr. Henson manifested the candor and courtesy of his opponent, in this discussion, it would have removed from our mind much of the objection we have to oral debates on religious questions. We must say, Br. Wendell did himself and the cause honor, in this respect, even in the minds of many who do not embrace our views. If such discussions are to be encouraged, let both parties use respectful language, and state fairly the views of their opponents, and not charge on them sentiments which they do not hold, as Mr. Henson repeatedly did in this discussion. We are glad that Br. Wendell was not guilty of any such perversion, but conducted himself with christian dignity, and contented himself with fair argument, without attempting to raise a laugh from the audience by ridicule; a method resorted to in nearly every speech by his opponent. As "W. M." will give an account of the discussion, we refrain from saying more now.

THE ELIJAH DISCUSSION.— Br. J. S. WHITE feels that it would be unjust in us not to let his last reply to PAULO appear, as the latter has placed him "in a false position before" the public; and "besides, Paulo has replied" twice, while Br. White has to "him but once." We, certainly, desire to do no one injustice, and therefore yield to his request in inserting his article this week. We hope our brethren will now yield to our previous suggestion to let this subject rest for the present; and also the "Abomination" question, both of which we think have been ventilated sufficiently to enable all parties to form an opinion on the subject, so far as an opinion is of value.

The Brooklyn Discussion.

We had barely time, in our last number, to notice the opening of the long-pending discussion between Br. Rufus Wendell and the Rev. Joseph Henson, Methodist, of Brooklyn. We propose now only to give a general account of the debate, with such incidents and new points presented by the disputants, as may enable our readers to understand how it passed off, and the present condition of the antagonistic views, and the interest elicited in their discussion, in this section. If it is deemed advisable, a full report of the debate, or, at any rate, the leading ideas, may be presented in our paper, at some future time, as the discussion was reported phonographically. As it is, we have no time to do more this week than to review it in its general character and bearing, closing as it did just as the last copy for this number goes into the hands of the compositors.

We gave in our last our opinion of the disputants, as we heard them open the discussion; its close justifies our estimate of the men then given; the points of contrast held out to the last. Br. Wendell was cool, poised, his speech polished and fluent, while he was gentle in his forbearance under aggravating attack, yet firm in the maintenance of his rights without allowing an improper thought or word to escape him. Mr. Henson did not fall below our estimate of his abilities. He certainly did give interest to the debate throughout, although some may have deemed the means he employed somewhat out of character in a religious discussion. His self-confidence never failed him, he never flagged in his speaking, yet it was somewhat desultory, catching at everything and making the best use of it as the spur of the moment suggested, although in a manner sometimes coarse to offensiveness. His witticism permeated all his remarks, and if he had not occasionally allowed it to run into buffoonery, it would not have been the least creditable part of his performance; as it was, it aided greatly in enlivening the exhausting interest felt by the large and attentive audience, which held out to the last moment, in the intellectual combat.

The question chosen for the occasion was as follows: "Does the Bible teach that man is material and mortal, that all men are unconscious in death, and that the conscious existence of the wicked ceases forever at death?"

Br. Wendell, in opening the debate on the affirmative, said he should not take the usual course pursued in presenting his side of the question. As he claimed the line of argument he took as being somewhat new, we present his views herewith, prepared by himself at our request. They are as follows:

I. The fact that man is material and mortal and that all the dead are unconscious is clearly involved in 1 Cor. xv. 18, 32, which passages make a future life wholly dependent on a resurrection from the dead. The term "perished" in verse 18, and the term "die" in verse 32, are both predicates of the hypothesis that the dead do not rise, and cannot therefore have contradictory meanings. Settle, therefore, the meaning of either of these words and you definitely determine what would have been the after-death condition of the entire race on the supposition that Christ had never burst the fetters of the grave. But the required meaning is easily ascertained. 1. Assuming the prevalent view of man as a double entity, the perishing must be held to relate either to the mortal body or to the immortal soul. If to the mortal body, as denoting its continuance under the power of death, then we have an inspired writer in the attitude of informing us concerning consequences pertaining to the habitation of the essential man, while the infinitely more important consequences that pertain to man's essential personality, viz., his immortal soul, are wholly overlooked. Such recreancy on the part of an apostle we may safely hold to be utterly impossible. If on the other hand it should be claimed that the term "perished" describes the doom of the immortal soul, setting forth its miserable existence in an after life, then we object that this cannot be for the obvious reason that the personality of whom the perishing is hypothetically affirmed is that which falls asleep! This cannot mean an immortal entity. 2. The meaning of verse 32 admits of no dispute. "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die," is the maxim of Epicureans, whose doctrine it was that we should make the most of the present life because there is no life beyond the grave. Paul's doctrine is that Epicureanism is the soundest wisdom "if the dead rise not."

II. The materiality and mortality of man is proved by the declaration of Paul (Rom. i. 23), "And changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like unto corruptible man," etc. Here the whole nature of God is affirmed to be uncorruptible; the antithesis demands that the whole nature of man shall be corruptible.

III. That the conscious existence of the wicked ceases forever at death is shown by several considerations drawn from 1 Cor. xv.

1. The wicked dead cannot live again because they die unjustified. The statement, "Ye are yet in your sins," verse 18, cannot consistently be carried out if this conclusion is rejected.

2. The wicked will never rise from the dead for the reason that they constitute no part of the Resurrection Harvest of which Christ, by rising from the dead, became the first-fruits. This argument is based upon verse 20. "If the first fruits be holy, the lump is also holy." Christ is holy; his resurrection, therefore, can be no pledge of the resurrection of the unholy.

3. The wicked cannot rise from the dead because they are not in Christ. The law of the resurrection of the dead is stated in verse 22; "In Christ shall all be made alive."

The two first clauses occupied the greater part of two evenings; the speaker saying he desired if possible to fix on the minds of his hearers at least one statement that could not be effaced. He so effectually enwrapped the attention of the whole audience that we doubt if one person in the large crowd, at the close of each of his two first speeches, realized anything about the time occupied. To all it seemed to pass away in an instant.

Mr. Henson, on rising to reply, seemed to manifest his appreciation of his opponent's powers. He did not close with him on the ground he took; but proceeded to offer an affirmative argument to show that man was not wholly material, but had a spiritual part called a soul, which was immortal in the sense that it could not die, but passed at death to a state of joy or misery. He said he expected his opponent would begin with the creation of man, and follow out his history as it appeared in the Bible from its beginning till its close. He then gave various texts such as are usually offered by believers in the soul's immortality, both from the Old and the New Testament. He quoted from Gen. ii. 7, to prove that after man was created the immortal spirit was added. He said if only breath was added, as the friends of the affirmative contend, then God must have had lungs like man in order to put breath into man; and if he had lungs he too was material, with a material body; if he had a body, he was a local being, if a local being then he had a local habitation, and if so he could have no knowledge when man prayed or what he prayed about. He repeated this idea two or three times during the debate, regarding it as one of his most important points. He referred to Christ's remark to his disciples that a spirit had not flesh and bones, to show there was such a thing as a distinct entity in man, or that Christ deceived his disciples. He then substituted the word breath where soul and spirit occurred, to show how ridiculous such a change made of the passages. He also exhibited a placard with these words written on it: "Ye are not able to kill the soul," and said that should be the banner under which he would fight the doctrine of no conscious existence in death, and urged its import in each of his speeches as an unanswerable argument against the death of the soul. He called in to his aid the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus, to show there was conscious existence after death. He quoted Paul's words—"to depart and be with Christ," and "if our house of this tabernacle be dissolved, we have a building not made with hands eetrnal in the heavens," and all those passages that are so familiar to every one who has ever contended with a so-called orthodox believer in the inherent immortality of man. We need not repeat each one, as it would afford nothing new. His only notice he took of the argument of Br. Wendell given above was that Paul only put his argument hypothetically, as though he had said if Christ had not died and rose again there would have been no salvation at all; no religion for perishing man. Perishing here being meant only in the condition of the heathen in this life. We should have to grope our way through life hopeless of any future salvation. Being pressed he admitted that the word perish might there mean extinction of being or future suffering, but he did not know. He afterwards qualified this explanation, saying it had no reference to the future, but this life. Man would be here in a perishing state.

After the first evenings debate, Mr. Henson seemed to have measured his audience, and marked out his course, which he pursued steadily to the end. This was to ply his hearers with every text, relevant or irrelevant, at all bearing on the question, and to interlard his remarks with his witticisms to gain a laugh—and to take no other notice of his opponents remarks than should serve his purpose of turning them into ridicule. In reference to his own proof texts, he kept repeating time after time, that the affirmative dare not notice them, and none of his friends had ever or dared answer them. By this course he felt certain of securing the approbation of those who thought with him, and gaining the attention of the unreflecting portion of the audience, by exciting their prejudices. At least so it seemed to us.

On the third evening Br. Wendell took up the last clause of his proposition, and announced that he would commence with the beginning of the Old Scriptures and go through to the end of the New. But before entering on the question he wished to give the audience a picture of the theological hell, as drawn by one of the most eminent orthodox ministers of the world, the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon. To this Mr. Henson raised objections, saying the discussion was to be confined to Bible arguments; and he had already brought in the opinions of all the eminent so-called orthodox divines, as his opponent was pleased to style them, and wilfully misrepresented them as holding with the annihilationists. The chair overruled his objection, but not without receiving severe censure for partial ruling.

Throughout the remainder of the discussion, Br. Wendell confined himself to the familiar scripture texts to show man's nature and state in death. To repeat them would add nothing to the stock of knowledge of our readers and prove of little interest, except we could add the energy and force of the speaker in their presentation. To the quotations from Ecclesiastics, Mr. Henson said those were the sentiments of King Solomon as a sensualist, and an unbeliever, and not as a child of God. As to the other texts from the Old Testament, he thought his opponent should not have given them, as the New Testament was more perfect, the Bible being a progressive revelation. He said the Old Testament writers labored under gloomy and dismal feelings which led them to give much utterances as the affirmative side offered. This was his reply to the declarations of David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Obadiah and Malachi.

In this manner the discussion was continued to its close. Mr. Henson presented no analytical argument, but as we have already stated, his remarks were rambling and discursive throughout: yet on the whole we believe he did all that could be done by any one on his side, in order to keep an audience, mainly already prejudiced, in its preconceived notions. He was very adroit in manageing his part of the discussion, and especially in giving all the force his best texts could be made susceptible of. He did not offer himself to accomodate the wishes of his opponent, but to win a victory for what he claims is the teachings of the Word of God. Some of Br. Wendell's friends may have thought that he aimed too high, and presented arguments better calculated for a class of persons already familiar with the subject; but then again, it might have been urged if a contrary course had been pursued, that it would have been out of place before such an intelligent audience. Interest on the subject has been awakened in the minds of all there; some already convinced were quickened, and friends felt the necessity of closer union, and that minor matters should not divide or distract while such gross darkness covered the minds of christian men, as evidenced in the arguments and ideas of a leading minister in the most evangelical of all the popular church organizations.

We append a letter received by Br. Wendell, on the second evening of the debate, to show how the feeling ran as regards the spirit manifested by the dispatants. Its style evinces the intelligence of the writer, and its spirit the loveliness of christian character:

NEW YORK, April 23, 1867.

DEAR SIR:—I was present last evening, an interested listener to the discussion, and congratulate you on your auspicious opening. I pray that God may cause us to know the truth, whatever it may be; but my anxiety will be that the ungentlemanly and unchristian bearing and remarks of your opponent may cause you by-and-bye to lose your equanimity. Do, I beseech you, guard against it. No matter how severe, unkind or unjust his aspersions may be, let them not divert you from that christian and gentlemanly bearing you maintained last evening And God defend the right.

Yours, A SEEKER AFTER TRUTH.

On Saturday evening the disputants summed up, and gave their parting words. Mr. Henson apologetically admitted having made improper remarks in the debate; but words of kindness from both parties and Mr. Griswold, the Chairman, seemed to reach to the audience, as manifested in murmurs of approbation and expressions of satisfaction derived from its discussion. Good seed was sown, and fruit will yet be reaped, we feel confident. The subject of Life only by faith in Christ will be discussed, debated and pondered over where it was never heard of before. The score of ministers constantly in attendance, in their hours of doubt about the common view of eternal misery, have heard a consistent bible truth to reflect upon. And all who have sought to honor the truth of Jesus and the resurrection in this effort to disseminate it, will not fail of the blessing of their Heavenly Father. W. M.

The Jaffa Colony.

We have commented strongly on this unfortunate undertaking, first, because we knew the worthless character of the man who led the poor, confiding creatures into his schemes; and, also, because the facts given of the condition of the colony after arriving at their destination, were from the highest authority, the American Consul and other officials, to our Government, which were deemed so important that means were adopted to relieve them from their sad plight. But now we hear that the colony is in a better condition, and Yankee pluck and energy are overcoming many of the obstacles that would swamp any other class of people. They lost many of their number, and perhaps others left the body, but the most of those remaining have full faith still in Adams, as we learn from several reliable sources. Adams represents that others than himself defrauded the colony of its money. In order that the present condition of the colony may be known, we give the following statement by Mr. James P. Sanford, writing from Jaffa, under date of March 11, 1867: W. M.

My first visit, after arriving here, was to the American colony recently located in Jaffa. The accounts in the various newspapers of America and England in regard to the condition of this colony have been of such a character as to attract much attention throughout the civilized world. Mr. Seward, our Secretary of State, has recently appointed an agent to come here, and make a thorough examination into the affairs and prospects of the colony. This agent (Rev. Mr. Bidwell, of the Eclectic Magazine, New York,) was a fellow-passenger with me from Egypt. He seems to be well qualified for the work he has undertaken. In company with Mr. Bidwell and others I called upon Mr. Adams, the President of the colony, heard him preach in the evening, and learned enough of the situation and prospects of the people to justify a brief article in regard to them and the strange opinions which have led so many to leave the land of their birth and emigrate to this far-off country.

The colony numbers about 160 persons, old and young. The majority of the members express themselves entirely satisfied with their situation and prospects. But a very respectable minority are in favor of returning to America. At the meeting last night a vote was taken by Mr. Bidwell on the two questions: "1st. Are you satisfied in regard to your situation here?" The vote was a unanimous one in the affirmative. "2d. Do any of you wish to return?" All voted no, but one. This exception was a pale-faced and decidedly intellectual-looking woman. She, in accents sad and plaintive, said, "I wish to go home to America." I confess the word home sounded strangely sweet to me, and my sympathies are decidedly with the lone voter. Mr. Adams and all with whom I have conversed, are of the opinion that the colony will be a success. Religiously, they believe that Christ's Government will be established in Palestine, and that the whole land will enjoy a prosperity and glory unparalleled in history. They say that they have had an abundance to eat and drink during their sojourn here, and now have about three hundred acres under cultivation, which bid fair to produce a large yield of corn, wheat, potatoes and the necessaries of life. Four adults and seven children have died since the colony settled here.

The colony have built quite a number of houses, having brought the lumber all the way from Maine. A three-story hotel is now being erected in the village, and is well under way. All the members speak in the highest terms of the kindness of the Turks and Arabs to them, and in very strong terms of the unkindness and unfairness of the American Vice-Consul at Jaffa.

Per contra we give another picture of the colony from the U. S. Vice-Consul at Jaffa:

Further, as to Adams, it is really most trying that this drunken, blasphemous, heartless impostor should be allowed to call himself a minister of the gospel. This man has wilfully and intentionally led more than 150 of his fellow-creatures to misery and even death, in having deluded them to leave their comfortable homes, and to risk their own and their families' lives and happiness, and he has cheated them, some out of all, some out of most of their small and hard-earned property. He and his wife, who is still more depraved than himself, never attempt to alleviate the misery they have caused; they have abandoned the needy, the sick and the dying, and those who, by the slightest opposition, or by their outspoken disappointment and desire to return to America, incur their displeasure, they most foully slander and persecute. In his so-called sermons, which Adams generally delivers when intoxicated, he principally raves about them, cursing them and their native land, thus parading them publicly and privately besides to every traveller they come in contact with.

The dissatisfied party, consisting of about 52 persons, are now preparing to return to the United States, but to accomplish this they must wait till all their accounts are settled with Adams and they have received the title-deeds for their plots of land bought by him, things which have continually been put off by Adams, but which the Consul-General of Jerusalem, Mr. H. V. Beauboucher, has now undertaken to see done. Some of the people, however, I am sorry to say, are without the means of defraying the expenses of their journey home, several having received from myself, and lately from Mr. Beauboucher, pecuniary assistance, as otherwise they would have starved. Adams knows nothing of keeping accounts, nor of any responsibility with regard to the money entrusted to him, for both he and his wife spent it in a most thoughtless manner. It was a well-known fact to their followers that neither of them owned a dollar, yet Mrs. Adams before she left America bought diamond rings, silver-plate, etc., for their own use.

Adams, after landing here, received through me a letter from the United States Ambassador at Constantinople, announcing to him the refusal of the Turkish Government to grant the concession or firman Adams had petitioned for, but when he returned on board of the Nellie Chapin he had the audacity to inform the people that God had blessed them abundantly, and that the Turkish Government had granted the concessions, and more than they had asked for. In the first five weeks, from September 24 to October 30, Adams, for himself and people, ordered 201 bottles of brandy, besides several barrels of wine and English pale ale, thereby spending about $250 in gold, and he was seen so often intoxicated by the natives that they called him the drunken Messiah. I remain, Sir, yours faithfully,

Herman Lowenthall,
United States Vice Consul.

Letters and Extracts.

From H. Bennett.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 24, 1867.

"Leave off your Second Advent and Storrsism, or I will erase your name from the church books."

Br. Storrs:—I wish to inform you of the threat pronounced against me by the pastor of our church. A few months ago my daughter called on him for her transfer to go to another church. He inquired very particularly after me. She told him that I was among the Second Adventists and did not believe the doctrine the Methodists preach. I called to see him, and had a warm talk with him on the subject. I took a paper and other reading matter with me. Some time after that I met him at a love feast, and told him I wanted to feel at liberty to speak. But he shut down on me. He said he wanted no doctrine speakers there. So I did not speak at all. Soon after that he come to my house to see me, and there we had another warm talk on the subject. He says, "Storrs is a liar, and he knows he lies when he says that 'death is a cessation of being to the wicked.'" I argued the point with him and threw out strong passages of scripture to prove the point. But he said that it was all nonsense, and nothing but a Yankee trick. He says: "How is it that Storrs should know so much?" I told him that I believed that God had raised up a people that would shake the modern church to its foundations, and the false doctrine which they inculcate. I told him as he had threatened to take my name off the church books he might do so and welcome, for I did not consider myself a member of the Methodist church, and had not for years past. My wife said, still feeling an inclination to the Methodists, "Do not let your name be taken from the books." I answered: "Oh, yes; if I had a thousand names he might erase them all. I rejoice that my name is written in heaven, and he cannot take it from the Lamb's Book of Life.

I feel willing to give up all for the sake of Jesus and his truth. May the Lord strengthen and help me, for I feel I need his help and his care. These words remind me of the words of Peter when he said, "Lord, we have left all to follow thee. What shall we have, therefore?" I believe the glorious promise is just at hand, as it were, and not far off. I feel now that I am God's free man.

Note by the Editor:—"Blessed are ye when men shall revile you....and shall say all manner of evil against you falsely for my sake." Math. v. 11. "They shall put you out of the synagogues; yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think he doeth God service. These things will they do unto you, because they have not known the Father nor me." John xvi. 2, 3. "Blessed are ye when men shall....separate you from their company, and shall reproach you, and cast out your name as evil, for the Son of man's sake; rejoice in that day, and leap for joy," &c. Lk. vi. 22, 23. This is all the answer we have to make to a clerical man who calls his neighbor "a liar," and says that neighbor "knows he lies."

From Helen Robertson.

Philadelphia, Pa., April 24, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—I suppose you will wonder to get a letter from me at Philadelphia. But let me tell you why. You well know I am settled in the belief that the yearly celebration of our Lord's death is the right way, and that I have commemorated it in that way now several years. For many weeks past I had looked forward to it, and greatly desired to be with a company of like faith on that occasion, but left it all with the Lord, feeling he could open the way. We were to have a celebration in April, and my hope was that it might come near the feast time. Thank the Lord, it did, and so I was free to leave, and go for a time to my "own company," and with them celebrate the death of our blessed Saviour, Jesus.

A good company of us met at Br. Boyd's in the evening, and all seemed to feel it good to be there. We felt it to be a time of rejoicing, not mourning; for, although the blessed Master had been put to death, and he had told his followers to remember that death till he should come again, yet our minds were led from the death to the resurrection, and thus we rejoiced, knowing that if the Spirit of him that raised Jesus from the dead dwelt in us, he that raised up Christ from the dead would also quicken our mortal bodies because of his Spirit that dwelt in us. This we all felt to be a blessed hope, and our meeting together on that occasion inspired us with fresh courage to press toward the mark for the prize, so that at last we might be found in him, not having our own righteousness, which is of the law, but that which is through the faith of Christ, the righteousness which is of God by faith, that we might know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death, if by any means we might attain unto the resurrection of the dead.

Your sister; hoping that when Christ who is our life shall appear, we also shall appear with him in glory.

From Gilbert H. Buzzell.

Concord, N. H., April, 1867.

George Srorrs:—I have missed the Herald of Life so much, that I will renew my subscription again. I thought when it was discontinued I was more in the rear, or I would have had it continued. I thought I was so poor in this world that I would give it up, or at any rate had not courage to write to have it continued. It seems to me it is the best paper I know anything about. The doctrine of the non-resurrection is gaining ground in Concord. One might suppose that it would die out here, it is agitated so little, and is opposed so much. But it seems to the contrary. It seems to progress slowly. I think there has been but one discourse preached on it in this city or vicinity; but quite a number against it; or at least parts of discourses and whole ones. But it don't disturb me when I hear one against it; for this reason, if it be of God it will stand; and I am inclined to think it is time wasted to try to overthrow it, and at the same time it seems to help it.

It is remarkable how men can presume that God, after having destroyed men from off the earth for the wickedness that they had done, and filled their cup full, and God had done all that he could for them, and if "the wages of sin is death," as they say, or claim, that after all this God should raise them to life again is more than I can comprehend. We read that "Sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death." It would seem that it must be, that sin not finished, and if they are brought to life was again, it must be to finish it. Will they admit this?

What then is the sinner brought forth for? Say they, That he may see what he has lost.

Well, but is not the rejecting of this light, that lighteneth every man that cometh into the world, what fills his cup full? and does not this light reveal to man what he is about to gain or lose? Why then bring him up to see what he has lost? I thank the Lord that some of us will think and judge for ourselves. Yours for the truth, the whole truth.

From Hartford, Conn.

Elder Grant has just closed a series of protracted meetings, which have been held here, with slight interruption since some time in January. Meetings have been well attended, a new and (for this place) an unusual interest awakened in the peculiar doctrines of Adventists; and, on the whole, good has been done; quite a number have embraced the truth as far as truth was preached, and it is to be feared some error, which is to be regretted. The arguments against the immortal soul theory were strongly and ably presented. A discussion with a spiritualist occupied several evenings, in which the spiritualist was pretty effectually used up, would have been completely so, had it not been for Br. Grant's demons; but there is such a similarity between those demons and the supposed spirits of dead men that rather weakened his argument. The services were closed with a sermon on the atonement; or rather it might quite as properly be called a sermon to prove the resurrection of all men and the second death, for that subject occupied the principal part of the discourse, and had a few words more been quoted, 1 Cor. xv., would have made out a case of pretty good Universalism, or eternal torment; one or the other of which seems to me to be the inevitable tendency of the doctrine of the resurrection of all men. I cannot but feel a desire that Judge Halsted's book, "The Theology of the Bible," should have an extensive circulation; especially among Adventists, who, having been led to give up many favorite thories, may be supposed to be now ready to see and embrace the truth when clearly presented, as it is in Judge Halsted's work. The truth of the revival to life of the righteous only, seem to be clearly demonstrated. I do hope that many of our good Advent brethren, and especially those who hold prominent and influential positions, may examine the work of Judge Halsted's with candor and be led by it into the truth and harmony of the scriptures. Elder Grant is a good practical preacher; seldom do we have the practical living out of christian life, as it should be, more ably presented than has been done at these meetings; and thus far the truth has had a good effect upon old members as well as brought in new converts. Some thirty-nine were baptized with water, and we trust with that essential and real baptism which will result in final salvation.

O.

From Daniel L. Osborne.

Findley's Lake, N. Y., April, 1867.

We hope for a future life at the coming of Christ, in him and by him, as a free gift; and we are entirely dependent on God for it; we can no more claim it as something belonging to us, as a right, because our representative Adam forfeited it forever, than we could have claimed our present life, or existence. It would seem to be the height of folly to suppose God could not be just unless he had given us our present existence; as much as to suppose he will not be just not to give us another unconditionally. It seems plain, while God says, the dead shall be raised incorruptible, that if the wicked live again, they will always live, and endless misery must be the result. Then the question arises, Will God be unjust to save people from endless misery? And again, Did he not place the flaming sword to guard the tree of life, that the transgressor might not be endlessly miserable? as a sinner must be if he can't die. Suppose a man gives me a dollar, and another cheats it from me; and after I die, my child (for the reason of the cheat) does not get it. Would that make the man unjust should he refuse to give another? Could I justly have such a claim on him? No, not even for the first cent.

The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death, saith Paul. Paul was addressing his brethren, as is plain from the commencement of the chapter. So the idea is, The last enemy (to you, brethen,) is death. Is death an enemy to him who will not repent? What a state of things would exist, truly, if man had been permitted to become undying, with the disposition to injure one another, and to inflict pain on each other and could not kill. The earth would soon be peopled, and what an awful state of things. Let us be thankful for the goodness of God in guarding the tree of life, in the garden of Eden. Now we forfeit our lives by sin; so we have no right to claim it on Adam's account. Could I possibly be unjust to do something for a person which would be an unspeakable blessing or benefit to him? All, I think, can see it will be vastly better for the sinner to remain as God says, "In the congregation of the dead," than to be brought out and live always, or die again. Consequently, God is not unjust to them. I hope, because Christ laid down his life, and redeems the christian, so he can live again, not to have the Adamic or blood life again, but the spirit life; such as Christ had; who cannot die any more. That which is born (begotten) of the Spirit is spirit. Christ is the life: the author of the christian's future life; and he says, Because I live, ye (christians) shall live also. And he that believeth in me, I will raise him up at the last day.

From Mrs. S. A. Colvin.

Albion, R. I., April 19, 1867.

Geo. Storrs: Dear Sir:—We have purchased Halsted's "Theology of the Bible," and we feel ourselves greatly obliged to you for the zeal you have manifested in presenting the value of this inestimable work to the minds of your readers.

For myself, and my husband inclusive, I give you my sincere thanks that through your instrumentality we have received the only theological teaching worth having. You cannot tell how futile our orthordox theology appears after the reception of one which shows the scriptures so plain; that brings what once seemed to us conflicting passages to harmonize so perfectly; that, in short, has proved to us that the Bible is a reasonable book; one that commends itself to our judgment as reasonable beings, which never can be said, truthfully, of orthodox creeds. I read much in your paper about persons fearing to proclaim this doctrine because it is not popular. Well, all I can say is, I do not know how to sympathize with such persons in the least (not to call them christians.) I cannot conceive how any one who has been in bondage to a belief so revolting in its nature to all our holiest aspirations, should withhold their rejoicing when convinced that a theory so tormenting has been torn from its foundation. For my part, I cannot help talking about it. I love to prove to people, through the scriptures, that God is a God of love, of justice, and mercy, who delighteth not in tormenting his creatures, even though they have gone astray. That though justice condemns those to death who have failed through any weakness or temptation inherent in the flesh to lay hold on eternal life, because having failed to fight the good fight of faith, they are unfitted for the enjoyment of the heavenly Jerusalem (as any one can see they are if the lusts of the flesh are not crucified here), His love and mercy lets them remain in the grave, as no punishment or torment that he could inflict would better the condition of saint or sinner. How strange it is, that men will persist in thinking that God delights in tormenting the creatures whom he professes to love better than earthly parents do their children; and that, too, without any other motive than revenge. Honesty compels us to state there can be no other. Oh, what a mystical book tradition has made of the word of God. In turning over my bible the other day, my eye accidentally caught the passage in the book of Job, "A draught and heat consume the snow waters, so doth the grave them that have sinned." Pretty good test for an immortal soulist, is it not?

I was conversing with a neighbor a few days since on the doctrine of no life out of Christ. She said in all her life she had never heard the scriptures taught so plainly. It was strange, surpassing strange to her how certain texts could be brought to harmonize so perfectly in which nothing but discord had appeared before. Before parting with her, I remarked, if your eyes become open to the light, see that you have proper charity for others who stand where you have stood: remember their theology is the result of early teaching, even as your own. Try to have them investigate; but do not attempt to drive. How prodigious wise some appear if they manage to gain a new idea; or, I might say, transfer another's to their own mind. Verily they think all the rest of the world fools because they do not adopt them as readily.

I send $3 for Helen Robertson, have wanted to do something for her a long time. Her work I regard one of special interest. May she have health of body, firmness of purpose, and means granted her so that she may continue in this labor of love.

Yours in the love of truth, popular or unpopular.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

As the storm rises in the Old World, peace and quietness are prevailing in our own country. At the South where lately was turbulence and anarchy, men holding extreme Radical ideas can enter the centers of Southern opinions, and proclaim their views unmolested. Southern politicians are vieing with Northern men to gain influence with the colored people of the South. In all this good results flow to the black man. His privileges as a controlling agent in the maintenance of the government, are not simply mockery. He now not only gets credit for his many virtues, but all the machinery of society there is employed, to enhance his usefulness. His tendencies and instincts leading him to side with the great principles of religious and political freedom, underlying our national structure, he may yet prove even more than a useful ally in defending our liberties against the twin despotisms that as yet stand passive in their threatening attitude. We mean Popery and German infidelity, which seem willing to unite until they effectually crush out every manifestation of true christianity. The freedman is the very opposite of both these destructive elements in our social fabric. The Irish Catholic is matched in the negro Protestant: the German rationalist in the black religious enthusiast of the South.

The prospect of war in Europe has had a bad influence on the business of the country. Gold rose some ten per cent but afterwards receded a little. This is owing more to doubt and uncertainty, than any valid reason that war can work us injury. The only drawback in the glowing account of the extent and great promise of all kinds of crops in every section, is a statement of a scourge that is inflicting great damage to sheep and hogs. An estimate as high as 15 per cent has been made, as the loss of the latter, by the Bureau of Agriculture, and in some sections West still more of the former.

The earthquake wave that struck so disastrously the city of Mytelene, in Greece, passed west, striking the West India Islands and thence on to our Western States. It was felt in Missouri, Kansas, and Iowa, but did but little damage there.

Intelligence has been received by the New York Board of Health that the cholera has already made its appearance in three large cities in the United States, and, judging from that fact, it is apprehended that the metropolis will be again visited by the dreaded pestilence from an overland direction.

Terrific earthquake shocks were felt in Leavenworth and Junction City, Kansas, and Kansas City and St. Louis, Mo., they lasted seventy seconds, the earth and river being upheaved and the houses made to rock and strain like a ship in a storm. The people were terribly frightened, but no one was hurt.

FOREIGN.

The accounts from Europe all go to confirm the probability of a great war soon to take place between Prussia and France. Peace rumors are occasionally indulged in, but in the energy of the two angry powers in making ready for the conflict, they avail little in turning the scale of general expectation. With those two powers, if war takes place, other countries must soon be involved in the contest. Turkey is making preparations for a final end of the rebellion in Crete, and is also threatening Greece, and we may shortly hear of barbarous cruelties inflicted on the resisting christians of Candia.

Our items of news are more full of interest now-a-days than for a long time previous, and from them our readers can draw their own conclusions about the state of the world. Time being an object with both Napoleon and Bismarck, it will not be difficult for them to find reasons sufficient to delay their hostile intentions until they are fully prepared. Until they begin to stop preparing for special emergencies, their real motives will be properly construed that they mean to make war the final issue.

Paris is in an unquiet condition. The Bourse is fearfully agitated. Ten thousand tailors on a strike are complaining of low wages and the high price of provision. Laborers generally are terribly grumbling at the latter fact. Tradesmen, shop, hotel and lodging house keepers are disappointed at the result thus far of the Exhibition; and there are, in fact, many dangerous elements at work in Paris. Prompt and continued successes might calm them; but reverses would certainly render them more to be dreaded. Europe seems to be upon the verge of a general conflagration, and prudent men are already making their preparations for it, in the firm assurance that it must ere long break out in lurid flame.

The "red" revolutionists were in council in Brussels, General Prim appearing as the animating spirit of a grand revolutionary caucus, attended by representatives from France, Spain, Italy, Rome and Ireland. The brother of Felix Orsini appeared for a moment, and the plans of immediate republican movements in Rome, Spain and Great Britain were discussed.

Prussia has replied to the proposition for the settlement of the Luxemburg question, recently submitted by the Great Powers of Europe. She denies that she is arming, but emphatically reiterates that she will not evacuate Luxemburg.

The Moniteur has an editorial charging Prussia with neglecting to carry out the stipulations of the treaty of Prague, in regard to Schleswig.

Prince Napoleon has gone to Italy.

A Berlin journal expresses the feeling of Prussia, saying she did not "appeal to the other Powers for the protection of her rights, and will not leave Luxemburg." Another neutral appeal was, however, made to the Berlin Cabinet.

The Swiss Government will post an army of observation on the French frontier.

It is officially stated that the French Emperor has expressed his satisfaction with the negotiations now in progress for the settlement of the Luxemburg question.

The Weser Gazette, in a leading article, intimates that Prussia may evacuate the fortress of Luxemburg.

Queen Victoria has written a latter to the King of Prussia, in which she takes ground in favor of the recent and more moderate propositions of France in regard to the disposition of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, and advises him to accept a plan of compromise, to which the Emperor Napoleon is not unwilling to accede.

At a late hour on the 27th ult. the Prussian Government signified, by telegraph, its acceptance of a proposition made by the Queen of England for a General Conference at London of the great Powers, to settle the Luxemburg dispute on the basis of the neutralization of the Grand Duchy, guaranteed by all the Powers at the Conference. It will meet in London on the 15th of May. It has been agreed that in the meantime the Fortress of Luxemburg shall be dismantled.

The Berlin agency of the Associated Press reports that the Emperor Napoleon is arming his forces and strengthening his military posts on the frontier. Large numbers of horses are being purchased, and the artillery will be immediately placed on a war footing. The reserves for next year will be called out on the 1st of May. Prussia, on the other hand, is not so active in her military preparations.

It is said that the Russian Government will receive from the United States a fleet of iron-clads instead of the stipulated sum of money, in payment for the cession of the Russian possessions in America.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—W. Nash, Seth H. Gilman, W. J. Whitehead.

Two Dollars each from—J. A. Mayo, Benjamin S. Hilton, Gilbert H. Buzzell, Samuel Muncy, Mrs. E. Mahan, John K. Mundell, Mrs. Caleb Allen.

Various Sums.

LaFayette Norris, $1.50; Wm. Halsted, $3; Juline French, $4.

Advertisements.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
(A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE, LEONARD C. THORNE, GEORGE K. CARROLL, JOHN W. BROOKS, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW,
62 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue,
Office Hours, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK.

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON,
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 Chambers St.,
NEW YORK.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, if he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity: by Geo. Storrs Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letter to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each: Man's Nature and Destiny; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

The Atonement, by Geo. Storrs, and The Gospel Hope, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, New York.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our Catalogue our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance Bible vs. Tradition, bound, to $1; in paper cover, to 70 cents; and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the Herald of Life, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

PRAY WITHOUT CEASING.

'Pray without ceasing,'—Let thy prayers
Be mingled with the morning airs,
And let the heaven-suggested words
Join with the songs of early birds,
The matin-song of worshippers.

'Pray without ceasing,—when the sun
Looks from noon's altitude upon
The glowing earth. let prayers ascend—
Heaven's brightness with earth's music blend,
Commingling sweetly in one.

'Pray without ceasing.'—Eve prepares
The couch of glory,—then let prayers
Hallow the dying day, and bless
The peaceful hour when loneliness
The struggling light with darkness shares.

'Pray without ceasing.'—Night's dark dress,
Whose shadowy folds the earth oppress,
Invites to prayer—the night was wrought
For thought,—and prayer is holiest thought
And hallowing in its holiness.

Children's Department.

"I DON'T CARE."

Indeed Mr. Upstart "don't care." So says the strutting fop, the idler, lounger, loafer. So says the vain, giddy, flitting novel reader—the impudent miss to her mother, "I don't care." "I'll do as I please, read what I please, dress as I please." So says the unruly, disobedient urchin. So says the iron-hearted rumseller. The cruel oppressor, "let me alone, I'll do as I please, kill or no kill—I don't care." "I don't care," says the tippler and smoker. "I don't care," says the profane swearer and Sabbath breaker. "Who has a better right?" How does this sound young friends?"

Little readers, do you ever say to your parents, teachers, or any one, "I don't care?" "O shame! shame! Care? yes, you should always care, care to do good, to do what is right, honest, pure, lovely and of good report. Care to be affable, courteous, industrious, neat, obedient—temperate in all things.

You should care to keep good company, read good books, and shun the evil. You should care to fear God and keep his commandments—to acknowledge him in all your ways—to do justice, love mercy and walk humbly, glorify God in all things. These are the things you should care for daily and hourly.

There is no surer mark of a lazy, trifling, impudent, insignificant, good for nothing chap, than this same don't care-ism, to bear him drawl out, when he does something wrong, "I don't care." Is it not a forerunner of every evil? of everything base, mean, low-lived, corrupt, shameful?

Whenever we hear a boy or girl, or any one, making use of the expression, "I don't care," it forcibly reminds us of the proverb of Solomon—

"A whip for the horse, a bridle for the ass, and a rod for the fool's back."

"DON'T CARE."

Old Don't care is a murderer foul,
And a murderer foul is he—
He beareth a halter in his hand—
And his staff is the gallows tree;
And slyly he follows his victim on,
Through high degree and low,
And strangles him there, when least aware,
And strikes the fatal blow—
Hanging his victim high in the air,
A villain strong is old Don't Care.

—Selected by UNCLE WILLIAM.

THE IRON BAR.

Here is a good lesson from an iron bar. Read it, boys.

A bar of iron worth five dollars, worked into horseshoes, is worth $10,50; made into needles, it is worth $355; made into penknife blades it is worth $3,285; made into balance springs of watches, it is worth $250,000.

What a drilling the poor bar must undergo to reach all that; but hammered and beaten and pounded and rolled and polished, how was its value increased! It might well have quivered and complained under the hard knocks it got; but were they not all necessary to draw out its fine qualities, and fit it for higher offices?

And so, my children, all the drilling and training which you are subject to in youth, and which often seem so hard to you, serve to bring out your nobler and finer qualities, and fit you for more responsible posts and greater usefulness in the world.

"IT'S ONLY A LITTLE WHILE, SIR."

"Well, Molly," said the judge, going up to the old apple woman's stand, "don't you get tired sitting here these cold, dismal days?"

"It's only a little while," said she.

"And the hot, dusty days?" said he.

"It's only a little while, sir," answered Molly.

"And the rainy, drizzly days?" said the judge.

"It's only a little while," answered Molly.

"And your sick, rheumatic days, Molly?" said the judge.

"It's only a little while, sir," said she.

"And what then, Molly?" asked the judge.

"I shall enter into that rest which remains for the people of God," answered the old woman, devoutly; and the troublesomeness of the way there don't pester or fret me. It's only a little while, sir."

"All is well that ends well, I dare say," said the judge; "but what makes you so sure, Molly?"

"How can I help being sure, sir," said she, "since Christ is the way, and I am in him? He is mine, and I am his. Now I only feel along the way. I shall see him as he is, in a little while, sir."

"Ah, Molly, you've got more than the law ever taught me," said the judge.

"Yes, sir, because I went to the gospel."

"Well, Molly, I must look into these things," said the judge, taking an apple and walking off.

"There's only a little while, sir," said she.

—Selected by AUNT LOUISA.

RULE FOR FRETTERS.

A little girl had been visiting me who was a fretter. She fretted when it rained and fretted when it shone. She fretted when little girls came to see her, and she fretted when they did not. It is dreadful to be a fretter. A fretter is troublesome to herself and troublesome to her friends. We, to be sure, have our trials; but fretting does not help us to bear or get rid of them.

I have lately come across a short rule for fretters which they shall have. Here it is: "Never fret about what you can't help, because it won't do you any good. Never fret about what you cant help; because if you can help it, do so." Say this when you get up in the morning, say it at noon, say it at night; and not only say but do; and that will be, do not fret at all—a fine doing.

The only right way of getting along is not to wish ourselves somebody else, and fret ourselves because we are not, but contentedly bear our lot, and be satisfied with what God has given us.

IS ELIJAH YET TO COME?

BY ELD. J. S. WHITE.

My reply to "Paulo" of March 20th I am willing to let stand against all that he had said on this subject. In his reply to me of April 3rd, he has made several erroneous statements and misrepresentations, though perhaps not intentional; but for this, I might say no more.

He says, that I have failed to touch a single point in his argument. If Paulo had named a point that I did not touch, I should know what he meant by this assertion. If I did not touch a single point, I confess an inability that prevents me from seeing his points. Paulo will therefore please attribute it to my ignorance, for, a person who will knowingly not notice any point in the argument of an opponent, while in discussion, is so void of manhood and moral honesty, as not to be worthy of notice. I intended to notice every point, and think I did. Paulo did undertake to correct the Greek and English text in John i. 21. I had quoted that text, "Art thou that prophet?" Paulo said that to claim this as correct, was "an unfounded assumption." He added, "We do most selemnly aver that we are not obliged to translate this text, that prophet; that it is more properly rendered a prophet." I stated in my reply that it should be rendered that prophet or the prophet, and that a prophet was not in the Greek text. I moreover asked him to be prepared to name one competent man who will say that it should be rendered a prophet, before he solemnly averred again. He now says, It is the opinion of Br. White, a prophet is not in the Greek text. I did not give it as my opinion. I said that it is not there, and now repeat it. But Paulo says, "In the opinion of all those men who translated our version of the Bible, a prophet is in the Greek text. So they have put a prophet in the margin. I repeat what I said in my former article, that in a larger majority of cases the marginal readings are the most literal rendering of the Greek text." Those men who translated our common version are dead, so we cannot appeal to them. But there is quite a number of men living who have given us a translation; and besides, there are some others who are capable of knowing how the text should be translated. Will Paulo give us one of them who says the text should be rendered a prophet? He says, in the great majority of cases the marginal readings are the most literal. This is admitting, that in some cases they are not literal. This then may fall under the minority of cases, by his own showing. I ask Paulo to give us the name of a man, aside from himself, who understands the Greek, that will say that John i. 21 should or can properly be rendered a prophet. I repeat, it should be rendered that prophet, or the prophet. Some have rendered it the prophet, making it definite in either case. If Paulo is prepared to confront the learning of the world with his knowledge of the Greek text, he may be reminded of his own term "egotism." Paulo says, "In the opinion of Prof. James Murdock, a prophet is positively in the original Syriac." "Mark well, Br. White, no better authority is known to exist than the Syriac version of the N. T." My attention is here called to Mr. Murdock's translation of the Syriac, as if this should settle the question; though Paulo should be obliged to give up the Greek text as against him. This is the great umpire to which he appeals in closing his statements on this point. With Paulo, if there be any infallibility in the translation of the Bible, this is the one to settle all disputed points. The N. T. was written in Greek, and from that, we have our translation. Now, in all reason, which would be the more likely to be correct, the one coming direct from the apostles, or the one which has first been put into the Syriac, and from that into our language? But I will not dwell here. Paulo appeals to Murdock as if it must or should settle the question. Very well. Will he please read him on Math. xxv. 46. "And these will go into everlasting torment." Now, Paulo, is this the true meaning of our Saviour? Will you say that this rendering is as good or better than the translation from the Greek text? From the Greek, it is everlasting punishment: from the Syriac, it is everlasting torment. Murdock, who is the highest authority to which you appeal, says the wicked will go into everlasting torment. Is this the best authority, Paulo? Then give up your destruction doctrine and believe in eternal torment.

The reader may ask, What has this to do with the coming of Elijah? Sure enough! I did not introduce this point. Paulo introduced it; for what reason I know not, except it was to show that Jesus contradicted John in more things than one. Paulo says:

"Let us turn to Mal. iv. 5, 6, and we shall find just how much it contained in the 'Elijah Mission' Hear it.

"'Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.'

"How much then is contained in the 'Elijah Message?' Simply this, the turning of the heart of the fathers to the children—and of the children to the fathers; and positively NO MORE. This is all that Malachi gives; and as he is the only prophet who speaks of the coming of Elijah, to say there is more in the 'Elijah Message' than Malachi puts in it, is simply to be 'wise above what is written.'

"Here then we anchor down on the plain, positive language of the prophet of God, and hold with an unyielding grasp the simple proposition that all that Elijah was to do when he did come, was to 'turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to the fathers.' Now how much of this did John fulfil? Br. White admits that he fulfilled "some" of the work that is contained in the Elijah Message. Does he not see that even this admission kills his theory?"

He says this is all Elijah was to do; and positively NO MORE. This he claims was all fulfilled by John, and no more than this. He further quotes Gabriel to confirm his statement, Luke i. 17.

"And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God. And he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord."

Does not Gabriel say more of John than Malachi says of Elijah? He says that all that is contained in the "Elijah Message" is simply this; the turning of the heart of the fathers to the children, and of the children to the fathers; "and positively NO MORE." Gabriel said that John would turn the heart of the fathers to the children. This is the same so far, and no farther, as is said of Elijah. This I referred to when I said, that John was to do some things that Elijah is to do. But Gabriel says that John would turn many of the children of Israel to the Lord their God, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord. Here is more than is in the "Elijah Message." Paulo says, To say there is more in this message than Malachi puts in, is to be wise above what is written. Then if John was the Elijah of whom Malachi speaks, Gabriel was wise above what was written. And more, as Jesus said Elijah shall restore all things, and this not being in the message, then, by Paulo's showing, Jesus was wise above what was written. Mark, he says nothing can be put into the message except what Malachi names.

I did not say that John fulfilled some things that Elijah was to do. I said that John did some things that he is to do. I referred to the fact that it is said of both Elijah and John, that they shall turn the hearts of the fathers to the children. Paulo catches at this and claims that it kills my theory. How so? Why, if John turned the hearts of the fathers to the children, nobody else can do this. If one man can do good, no other person can do good. Men were converted under the preaching of John, therefore men cannot be converted by the preaching of any other person. If Jesus was sent to the lost sheep of the house of Israel, he could not send his disciples to preach in the same places, or to the same people. If Peter was sent to the Gentiles, Paul could not be sent to the same place, or people, to preach the same gospel that Peter preached. If John turned the hearts of the fathers to the children, in preparing the way of the Lord in his first advent, Elijah can't come and do the very same thing, to prepare the way of the Lord in his second advent. This is an indescribable, nondescript mode of reasoning in which I have no practice. Paulo may say prophecy is fulfilled but once. This may be so. But what has this to do with this case? John had a work to do in his day, and when he had finished it, the prophecy concerning him was fulfilled. This has nothing to do with what Elijah may do at another age of the world, though he should do all the very same things that Gabriel said John would do. What Paulo says about God's sending John to accomplish a certain work, and failing to do it all, and so God must try again, etc. etc., has nothing to do with anything that I have said. I have not said or intimated anything of the kind; and I believe no such thing. All this he bases on what I did not say, to which I have referred. He quotes, "And Jesus answered and said unto them, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things;" and adds, "all things of course that the prophet said he would restore." But this restoring is not named in the Elijah Message, Mr. Paulo. You have said that what Malachi has said is the whole Message, and positively NO MORE. That is, there is no more in it than is named. Now you have something more in it. It is this something more than is named in the prophecy that Jesus affirms Elijah shall do. Paulo says, "Now, if there was an Elijah yet to come, Christ failed to give these anxiously inquiring disciples the slightest intimation of it." After John was dead, Jesus told his disciples, Elias truly shall first come and restore all things. This then is not giving the slightest intimation that Elijah was yet to come. If not, we would like to know what would be an intimation of it. It was not an Elijah, the disciples asked about; they asked him about the Elijah, that was to come. And as Paulo says there is no other promised but the one in Malachi, this then is the one they referred to, and of him Jesus affirmed that he shall surely come and restore all things. This is not said of John. Paulo calls my view of the coming of Elijah the "modern doctrine." We have been told that our view of immortality is a modern doctrine. But we have appealed to the Bible for its antiquity. The doctrine that Elijah is to come is as old as the days of Malachi. It was the faith of the Jewish church in John's time, as is seen by the question they put to him. John believed it; for he said, he was not Elijah. He was a believer in the prophets; and as he was not Elijah of whom Malachi spake (and Paulo says, there was no other promised), John must believe that Elijah was yet to come. Jesus believed, and affirmed it. Baxter says, it was a prominent belief in the primitive church. So much for its being modern. He says, "In the sense in which the Jews looked for Elijah, John was not the Elijah." "They were looking for the old Elijah, with whom Elisha lived, to come down from heaven and fulfil a mission on the earth." Who under the heavens should they look for, if not for the old Elijah? God told them, that he would send them Elijah the prophet. If they believed God, and he meant what he said, who should they look for but the one Paulo says they looked for. Would or could he have looked for any other had he been one of them? In this sense they did ask John, "Art thou Elijah?" for they could not ask him in any other sense, if they believed what God had said. There was no other possible sense in which they could ask him. John, in the most emphatic manner, said he was not Elijah. Paulo says, "In the true sense, John was Elijah that was to come; so says Christ, and so says also the angel Gabriel." Christ does not say that John was Elijah in the true sense, and Gabriel does not say that John was Elijah in any sense. The true sense of the prophecy must be the literal sense. If this was not the sense of the prophecy, the Jews could have known nothing of what was meant by it; and while taking the Lord at his word, they must necessarily have been deceived; and John, instead of undeceiving them, told them plainly that he was not Elijah, leaving them to still look for the true Elijah, and the only one they could look for.

Paulo, to show how John fulfilled the Elijah Message, quotes the passages which speak of John's baptizing the people in the river Jordan. Yes, but he has said most positively that there is nothing in that message but what Malachi has stated, and now he has John's baptism in it in order to fulfil it.

As the Jews asked John, with reference to Elijah in Malachi, for they could ask with reference to no other, and as John said he was not Elijah, if in what Christ said of John he meant that John was all that is meant in that prophecy, as Paulo claims, we have as plain a contradiction as is possible to make. And inasmuch as Paulo claims that John denied being a prophet as Christ affirmed, John was a prophet, we have another equally plain contradiction. Paulo says that all that is in the Elijah Message is what Malachi has stated, "and positively NO MORE." And as he has quoted Luke i. 16, 17, to show what John did to fulfil this message, and as Gabriel has much more than Malachi has, he has made Gabriel contradict Malachi. And as Christ said Elijah shall restore all things, which Malachi does not say, he makes Christ contradict Malachi. As John said he was not Elijah, and as Christ said John bare witness to the truth, Paulo, by claiming that Christ meant that John was Elijah in the full sense of Malachi, makes Christ contradict himself. And inasmuch as Paulo says that Gabriel said John was Elijah, when Gabriel said no such thing; and as he is ready to face the whole learned world on the translation of John i. 21; and as he appeals to the Syriac to confirm his assertion that the Greek should be rendered a prophet; and as Murdock, on whose translation he seems to plant himself as an immovable foundation for correctness, reads (Math. xxv. 46) "These will go into everlasting torment;" and as it follows, that Paulo must either give up his destruction doctrine, and embrace eternal torment, or else admit that the Syriac is not an infallible guide, if Paulo is not lost in his argument, amidst contradiction, assumptions, and appeals, it must be because he is familiar with this mode of argumentation. Paulo has referred to three passages, where Christ speaks of John as Elijah, and calls these three witnesses; as if his point was settled more firmly because, as he has it, there are several witnesses. I would like to know how a statement made three times by the same person, can be called three witnesses? Paulo might say forty times that John i. 21 should read a prophet, but that would not make forty witnesses; neither would his repeating it, strengthen his first statement. If Christ, when he applied Elijah to John, meant what Paulo claims, it would settle the question forever. The repetition of the same thing would not make his statement the first time any stronger. Neither did Christ speak of it the second or third time for any such purpose, but because the occasion called the subject up. Did Christ mean that John was all that is meant by Elijah the prophet? is the question. This settled, and all is settled. Paulo claims that he did. Here we differ.

The statement in Malachi iv. is as plain and positive as it would have been if it had read, Behold, I send you Moses the law-giver. It is "Behold I send you the Elijah the prophet." No statement is more plain and positively stated in the Bible. Mark, it is Elijah the prophet that was to come. Paulo says, that John denied he was a prophet; and so by his own showing John denied the whole statement in detail. And yet Paulo claims that John was both Elijah and prophet of which Malachi spake; and so he contradicts himself. Elijah is applied to but two persons; the old prophet, and John the Baptist. God says that he will send Elijah; and John said that he was not Elijah, without any qualification. When Christ spake of John as Elijah, he prefaced his remark by saying, Elijah surely shall first come and restore all things. He moreover said that John testified unto the truth. John said he was not Elijah, and Christ confirms what John said. So we have the testimony of Malachi, John, and Christ. Here are "three witnesses." I repeat, what I said in my other article, Christ could say that John was Elijah, in the same sense, that he could say, This bread is my body, and this wine is my blood, and that he which hath seen me hath seen the Father; and that Paulo could say, that rock was Christ. This view of the subject makes all plain and free of contradiction. Paulo says my figure is to the point. So I think. Jesus said, "He that seeth me, seeth him that sent me." John xii. 45. But Jesus was not the Father who sent him. Again, John said, speaking of Christ, "This is the true God, and eternal life." John v. 20. But Jesus was not God "the Father of all." "No man hath seen God at any time." John i. 18, and John iv. 12. Yet Jesus was called God, and was "the express image of his Father's person," and is also called "the everlasting Father." Isaiah ix. 6. I could as well say that there is no God, and no Father except Christ, as to say there was no Elijah to come, except John the Baptist. It is on this ground that Christ could speak of John as Elijah, though it be true that God will send Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. For the fulfilment of this passage literally, just as it reads, I look with the same confidence that I look for the great day of the Lord.

WONDERFUL DISCOVERIES.

The reason of my presenting this article under the above heading, is the result of a perusal of a series of articles that have appeared of late in the Crisis, over the signature of a prominent writer. The aim of the writer is to overthrow, if possible, the view held by some, who believe in the future return of Judah and Israel to the promised land. He takes the position that the prophecies relative to their return in a mortal state were fulfilled at the return from the Babylonish captivity. In quoting from Joel i. to ii. 27 he says, that "All this transpired before the first advent and Pentecost." And yet it is the belief of the majority of the readers of the Crisis that the second advent of Christ and the day of the Lord is included in this prediction. For instance, read Joel ii. 3, 11. Here is the darkening of the sun and moon, which is said to have taken place in 1780, and the day of the Lord which is just in the future. He also says that "Joel iii. 1, notes the return of the captive tribes and the city;" which would put the darkening of the sun, and turning the moon into blood, and the great and terrible day of the Lord, when mount Zion and Jerusalem are delivered, at the return from Babylon. Here we have the strongest passages that can be produced to prove the great day of the Lord future, already fulfilled in the past. Let us no longer charge the Universalist of making Jerusalem a pack-horse for the whole Bible, when some to serve a theory are ready to make Babylon a pack-horse for the same.

Again, this writer says, "We regard the whole of Amos' predictions as fulfilled during the course of the Jewish Dispensation." Then that terrible famine, Amos viii: 11, that we have heard much of as yet to come, which is "not of bread but of hearing the word of the Lord," has already past, together with the re-building of the tabernacle of David and the gathering of Israel to be placed in their land, and to be no more pulled up out of their land, all fulfilled in the past. Now I ask, Is this true? We all know it is not; for at the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70, they were scattered among all nations, as predicted by our Lord, Luke xxi. 24, and I boldly affirm that the nation of Israel were never scattered among all nations until that time; therefore, Amos ix. 11, 15, is yet future. Much more might be said upon those prophets already mentioned, but I will pass them for the present.

Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that is the city of Ezekiel is never to be built; but the prophecy was conditional. This, the writer says, "is a city and temple, that, in the fancy of some always just going to be built, yet never actually was built, and never will be built." He then quotes Dr. Clarke to support his position. Dr. Clarke teaches also that Matt. xxiv. was fulfilled at the destruction of Jerusalem, A. D. 70. Why not indorse Dr. Clarke's theory on this also? Oh, we do not believe as he does on this point. Now, it ought to be observed that the last twelve chapters of Ezekiel bear a very strong resemblance to the concluding chapters of the Revelation. Ezek. xlvii. 12 and Rev. xxii. 2, read very much alike; and I have just as good reason to consider one as conditional as the other. In fact, the Book of Revelation is a Jewish Book; and is the carrying out what the prophets have predicted shall come to pass. But I am afraid that this idea of conditional prophecy will yet be carried too far, and it will yet be discovered that the reign of Christ on David's throne is conditional. In fact, I heard a prominent expositor of prophecy state at Wilbraham camp-meeting, some three years ago, that Christ will never sit on the throne of David: that was conditional. He would sit on the throne of his glory; but that was not the throne of David. I should not think it at all strange, if the now fixed "definite time" should pass, if the wonderful discovery should be made by some that the second Advent of Christ is conditional with all the rest; for I could as soon believe now that Christ's second advent was conditional as to believe that his reign on David's throne was a matter of conditional prophecy.

Another still more wonderful discovery has been made; and that is, that the righteous dead are to be raised mortal. It took a very ingenious man to discover this; but as my sheet is nearly full, I cannot say much upon it now, but will add a few thoughts.

If the righteous dead are raised mortal, then our Lord was raised in the same manner. If he was raised mortal, did not he take back the sacrifice? If he took back the sacrifice, who then can be saved? Was not the blood life of our Saviour given up eternally as a sacrifice for our redemption? And did not the Father give him an entire new life, that no one before had possessed, by a resurrection? This is my firm belief. There is one chapter in the Bible wholly given to the exposition of the resurrection of the dead, viz. 1 Cor. xv. This gives a clear statement of the faith of the apostle on this question; and all that are raised from the dead are raised "incorruptible, and immortal." Some think that the all, that are raised in Christ, include all that die in Adam. "Amen:" says the Universalist; "this is my faith, for prove it if you can that when a man is raised in Christ that he will ever die again." I now claim that I have the right to attach the word all to the 42d verse. So also is the resurrection of all the dead; for if all the dead are raised in verse. 22, then all the dead are raised incorruptible, immortal in glory, with a spiritual body, they shout victory over the grave, bear the image of the heavenly, and die no more. This is the legitimate conclusion.

Springfield, Mass. H. J. SWEETLAND.

WHIMS OF MONOMANIACS.

The whims of monomaniacs are innumerable. There was once an English clergyman, the Rev. Simon Brown, who died with the conviction that his rational soul was annihilated by a special fiat of the divine will. A patient in the "Retreat" at York, England, thought he had no soul, heart or lungs. A soldier, wounded on the field of Austerlitz, was struck with a delirious conviction that he was but an ill-made model of his former self. "You ask how Pere Lambers is," he would say; "he is dead—killed at Austerlitz; that which you now see is a mere machine made in his likeness." Dr. Mead tells us of an Oxford student who ordered the funeral bell to be rung for him, and went himslf to the belfry to instruct the ringers. He returned to his bed only to die. A Bourbon prince thought himself dead, and refused to eat, until his friends invited him to dine with Turenne and other French heroes long since departed. There was a tradesman who thought he was a seven-shilling piece, and advertised himself thus: "If my wife presents me for payment, don't change me." Bishop Warburton tells us of a man who thought himself a goose pie; and Dr. Faraday, of Manchester, had a patient who thought he had swallowed the devil. In Paris there lived a man who thought he had with others been guillotined, and when Napoleon was emperor their heads were restored, but in the scramble he had got the wrong one. A newspaper editor fancied he was a paragraph, and as he lay in bed, debated whether he should rise altogether, or sentence by sentence.—Sabbath Recorder.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy or their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
New York."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 172. | NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 15, 1867. | VOL. IV.—NO. 30.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room-40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

THE LATE DISCUSSION.

After the close of the late discussion in Brooklyn, N. Y., a writer, over the signature of "G. W. R," appeared in the Brooklyn Daily Union, the purport of whose remarks will be seen by the following reply from Br. Wendell, which appeared in the Daily Union the day after:

BROOKLYN, April 30, 1867.

To the Editor of the Union: —It is related of Cuvier that he was once asked to pronounce upon the merits of the following definition: "Crab, a fish, of a red color, that goes backward." The objections of the celebrated naturalist to the definition were these: "1. Crab is not a fish; 2. Its color is not red; 3. It does not go backward." I am here reminded of this anecdote by a communication over the signature of "G. W. R" in your issue of last evening—so numerous and important are the misapprehensions of its author. Permit me briefly to set him right.

First. In nothing that was said during my recent debate with Rev. Mr. Henson did I challenge anybody to meet me in another public oral discussion, and no careful listener to the debate should have mistaken my meaning on this point. I did, indeed, in several instances challenge successful contradiction of my position from any quarter whatever, but (as the audience probably well understood) with no intention to have my remarks construed into a formal challenge to debate. I very well know how easily such a challenge, should I have any desire to give it, could reach the public at a more suitable time and in a more becoming manner. In conducting a public discussion I try to understand my proper work, and to not allow myself to be diverted from it.

Second. "G. W. R." thinks that the view that the conscious existence of the wicked ceases forever at death is refuted by Matthew xxv., 41–46. Herein I believe my friend entirely mistaken, for the reason that the "all nations" of the passage in question represent, not the dead raised to life, but the "nations" that shall be found in his glory." My "unknown" critic will vainly seek for an instance in the scriptures where the phrase "all nations" embraces the dead. This point was insisted on by the affirmative in the late discussion.

Third. Wicked men find an exceedingly unsafe adviser in "G W. R.," who says: "If the conscious existence of the wicked ceases at death, let them fear nothing and scorn the laws of God laid down in the Bible, and travel on after the lusts of this world, for they have nothing to fear." In answer to all such wild and ignorant babbling as this, I would say that, if extinction of conscious being is the peril that hangs over impenitent men, they should feel themselves pressed by considerations of infinite weight, to seek without delay, by repentance and faith, such a union to the Lord Jesus Christ as will make them heirs of that "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," which the love of God has provided for all those who seek for it, "by patient continuance in well doing." If "G. W. R." really believes that those who are in danger of missing eternal life "have nothing to fear," I hesitate not to declare my conviction that he has yet to learn the very first "principles of the doctrine of Christ." If eternal torment is the sole motive power of his creed, he stands greatly in need of being shown "a more excellent way;" and if another public discussion shall be needed for this purpose, the result sought will be worthy of the effort. If "G. W. R." shall approve himself as the fittest man to become the exponent of so-called orthodoxy in such an investigation, his being "an attendant to [!] the public discussion at the Brooklyn Institute for three evenings" will not have been in vain.

Fourth. "G. W. R." writes: "Now, if Mr. Wendell pretends to say there is no everlasting fire and punishment, when we are told in the New Testament that there is, I would like to know who is right, Refus Wendell or Saint Matthew?" The "if" in my friend's appeal spoils it, for the fact is that what "Saint Matthew" affirms "Rufus Wendell" fully belives, and the latter will ever rejoice to see "the sane inhabitants of this world * * * stand by Saint Matthew's teachings "in preference to" those of any uninspired or "unknown" teacher.

Fifth. "Mr. Wendell tells us to eat and drink to-day, lest to-morrow ye die." So says "G. W. R." and the remark is simple jargon. The scripture reference is to 1 Cor. xv. 32, but by using "lest" instead of "for" this new polemic shows that he doesn't know what he is writing about. But passing this, it is an atrocious calumny to say that I counsel my fellow men to follow the behests of the epicurean maxim, "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." To do this would be, according to Paul, the supreme wisdom, if there were no life for the righteous beyond the grave; but Christ having risen from the dead as a pledge that His people will also rise in like manner, the maxim to which I would fain give a trumpet tongue in the hearing of dying men is this: "Be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."

Sixth. "G. W. R." writes: "Rufus Wendell further says that there is no eternal drmnation." This is an entire mistake; no such thing even by remotest implication, was said by me during the debate. Now, however, I think it well to inform "G. W. R." that there is the highest critical authority for believing that in the true reading of his proof-passage, Mark iii., 29, the word "damnation" does not occur. According to Lachmann, Tischendorf, Alford, and Meyer, the true reading of the Greek text is "sin" instead of "damnation;" and the American Bible Union gives us "eternal sin" in their version. Prof. Bartlett endorses this reading, in his work against Annihilation.

Seventh. In view of Mr. Henson's utter inability to answer my argument on 1. Cor., xv. 18, 32, I offered that if any person or persons would answer me on those passages by letter, I would, unless convinced by their replies, publicly respond to them during the debate. No letter on the subject was sent me, but "G. W. R." now comes forward with the gratuitous insinuation that I would have acted my pleasure in reference to replying to such letters. His language is, "Yes, I have no doubt he would answer any he chose." I trust that a little reflection will suggest to "G. W. R." that imputations of insincerity to those differing from us in sentiment should be indulged in with great caution. In the case in hand I have only to aver that had any letters of the kind called for been sent to me, I should most faithfully have kept my promise.

"Mr. Unknown" has already been informed by a private note where he can, this afternoon, have an interview with the undersigned.

RUFUS WENDELL.

The same day that Br. Wendell's letter, above, appeared in the Union, another writer in that paper spoke as follows:

BROOKLYN, April 29, 1867.

To the Editor of the Union:

DEAR SIR:—In your paper to-day "G. W. R." takes Mr. Wendell to account with much earnestness, if not force, for his peculiar tenets. I disclaim being a "prejudiced Wendellite;" in fact, as far as I am prejudiced it is against his doctrines, and as Mr. Wendell seems competent to take care of himself, I feel no call to defend him; yet I would like to notice a point of "G. W. R.'s"—one that Mr. Henson paraded with special unction, not as a Bible but as a common sense argument against Mr. W.'s position, and which I regretted that that gentleman did not pay attention to; perhaps like myself he considered it mere clap-trap when uttered and not germane to the discussion, yet it is often worth while to prick a bubble.

Mr. Henson thought the doctrine of eternal death for the wicked rather uncomfortable for the friends of law and order, that it gave a license to sin, etc. "G. W. R." says that if they choose to take his life and cannot escape the [hangman's] rope, "all they have to do is to draw the keen velvet edge of a razor across their throats—then all is well for them"

This assumes, first a fact, and second a principle, First. That the fear of punishment in another world deters wicked men from crime, and by implication that those who do not believe in it do commit crime. Second, That fear and compulsion are the motors in establishing society, safety, morality, and religion.

Is the assumed fact true? No, for that of punishment does not deter the majority of wicked men from crime, and further, those who hold the converse of the doctrine of eternal torment are certainly an average of the community in good citizenship and moral life. Neither is the assumed principle sound. Five per cent would be a very large per centage of the number of law-abiding citizens to allow for those whom fear and force hold in place.

Yet while neither assumed fact nor principle is true, many professed christians loosely hold to this vicious offspring of the old doctrine of total depravity, seemingly unaware that there is a more excellent way, though I observe that few base their actual intercouse with their fellows on so flimsy a foundation. No, they build on nobler foundations, and they are these: That men find health, happiness and joy in being virtuous, temperate, kind, and religious; that the tendency of life and experience is to wisdom and virtue, and that the imperfections, errors, and vices of men are but alloys in precious metal, gradually yet surely being expelled, and never relatively so large as to be the controlling portion of the mass.

Try this theory with fact.

There is society, because men are social rather than savage; there is goverment, because men prefer order to anarchy; there are laws, because men are law-abiding and respecting; these laws are as a whole conservative of justice and morality, because men prefer good laws to bad. Yet neither of these would be practicable unless social virtue, love of order and sentiments of right were preponderating elements in the character of mankind.

I have said nothing of christianity because these all existed before technical christianity, and universally so; and were advancing to higher and higher places of development. Indeed, it may not be too much to say that christianity itself is but one of these developments, and that these, in the various manifestations of the home affections, purity of life, public and private justice, toleration and charity, received a diviner impulse and a more subtle and glowing life from the sublime and simple life and teachings of Jesus.

G. H. M.

THE TWO COVENANTS.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

In treating upon this subject it shall be my only object to arrive at the truth by a careful consideration of all those scriptures which speak concerning it.

I remark in the first place, that God has no three covenants, there are but two—the old and the new. Turning to Gal. iv. we find these two covenants most plainly spoken of. Commencing at v. 22, we read, For it is written, that Abraham had two sons; the one by a bondmaid, the other by a free woman. V. 23. But he who was of the bond woman was born after the flesh; but he of the free woman was by promise. V. 24. Which things are an allegory: for these are the two covenants; the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. V. 25. For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children. V. 26. But Jerusalem which is above, is free, which is the mother of us all. V. 31. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bond woman, but of the free.

We learn from these scriptures the following facts, to wit: First, this covenant from Mount Sinai, be it what it may, is fitly prefigured by that son who was born after the flesh. Second, This covenant gendereth to bondage. Third, All who are children of this covenant are in bondage. Fourth, Gospel believers, or Paul's brethren, are not children of this covenant.

The question before us is, What is this covenant from Mount Sinai? How shall the question be settled, unless it be by a direct appeal to the oracles of divine truth—the word of God? We might theorize as long as we choose, and come very far short of the truth at the end. But if reference is made directly to the word of the Lord, and then, when we read that word, we place implicit confidence in it as it reads, we shall settle the question rightly. Paul declares that this covenant came from Mount Sinai. It seems to me to be the right way to settle this question, to go to the record and see what did come from Mount Sinai, that God called a covenant. And mark, there never were two covenants from Mount Sinai. If there were two from Mount Sinai, Paul must have given us three covenants instead of two. But he has only given two; and one of these is the covenant from Mount Sinai. Again, if there were two covenants from Mount Sinai, it would be impossible to tell which Paul means. Lastly, if there were two covenants from Mount Sinai, Paul was wholly ignorant of one of them, for he says there are only two covenants, all told, and that the one from Mount Sinai, is one of the two: and this is amply sufficient to settle the question for ever, that there is one covenant and one only that came from Sinai; for had there been another Paul would have known it. I here assert that there was never but one thing that came from Mount Sinai that God called a covenant. On this point I challenge the world.

It is therefore a very easy matter to settle what that one thing is. "To the law and to the testimony." Exodus xxxiv. 27, 28. And the Lord said unto Moses, write thou these words, for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel.... And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, THE TEN COMMANDMENTS. This seems plain enough, surely. But again, Deut. ix. 9. When I was gone up into the Mount, to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you. V. 11. And it came to pass at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the Lord gave me the two tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant. What was written on these tables of stone, by the finger of God, (see v. 10.) beside the ten commandments? Surely nothing else. Here then are two more plain declarations that the ten commandments is the covenant which came from Mount Sinai. But we wish to make the matter doubly sure. Deut. v. 2. The Lord God made a covenant with us in Horeb. V. 3. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, EVEN US, who are all of us here ALIVE this day.

In the next eighteen verses he tells them distinctly what this covenant in Horeb was, to wit: The ten commandments. V. 22. These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the Mount, out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he ADDED NO MORE: and he wrote them in two tables of stone and gave them unto me.

Here we not only have it positively asserted that this covenant in Horeb was the law of ten commandments, but also that this law was never given to any except those that were there alive on that very day when Moses addressed them; and further, that this was the covenant entire and that to this covenant God added nothing more.

But once more, Deut. iv. 12, 13. And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire; ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. V. 13. And he declared unto you his covenant which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone.

Thus we have found six positive assertions made by Moses, that the law of ten commandments is the covenant that came from Mount Sinai, and one declaration just as positive, that there was nothing but this law of ten commandments contained in that covenant. Thus the question, to my mind, is forever settled with regard to what constitutes this covenant, and I see no possible way to escape the conclusion that the covenant from Mount Sinai is the law of ten commandments. To deny this, with me, is to contradict the plain and positive declarations of the Bible. This being the covenant from Mount Sinai, it inevitably follows that "it genders to bondage," and that gospel believers are not under that covenant arrangment; that therefore the law of ten commandments is absolutely abolished. But I may be asked, If the decalogue is the covenant, what about the ceremonial law? I answer, Paul makes this all very plain. Heb. ix. 1. Here verily the first covenant had "ordinances of divine service" and a worldly sanctuary. Paul then goes on through the chapter and describes these "ordinances of divine service;" and none can fail to see that they are the cerimonial law. These ordinances are not "the first covenant," but something that covenant "had." They were no more a part of the covenant than my flesh is a part of myself. The covenant we have proved to be the law of ten commandments, only, and Paul says the ceremonial law is "ordinances of divine service" appointed to accompany, go with this covenant, during its entire life-time. The consequence is, both expire together. Just as long as the covenant is binding, so long the "ordinances of divine service" are in full force. But it is objected that if the decalogue is abolished, then is there no law for the condemnation of sin.

This depends entirely upon whether there is another system which God calls his covenant, which has succeeded, taken the place of that first covenant. I am ready to admit, yea, I do most firmly believe, that if the new covenant has not been made, then the conclusion is unavoidable that there is no law to restrain sin. Again, if there is no new covenant made, then have we no hope of a future salvation. Mark, God will never save only his covenant people, He will save nobody except by his covenant arrangement. If, therefore, since the abrogation of the old covenant, there has been no covenant—we have been living without a covenant, there positively is no hope in our case. But is this true? Has the second covenant not yet been made? Again we appeal to the word of the Lord. We argue that God would not appoint a Mediator of a covenant before that covenant had an existence. Is Christ now a mediator of the new covenant? Heb. viii. 6. But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant. All can readily see that Christ's ministry as high priest, and his office as Mediator of the new covenant are entered on at once and the same time. To avoid this is impossible. Seeing this, some have assumed that Christ is not now a high priest after the order of Melchisedek. That on this office he is yet to enter into the future. Let us see. Heb. iv. 14. Seeing then we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. V. 15. For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Why are we to hold fast our profession? Paul says, because we have a great high priest, one that can be touched with the feeling of our infirmities. Would Paul tell this when Christ is not yet our high priest? Most certainly not. The same idea precisely is found contained in Ch. ii. 17, 18. But, says one, he may be a high priest, but not after the order of Melchisedek. Paul continues the same subject in the fifth chapter from the first verse onward. V. 4. And no man taketh this honor to himself, but he that is called of God, as is Aaron. V. 5. So also Christ glorified not himself to be made an high priest, but he that said unto him, Thou art my Son, to-day have I begotten thee. V. 6. As he saith also in another place, Thou art a priest forever after the order of Malchisedek. V. 9, 10. And being made perfect he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him. Called of God, an high priest after the order of Melchisedek.

In these quotations we are, in the plainest manner, taught that in Paul's day God had glorified Christ by making him high priest after the order of Melchisedek. Again, Ch. vi. 19, 20. Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth to that within the vail; whither the forerunner is for us entered, even Jesus, made an high priest after the order of Melchisedek. But once more. Christ was never to be a high priest except after the order of Melchisedek. Heb. vii. 11–17. Here we are distinctly taught that the priesthood was changed, that it was not after the order of Aaron, that Christ was from the tribe of Judah, that he was made a priest after the order of Melchisedek—after the power of an endless life. More evidence on this point would be absolutely superfluous. Having proved then that Christ, when he ascended to heaven, entered on his ministry as high priest; from the before proved fact that he enters on the office work of mediator at the same time, we settle the question, that Christ was made mediator of the new covenant, more than eighteen hundred years ago; consequently, that covenant must have been then in existence. Again, in Heb. ix. 15, 17, the covenant is spoken of, and is called a testament. And Paul declares that Christ is a mediator of the new testament. In Ch. xii. 24, the new covenant is spoken of as already in existence, and Christ is declared to be its mediator. Lastly, Tim. ii. 5. For there is one mediator, etc. Now all these scriptures do positively show that the new covenant has been made, and is now in force, and we are living under it.

But here is a supposed objection. We are told that when this covenant is made, according to Heb. viii. 11, that all will know the Lord from the least to the greatest. This is true, but all of whom? Not all mankind, by any means. It is all with whom the covenant is made. The entire verse reads thus. "And they shall not teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, know the Lord: for all shall know me from the least to the greatest." This new covenant differs from the old in this very particular. The old covenant was given to a whole nation, composed of good and bad men. And it was such an one as all could keep. Yea, though they were only carnal, fleshly men. For there is not a single precept in the decalogue but can be obeyed by any man, be he converted or unconverted. That covenant concerned men's outward acts alone. But, says one, the commandment, "Thou shalt not covet," must take hold on the motives of the heart. I answer, to every precept of that law there was attached a death penalty. Now suppose I was accused of covetousness, and brought before the elders on this charge. And suppose that no act of covetousness could be proved against me, could I be condemned? Most certainly not. From the very fact that every supposed disobedience to this law was adjudged before an earthly tribunal, it settles the question at once that this law did not concern the inner feelings and motives of the heart. There were consequently many Israelites, in the best days they ever saw, who did not know the Lord. Still that whole nation was God's covenant people. That covenant was good so far as it went. But, according to Paul, it was a faulty covenant. Heb. viii. 7. The new covenant is entirely different from the old in all its parts. It is not according to that old covenant. It is in no way like it. It differs from the old in the following particulars: The old was written on tables of stone. See Ex. xxxiv. 27, 28. Deut. ix. 8–11. Deut. v. 1–22. Ch. iv. 12, 13. The new covenant is written on the heart. Heb. viii. 10. Ch. x. 16. 2 Cor. iii. 3. The old covenant was written by the finger of God, making impressions in the stone. The new covenant is written by the spirit of the living God, making its impressions on the heart. 2 Cor. iii. 3. The first covenant was wholly a system of works. The new covenant takes hold first on the motives of the heart. Take an illustration, Mat. v. 27, 28. Ye have heard that it hath been said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery. Where was this said? I answer, this is one of the precepts in the old covenant. But does Christ abolish it? I answer he does, and that too by giving a new precept in its place, a thousand times more strict. "But I say unto you, That whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her, hath committed adultery already with her in his heart." This is a perfect illustration of the character of these two covenants. If, under the old covenant I refrain from the act, I keep that law. But this will not answer under the new. The new carries its scrutinies first to the man's heart. Every moral precept contained in the old covenant is brought forward into the new, but in such a revised form as to make it a practical principle of the heart, instead of a mere precept to regulate men's outward actions. A real principle of right is eternal. No form of penal enactment changes its character. It was always wrong to steal. Barely the command of God given to ancient Israel, "Thou shalt not steal," did not create a principle of right. There are commands that do create principles of right. For instance, lying before me is a worthless block of stone. I command my boy, saying, do not touch that stone. Before this command was given there would have been no breach of parental law let him have handled that rock as much as he would. But now he cannot even touch it without trampling my authority under foot. Are there any precepts in the decalogue of this character? I answer, there is at least one. I refer to the fourth commandment. Of itself there is nothing any more holy in the seventh day than in the sixth. Consequently, till God by special enactment made it wrong to labor on the seventh day it was no more wrong than to work on the fourth, or any other day. That special enactment consisted in putting the sabbath law in the decalogue, or old covenant. When therefore, as it is only made wrong to break the sabbath by a special act of law-making, that system, of which the Sabbath law is a part, is repealed, it must inevitably follow that unless the Sabbath law is reenacted by putting it into the new-covenant, there is no holy time under the new covenant dispensation. Is the sabbath brought into the new covenant? I answer, so far from it, that Christ the mediator of the new covenant, absolutely abolished it, both by precept and example. We are plainly told, Mark ii. 28, That the Son of man is Lord of the Sabbath. He consequently has a right to dispose of it as he chooses. From the 23d to 27th verse we find Christ doing, not only what was entirely unnecessary for him to do on the Sabbath unless he is designing to enforce a new principle with respect to the Sabbath. These acts are also in open violation of the Sabbath law. And he justifies himself in these acts by saying that he is Lord of the Sabbath. The same principle is found in John, v. 8–18. In the 18th verse we read, Therefore the Jews sought the more to kill him because he had not only broken the Sabbath, but called God his Father. In this instance Christ is justly charged with Sabbath breaking; for in verse 17, he acknowledges that he has worked on the Sabbath, and working on that day is absolutely forbidden in the fourth commandment. But it is urged, Christ did not come to destroy the law. I answer, Christ never violated any principal of morality. But where there is a precept in which is no innate principle of right or wrong, he is entirely at liberty to abrogate that precept. This is true with respect to all days observed under the old arrangement. But this covenant differs from the old, in that it is wholly spiritual. The two are contrasted in 2 Cor. iii. 6–11. One is called the ministration of death, the other the ministration of the spirit. The ministration of death is declared to be that which was written and engraven in stones. See v. 7. This no man or woman, by mesmeric visions or otherwise, can honestly avoid. Paul says, "If the ministration of death written and engraven in stones." No language can be plainer. He says, again, If this was glorious, (v. 8,) How shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious. V. 11. For if that which is done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious. What was done away? O, says one, It was the glory on Moses face. Wonderful! According to this view God changed the two dispensations, to stop Moses' face shining; and that, too, centuries after Moses was dead. For mark, Paul is talking here only of the superseding of the ministration of death by the ministration of the spirit, and the consequences thereof. But I ask again, What was done away? The only answer that can be given in harmony with truth is this, That which was glorious. What was glorious. Paul says, The ministration of death, written and engraven in stones. Then that which was engraven in stones (the ten commandments) is done away. What remains? The ministration of the spirit, which takes its place as God's covenant arrangement. But are you sure this ministration of the spirit is the new covenant? Certainly. Read v. 6. Who hath also made us able ministers of the new testament, (or covenant.) Thus the question is settled that the new covenant is wholly spiritual in its character. This new covenant is of course an embodiment of divine law; but that law is a spiritual law only. This law is spoken of in Rom. viii. 2. For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death. Here the apostle recognizes the fact that there is a spirit of life. This spirit is spoken of in v. 11. But if the Spirit of him that raised up

Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken (make alive, Whiting.) your mortal (dead, Whiting, and Murdock) bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you. How surely is "the spirit of life;" for here is a Spirit that not only made our Lord Jesus live again from the dead, but the promise is that all, in whom this Spirit dwells, shall have a future life by or through its quickening or life giving power. This spirit of life has a law and that law is the ministration of the spirit, or the new covenant. This new covenant was made, or the ministration of the Spirit fully introduced on the day of Pentecost. It is true the great cardinal principles of which this new arrangement is made up, are contained in the holy teachings of the Son of God. But, they were wholly inoperative until the Holy Spirit was found out on the day of Pentecost. At that time God wrote his Gospel of love, his new covenant, on the heart of the gospel church. The writing of a spiritual law on the hearts of a people, will of course make that people a spiritual people. Therefore the church of God is represented as a "spiritual house, an habitation of God through the Spirit, a holy temple," etc. Surely none will have occasion to say to his brother in such a covenant arrangement, "know the Lord;" for all who are in this arrangement do "know the Lord, from the least to the greatest." This new covenant is a covenant of life. But it will give life to none except they be in it. This life is resurrection, or immortal life: which two are synonymous. Consequently if we would "attain unto the resurrection from the dead" we must be in the confines of this covenant of life, begotten in it; then when it brings its children to the birth we will realize the blessedness of a fully developed spiritual life, which is immortality. How inconsistent to suppose that a spiritual covenant will, by its practical working, develop animal, corruptible life. This is not the plan of God. He has instituted this new covenant arrangement to bring to those who are in harmony with it, a future ENDLESS LIFE. Amen.

TO THE READERS OF THE HERALD.—In justice to myself, I wish to say to you, that, on the 25th of March, I forwarded to the HERALD a full critical examination of Br. J. T. C.'s last letter to me in HERALD No. 21, with a review of the discussion to date.

Circumstances have led to the conclusion that our discussion had better close, and that my last expose had better not appear in the HERALD. The communication has therefore been withdrawn.

I am fully confident that the main positions I have taken in the examination of the subject in hand are perfectly tenable, and if any other brother, having control of the pages of the HERALD to the extent of securing our appearance therein, thinks otherwise I will be happy at any time to canvass the matter with him.

P. SAWYER.

Summit, Wis., May 6.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

PHILADELPHIA, Ills., May 4, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I left Grafton much embarrassed for lack of means to travel, having only $3 60 in money, and about $3 worth of tracts, as a donation from the brethren East. May the Lord bless the donors. Amen. Well, through the tender mercy of our covenant keeping God, who has said, I will never leave nor forsake you, I have come thus far on my journey to old Fulton; but not without much hard labor in traveling on foot; for it is binding on me, seemingly, to travel in new places, and preach the word where they have never heard the glorious Gospel of the soon coming of Christ; together with all the truths connected; and I wonder with astonishment, when I hear people say, they are confidently looking for the coming of the Lord soon; yea, this very year, and at the same time holding on with a tight grasp their dollars and cents. The world look upon them as hypocrites; and well they may; it staggers me; and I have to conclude that they are not honest, and don't mean what they say. Sometimes I am almost ready to give up. But when I hear the Macedonian cry from every quarter, "come over and help us," I dare not, and indeed will not, so long as I know that my ways please God. Well, to return. I feel to rejoice when I find some in every place where I have bestowed labor, in years past, holding on. Time would fail me to mention every place; but suffice to say, that if we had more help out here, much good would result therefrom.

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO FORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, MAY 15, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

Books, Pamphlets, and Tracts.

Our stock of all these is running low. More have been sold or given away the past year than in almost any previous year except in that period when we sent so many to the army. A few days since a Brother, living in western N. Y., had twenty-two copies of "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST" sent to as many ministers of the various churches in his city, and paid the full price for each copy. That was a good work; and why should not others do in like manner? Let each one see what can be done to place the doctrine of a future life only in Christ before every minister in his vicinity. The theological systems, brought out of the dark ages, are being shaken, and are sure to undergo a change of some kind, or to some extent. In this state of the religious world, shall we not act as men of God who are thoroughly convinced He has given us the truth on the LIFE THEME? We must, or prove ourselves unworthy the trust committed to us.

To do our work, two things are essential, viz.: Men of God to work, and funds to publish such works as best represent the truths we maintain. We are sorry to say we are deficient in both these respects. Do not suppose men are wanted to be what is called "Ministers," or "Preachers;" we need workers; men who will see the community where they live are supplied with the best reading matter that can be furnished on the life question. Preachers may have their use, but they are far more expensive than books, pamphlets, and tracts. And the latter can reach multitudes that a professional preacher never can, and they will remain where the man-preacher stops too short to accomplish much, and does not fully open the subject like printed documents. These documents can walk into the houses of those who dare not go out to hear the professional preacher, or who hear one too seldom to get clear conceptions of the life views, even if the preacher has the ability to make a clear presentation, which is not always the case.

Let the best printed works you can procure be scattered all around you; not by throwing them away, or bestowing them on those you know will not read; but judge who will be likely to look at them with some degree of candor, and then see that such are supplied.

One good Brother has sent, at his own expense, some $40 or $50 worth of various works into Illinois, the year past, to help the laborers in that field, besides some $20 worth to Helen Robertson, to aid in that quarter. In one way and another our stock of books, &c., is nearly exhausted, and our funds also; both need replenishing in order to carry on the work vigorously. Who will help in this work? Let us not delay. A thousand dollars can be well employed just now.

A Plea for "Spiritualism."

Do you ask, Who by? We answer,—By JOSIAH LITCH, late editor of the Advent Herald, but now a correspondent of that paper. In his remarks on the life and death of MRS. LYE, an estimable lady of 73, whose death occurred in Feb. last in Philadelphia, he speaks as follows, under the head of "The Dead Restored to Life."

An incident which occurred some forty years ago, and which has often been related to me by her husband and since his death about a year ago, by herself, deserves particular notice. I shall relate it as nearly as I can in her own language, as she stated it to me by my special request.

At the time referred to, she was residing in West Philadelphia, but was a member of the Ebenezer M. E. church in christian street. She was burned on the head, neck and breast, so terribly as to leave the parts a continuous scar to the time of her death. She had a faithful physician in attendance, who did what he could for her, but to no purpose. At length he announced to her husband that gangrene had taken place, and there was no hope for her life, it being so near the vital organs. He gave up the case and left her.

On Sunday morning following, her class-leader, Br. Wallace, on his way to church, called to see her, and found her in a dying condition. Some time after he left her, she ceased to breathe and presented all the phenomena of death; so that her husband and other friends present believed she was dead. So far we have the testimony of outward witnesses. Of the facts of her personal consciousness, she alone could be a witness. Of this she said, "When I ceased to breathe, I left the body and was perfectly conscious of being separate from the body; I was in the room near the ceiling, and saw the persons in the room, and my body on the bed, and saw what was taking place. I then went down to Ebenezer church and was in the house over the congregation, and saw and heard what was done and said. After the sermon I saw brother Wallace get up and go into the altar, and tell the audience what a condition he had left me in, and asked them to unite with him in prayer that for the sake of my family and for the sake of the church the Lord would raise me up. I saw them kneel down and pray, and thought while they were praying, 'Now if the Lord has promised that where two of you are agreed on earth as touching anything they shall ask in my name, it shall be done,' will he not answer these?" She then returned to the body and began again to breathe.

But from that time, about Sunday noon, till Tuesday morning, she lay in a state of entire insensibility, taking no notice of anything. But on Tuesday morning she opened her eyes and looked around. Her husband seeing that she was sensible, immediately said, "My dear, do you know what a critical condition you are in, that you are mortified and can't live?" She replied, "I shan't die, if I have good nursing." But, said he, "You are mortified and it is impossible for you to live." She replied as before, "I shan't die, if I have good nursing." To the surprise of every one she began to improve; the gangrened flesh sloughed off and her health and strength were restored. As to the prayer-meeting, what she saw did actually take place. This incident of itself is sufficient to put to silence all cavils on the subject of our consciousness out of the body; or at least, when all the bodily functions are at an end. For her breath had ceased, her pulse had ceased, she became cold and rigid as death. So that there could be no mental action or perception through the bodily organs. Her mental action must have been entirely distinct from the body. 1. There was distinct, conscious self identification of the two distinct parts, the body in one place and the me in another place. 2. The conscious presence of another place some three miles distant and knowing what did actually take place while her body was to all intents dead. 3. The miraculous restoration to life and health from so terrible a condition.

If this were a solitary case of the kind, it would settle the fact of consciousness out of the body. But it is only one out of thousands, which have transpired.

Such is Josiah Litch's proof of "consciousness out of the body." Is it not a remarkable "fact" that none of "the dead restored to life," of which the Bible speaks, ever indicate that they saw or knew anything while dead? Why this, if "thousands" have been the witnesses, since, of "consciousness out of the body"? Have greater manifestations been made within the past few hundred years of the state of the dead than God ever revealed by the prophets, Jesus Christ, or his apostles? all of whom restored the dead to life, during their ministry. If all the statements of Dr. Litch, in regard to Mrs. Lye's vision, are true, it neither proves her dead nor that her mind, or "soul" was separated from her body: it simply proves she was in a trance, in which the visible functions of the human system were suspended, and yet the brain unimpaired; so that thought was still evolved. Her supposing she "left the body" is no proof that she did do it; and Dr. Litch's credulity in the matter is no evidence that such was the fact; for we are not to suppose that he or Mrs. Lye knew more than Paul did, who could "not tell" in what manner his vision of "the third heaven" was made. Dr. A. Clarke says, in his note on 2 Cor. xii. 2, "That the apostle was in an ecstacy, or trance, something like that of Peter, Acts x. 9 there is reason to believe; but we know that, being carried literally into heaven, was possible to the Almighty. But as he could not decide himself, it would be ridiculous in us to attempt it."

We suppose the manifestation was made in a manner which it was impossible even for the apostle to decide. But Mrs. Lye, or rather Dr. Litch is better informed than Paul, for he, or she, says, "There was distinct conscious self identification of the two parts, the body in one place and the me in another." Well, now, that beats the ignorant apostle! No doubt they are wiser than Paul or Solomon! The latter affirming that, "if the dead rise not, then they also who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." But Dr. L. would have us believe the dead are alive all the while; and know more than ever.

Dr. L. speaks of Mrs. Lye's "conscious presence in another place" [from her body] "some three miles distant," &c., as if that was proof of actual absence from the body. How far does he think "the third heaven" is from the earth? as much as "three miles," doubtless: and yet Paul did not think that proof that he was out of the body." Neither do any of Mrs. Lye's statements prove she was out of the body, even supposing she thought it was so. We have, personally, in sleep, seen ourself, and knew it to be ourself, not as our dead body, but as our living personality. What does that prove, only that when our outward senses are closed, but the brain, still, unquieted, or not at perfect rest, we see things strangely, sometimes? Such, we believe, was the case under consideration; and ten "thousands" such instances prove nothing as to the state of the actually dead. Be it remembered Mrs. Lye was not dead: she was only in a trance state at most; apparently dead, but not actually so. The parading such cases in proof of the conscious state of the dead can only promote superstition, and bolster up modern spiritualism, the greatest delusion of these last days, having its origin in the doctrine of an immortal soul in man, and its conscious existence in death. Dr. Litch hates "spiritualism," but feeds it with its most important food. By such a theory as he contends for, it fattens and flourishes continually.

Prayer.

"It is to be feared that many are becoming negligent in the duty of prayer. Prayer is the vital breath of the growing christian. One might as well think of living physically without 'the breath of life,' as spiritually without prayer. When we look over the history of the past, we shall find that the prosperity of our churches in divine life has been largely in proportion to the amount of fervent prayer. So it is with individuals. We know Satan will do all in his power to lead men to think otherwise, because he well knows the power of prayer. We hope all of our readers will learn that beautiful hymn on page 181 of the Jubilee Harp.

"Is there as much prayer among us now as a people, as there was twenty-four years ago? Let us give this matter our most serious attention. All should have set times every day when they can retire from the world and hold communion with the Lord. Dear reader, do not pass this subject as a matter of small consequence."

No one can set a higher value on prayer than ourself. But the foregoing, from the World's Crisis, we think may mislead in, if not hinder, true praying. In the first place, prayer is not so much a "duty" as it is a privilege granted us. It is true, "Prayer is the vital breath of the growing christian;" but who would think of exhorting one to "the duty" of breathing. He breathes involuntarily, or spontaneously. Who would think of telling a man he "should have set times every day" to breathe? The very idea would be ludicrous. Where or when did Christ or his apostles ever inculcate, by word or deed, that "All should have set times every day when they can retire from the world" for prayer? The thing with some people under some circumstances, is impossible: and no such injunction was ever laid on Christians by inspired authority. We have not a word to say against such a practice, as a privilege, if any have the opportunity and inclination; but we do protest against its being urged as a "duty" on any one. The fact is, these "set times" for prayer, naturally tend to the impression that we need not pray at other times; whereas, "men ought always to pray"—to "pray without ceasing"—"to continue instant in prayer"—"to pray everywhere," &c. The "set times" are extremely liable to supersede a life of prayer, and lead to formality in it; for it is next to impossible that a person should have such times, every day, without having more or less formality, if his prayers are of any length: that is, he will say much the same things in each of those "set times." This is not the only objection to this course. Prayer without faith is mockery. Our Lord saith "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." Suppose a father to tell his son, "Whatsoever you ask of me, I will give you." The son asks for something, but does not immediately receive it; and so he fixes on "set times every day" to repeat his request; and does this day after day. How much faith does he manifest in his father's promise? Does he not, by this course, virtually say, "Father, I doubt if you intend to do as you said;" or, "I fear you have forgotten your promise?" Would a truthful father feel himself honored by such a course? Would he not be likely to tell that child, "I am only waiting for the most suitable time to bestow on you the gift; and can you not trust me in this matter, but think to hurry me to a premature fulfillment of my promise, as if I were like the unjust judge who needs continual urging, and then only gives lest he should be wearied by these perpetual prayers? Spend your time, my son, in some better way than to waste it in reminding me of my promise, as if I did not remember it as well as you. I am trying your faith; trust me to bestow the desired favor in the time and manner which my experience and knowledge shall determine to be most to your advantage; and do not think to hurry me by your 'set times' of teazing; for they manifest a lack of faith in my word of promise."

Have we stated the case unfairly? We think not. Much of these "set times" for prayer are like the son whose case we have supposed. If any new case of want arises, ask for what you want, and expect to receive: do not doubt it; go about your calling confiding in God that he will give what you have asked for, or its equivalent. Do not go doubting day after day, and think you must have "set times" to repeat the same request. Some times, perhaps, we do not see any special new wants. Then why make up a set time prayer to pray for what is already secured? Give thanks, and take courage to ask for any thing and all things which you need as the want appears. But this requires no "set times." Ask when and where the want arises; whether at home or abroad; in your house or in the street; sick or well; on your bed or in your chair; on your feet or on your knees. It is not the posture, time, or place, that makes your petition prayer. It is the going out of your heart to God, in faith, for that which you need. If you have not a clear conception of what you want, ask God to give you what His wisdom, knowledge, and love shall see that you need, and as He sees you need it; and rest in him that He will do it. That is worshipping Him, "in spirit and in truth." "Such" are the worshippers God "seeketh."

All the foregoing remarks are intended to apply to private prayer. As to social prayer, the example of Christ and his apostles is that which we are to follow; and not invent something else, nor take the traditions of men. But we shall not enlarge on this topic now. Yet we may say that, with the unconverted the practice of Christ and his apostles was that of Teachers, and not of praying with them. So far as we know not an instance is on record of their ever praying with, or in the presence of, the unconverted. They instructed and exhorted such, and prayed with them only after they had professed faith in the truths taught them.

Lest any of our remarks may be construed as opposed to family worship, we add, The family is God's first ordained church; and the head of the family is God's ordained priest in that church, or household; and he is bound by his relation to the children God has given him to act for them till they are matured so as to act for themselves. He is bound to instruct them in the things pertaining to their relation to God; but how often, and at what times this shall be done, each head of a family is himself the judge; and it is not for men to say that he should have "set times every day" even for this; but let him not neglect the obligation of "training up" his "children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" for God will require them at his hands; and those parents who neglect this service peril the eternal life of the offspring they have been the means of bringing into the world. But if heads of families were to spend more time in teaching, and less in long prayers, their children would most likely profit more. Especially should heads of families see to it that their daily lives and conversation do not contradict their teaching and their prayers; for children imitate, and will learn from your example in spite of all your teaching and praying. You are a prophet, priest, and king in your own house. Exercise all these offices in the love and fear of God, and enforce all by a loving, holy life, if you would lead your children to life eternal. If you do not these things, you are their betrayers and murderers. Feel, then, your responsibility and act accordingly.

A Painful Duty.

A number of our esteemed Brethren and Sisters in Boston, have sent us a communication in which they "demand" that "The Elijah and his message" be placed before the readers of the HERALD OF LIFE by "Joseph T. Curry." They do not pretend to deny that Br. Curry claims to be the "Elijah to come;" and he also claims to be the "Prophet like unto" Moses. If this latter assumption be true, then we must all "hear him in all things whatsoever he shall say unto" us, or we "shall be destroyed from among the people." See Acts iii. 21–23, and Deut. xviii. 18, 19. Our friends in Boston will not deny that he claims, also, to be the "Cyrus" of Isaiah, xliv. and xlv., and that he finds in that name his own, "Curry;" and he challenges any Hebrew scholar in the land to refute him in any of his positions. He claims to be the antitypical "Joseph," and that he was sold to the East India Company for the same number of pieces of money that Joseph was sold for into Egypt. Our Boston friends, we suppose, will allow he claims that he is to be at the head of this nation, with twelve subordinate rulers under him in the government; with various other claims, which we care not to mention.

Now, it is well known that no one ever was more attached to this brother than ourself, or rejoiced more that such a helper had been raised up in the great work in which we had so long labored. Active untiring, studious, and constantly engaged in work, we rejoiced to take every opportunity to help him on, and to apologize for him when others were disposed to censure. But it can no longer be concealed, that excessive study and labor brought on a terrible fever, of long continuance, in which his life was despaired of, and from which he only recovered to give sad evidence that his mind had received a shock which left him not his former self, but which we hoped would become remedied in time, in which hope, however, we were doomed to disappointment, and are now compelled to witness a once powerful and most promising mind laid in ruins, manifested in the assumptions above spoken of. If our friends in Boston love Br. J. T. Curry as we do, and have ever done, let them, if they can have any influence over him, strive to withdraw him wholly from public religious performances; and let him have provided for him all needed help and rest, if they would save him from hopeless monomaniaism. We speak in love and pity. His case is not a moral aberration, but a mental one; and to "demand" a public exhibition of it, we respond by saying, "Ye know not what ye ask," as Jesus once said to two of his loving but erring disciples. We speak advisedly; and pray you, dear Brethren and Sisters, to take heed that you do not add to this beloved brother's calamity by seeking to push him before the public in his present condition. We can have no lot or part in such a course; and in this view we are sustained by the "BOARD OF DIRECTORS of the Life and Advent Union;" nearly all of whom have expressed their views on this subject. Duty to the public, and love to the cause of truth, have compelled us to perform this sad office of letting all know how we stand in relation to this painful matter.

The Birth of Christ.

How wonderful the scene witnessed in Bethlehem more than 1800 years ago! No such event—none equaling it in interest—had ever before transpired on this globe. The creation of man was a remarkable exhibition of power and wisdom, an act showing the wondrous working of creative energy, but it was the formation of man out of the dust, and the impartation to him of a principle of life possessed also by other and inferior orders of creation.

The conception, in the womb of the virgin, through the energizing power of the Holy Ghost, of a being who was to occupy the position of a second Adam, be a Redeemer of the race from sin and its sad consequences, raising man to a higher condition, and imparting to him a nature like that of God, even the divine, was, however, an event as far transcending in importance that of the creation of man, as the nature and power of the highest archangel exceed those of the most minute atom that floats in the drop of water—the world of its existence and operations.

And yet, sublime as was the event, important and momentous as it was, in its bearings on the nature and destiny of man, inasmuch as through the Redeemer he was to be saved from sin, to be made a partaker of the divine nature, and to become an heir of glory, and honor, and immortality—notwithstanding all this, how humble and uninviting were the circumstances connected with the Redeemer's birth. Prophecy had foretold that a Saviour should be born in Bethlehem of a virgin, that he should suffer and die, revive again, ascend up on high, return again to the earth, reign upon the throne of his father David, become the generative Father of a spiritual seed as innumerable as the sand upon the sea-shore—a race that should increase throughout the perpetual generations.

The being to be brought into existence was One, therefore, whose nature and work, and glory, were such as ought apparently to hav directed towards the event the general attention, that it might be celebrated in a manner in harmony with, and befitting his glorious work and character. But no pomp and parade, no noisy demonstrations of joy ascending from excited and happy throngs—no scenes like those which are attendant on the birth of heirs to earthly thrones, marked the advent of him who was to be the Saviour of men—the King of kings, and Lord of lords. In a stable, the sheltering place of beasts, Jesus was born. In a stable the eyes of the Lord of glory opened to the light: in a manger they laid him. Earth could afford room for her children in palaces, and inns and other dwellings, but for him who made all things, and who took upon him our human nature that he might bless and save us, no other place or shelter could be provided than the abode of beasts; no cradle but the manger of oxen.

To celebrate the event, man had made no provision. No music pealing from brazen throats, or the sweeter warblings of human voices, lent their melodies to commemorate the wondrous event; no slaughtered animals prepared for rejoicing feasters weighed down tables surrounded by happy guests: no, it was as if some humble being had entered upon life, the nature of which was to be as lowly as his origin, and whose death would be as little marked as was the period of his birth.

But though man failed to make provision for the celebration of an event so fraught with interest to the race, He who sitteth in the heavens did not suffer it to pass by unmarked or unregarded, but caused it to be signalized by circumstances indicative of the divine agency in their production. On the plains of Bethlehem was the event celebrated in a manner as grand as it was wonderful and glorious. While lowly shepherds kept their watch by night, an angel sent from heaven suddenly appeared. Not shining simply with a personal effulgence, but with the superadded glory of the Lord, he speaks to the affrighted shepherds, and disarms their fears by announcing the glorious news that unto them was born that day in the city of David a Saviour, Christ the Lord. To prove the truth of his assertion, he tells them that they will find the babe wrapped in swaddling clothes, lying in a manger. While uttering the heavenly message, a multitude of angelic beings suddenly appear, who praise God, and sing the anthem of "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

What beauty and glory were witnessed, what melody heard, what joy and happiness felt, as that song of praise rolled up from Bethlehem's plains until it reached the courts of heaven,—the ears of heaven's King. How the anthem must have been caught up by the innumerable hosts around the throne, and taken up by every pure and holy spirit, until from star to star, throughout the universe of God, the song of joy and wonder, of love and praise, swelled in all its richness and harmony in view of a Saviour born, of "Life, eternal life" to be bestowed on perishing men. Compared with such a scene, such an outburst of universal joy and praise, how poor and insignificant are all the demonstrations of human joy, when those in lofty or in lowlier positions commemorate the birth of those whose advent they would not pass by unnoticed!

If such a song of praise and thinksgiving was sung by pure and sinless angelic beings in view of the birth of Him who was to become the Saviour of men, should not man himself join in singing the song? Man who is the subject of the salvation which Jesus accomplishes? Shall we be silent who have so much cause for thankfulness and joy? Should not an anthem of unceasing and ever-growing praise ascend from hearts which have felt the joy and peace arising from a sense of sins forgiven, and that glow with the hope of glory, and honor, and immortality yet to be enjoyed by the child of God, when his Redeemer shall come to complete the work of his redemption, and usher him into new scenes, and admit him to a participation in joys and pleasures as satisfying as they will be eternal?

Soon the days of our warfare will be accomplished, our season of suffering be ended, temptations and troubles no more afflict us, our night of pain, and sorrow, and weeping be over, the bright and glorious morning of the resurrection burst upon our raptured vision, and then a song will be sung by redeemed and rejoicing spirits which shall swell in higher, and nobler, and more exalted strains than any we can now raise—a song in view of redemption completed, of "life," "eternal life" attained through the finished work and sacrifice of Him who once lay in Bethlehem's stable and manger, but who will then be manifested as the glorious, ever living Redeemer, "The King of kings, and Lord of lords."

JOHN FONDEY, M. D.

Philadelphia, April 30, 1867.

Letters and Extracts.

From Emeline Wood.

ALBANY, N. Y., April 16, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Oh, how blessed to hold on the word of life, and how truly it enables us to trust in the living God. It truly satisfies the hungry soul that longs to see him as he is, and be made like him. How I want to trust in him with all my heart, and to live only to glorify him in all I do. I do feel that I am growing in grace, and some in knowledge; and how I want to spread this blessed and glorious truth. When I see the wicked do so wickedly, it makes me praise our Father in heaven that he is so good as to make the punishment death; blot them all out as though they had not been. He looks like such a loving Father that I feel that I want to love him with all my powers, and to glorify him in all things. I wish to do something for the cause; and I feel, like the blessed Saviour, to do all the good I can; and if the Lord prospers me with work I will try and send the paper to some other place, as the Lord directs. May he bless every word and back it with the Holy Spirit. Unless he does, it will do no good; for the blessing of the Lord makes rich and adds no sorrow. Truly he is good to the upright in heart, who leave all to follow him; and how true are all his words. Some of us do believe; glory to his name; they love the truth and enjoy it, and they seem to live more pure than those that do not embrace it. We truly have some dear ones among us that live as though they loved and prized God. How I wish that we could hear some one on the life question; but we have strong opposers, and we will have to be patient and wait till the Saviour convinces them of the truth. Br. Nichols gives us a little sometimes, and it seems so good, it truly does my heart good; and am thankful for those mercies. May God change their hearts, is my earnest desire.

From Polly G. Pitts.

FREDERICKS, IOWA, April 29, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I write to inform you that my companion, CHARLES PITTS, has fallen asleep. He died April 23d, at the setting sun. His life closed like the day, calm, and peaceful. He was a great sufferer for two weeks and three days. He died with quick consumption. His hope of eternal life, through Jesus Christ by a resurrection from the dead, was firm unto the end. He longed to go; and wondered that life held him so long. On the 4th, at evening, we two alone partook of the Lord's supper in remembrance of Him, and to show forth his death till he come. I know it is the last time that we shall drink together of the fruit of the vine, in commemorating the death of our divine Master, in this state of things; but our hope is sure that we shall drink it new in the kingdom of God. Yes, together drink the excellent fruit of the vine, with Jesus, and the ransomed of all nations.

My husband was 80 years, six months, and eleven days old. He was full of days, full of the hope of immortality; loved the word of God above all other words. I feel lonely, but I can say, "As for God, his way is perfect; the word of the Lord is tried; He is a buckler to all those that trust in him. Soon will be accomplished His unfailing word, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from my eyes." Amen. May that blessed time soon come, when all that are in Christ shall be made alive. God grant that this may be the happy lot of us all, for Christ's sake. Your sister, hoping for life when the LIFE GIVER comes.

Sleep, servant of the Lord
Within thy dreamless bed;
For soon shall come thy great reward,
And thou shalt rise immortal, Yes,
And reign with Christ thy living head.

Rest, rest from all thy cares;
By reason of great strength,
Thy life was four-score years,
But thou hast reached at length, Yes,
Reached the unconscious rest like the leaf that's sere.

Farewell, farewell dear friend,
The partner of my life,
Thy love reached to the end
Through all the world's rude strife. Yes,
Love thou wilt again, when crowned with everlasting life.

Although in weakness sown,
Immortal thou shalt rise;
Thy Saviour's beauty shall put on,
Enjoy the rest that He has won. Yes,
Born from the dead to reign in paradise.

P. G. P.

From Maria M. Weaver.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS:—I trust you will not think me dictating if I write what has been on my mind for some monts. A desire to make the dear HERALD all that it can be is what induces me to mention the matter at all.

Very many who read the HERALD have complained that it has lacked in variety; that it is too much confined to our peculiar view of life through Christ. And this used to be a fault I found with it. But I have of late considered the matter and thought that perhaps we who read it, and sometimes write for it, are the only ones in fault. The EDITOR cannot furnish his readers with articles till they are furnished him. He receives all those long, sound, logical articles, every one of them full of Resurrection and Life. Now and then a word of exhortation and comfort is afforded us, and we like that. And I have been thinking that, as far as my mite goes, it shall be given differently in the future. If I have a word on the resurrection, that has gone to the HERALD; but if anything of a different nature has been written, it has gone to other papers, to help them make out the much loved "variety."

And now, pardon me, brethren, but there is another little word I beg leave to say, for in doing so I speak for others. Somehow it makes us sorry when we have read a real good article to be obliged to lay aside the paper and say, "I really wish I did know who this HOMO, or W. M., or some other initials, can be. I do think it is too bad that people can have such ability to write on such glorious truths and been willing to let their friends know who they are." An article is much more interesting to me when I see the writer's whole name attached to it. What if our Editor had never given his name in the paper, but had signed "G. S.," or some Latin word-name; how sorry we would be, and how it would look to everybody. I say, be willing to bear the honor or dishonor that can come from an honest and humble defence of God's word.

We have had some gems in the HERALD of late; and thank God that BR. BISHOP is not too bashful to sign his name to his articles. His letter to me through the HERALD is appreciated, and has been read by several in this place. One sister who is of no common mind said, "I had a feast when reading that piece and some others." O, that "mortal resurrection" is a mortal thing, and will soon die in consequence of its mortality. Who on earth can give it life? May God guide us into truth, keep us from sin, and save us in his kingdom. Amen.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We are glad that Sister Weaver has made up her mind to help us to "variety." She has helped us to some in this letter. She thanks the Lord "that Br. Bishop is not ashamed to sign his own name to his articles." Br. Bishop will doubtless laugh at being thus complimented, seeing more than one "article" from his pen has appeared in the HERALD, within a short time, over a fictitious signiture. That helps to make "variety." As to "W. M.," we stated at the outset of his communications that he was one of the "DIRECTORS," and any one can tell which by looking at the list which appears in the paper every week. As to others, whose articles appear over fictitious names, so long as it is their pleasure to do so they must be indulged; and our readers must look at the matter, and not idolize a man. There is too much reliance on the person's name with some people; and the name may have more to do with the reception of an article than any matter it may contain.

Sometimes a modest writer culls from others sentiments which he approves and mingles them with remarks of his own, so that the article is not strictly his own, and he does not wish to impose it on the reader over his proper name, but takes a fictitious one. This is proper and right. We have seen an entire article, of some length, inserted in a paper not a hundred miles from Boston, nearly every word of which was taken from our writings, verbatim, with here and there a word changed: and that copyist was "not ashamed to sign his own name to his" theft, and assume the article as his own. Let us learn to look at the matter of every article we read, weigh it in the balance of truth, and receive or reject according to its estimated value thus tried, and not by the weight of the writer's name. There is by far too much of man-worship, even among those who profess to reject creeds and appeal to the Bible alone. If Br. So-and-so writes, "it is excellent." If some other person was its author, his name insures it "the go by:" it's not worth reading, in their estimation. We do not, ourself, profess to be free from this feeling. We confess that some have shown such imbecility and folly in their communications that we have no confidence in their judgment and discretion, and cannot think of wasting our time in reading communications from them. Such writers are usually anxious to have their names appear: they seem to desire notoriety.

We published nine articles in the HERALD OF LIFE, since July last, sent to us without a signature, and without having a suspicion who the author was: he sought not to be known, and he was not known during his life time; yet those articles were made a blessing to many, and none the less for their ignorance of who prepared them. Following a favorite name has been the ruin of thousands, and is likely to destroy many more. A man may be wise and sound in mind to-day, and to-morrow his mind may, by some adverse circumstances, be perverted: his very exaltation, in the minds of his fellows, may prove his downfall and his and their ruin. Beware of idolizing men. Let Christ and his word be your leader and guide, and remember, that "cursed is man that trusteth in man, and whose heart departeth from the LORD." This warning we all need in these days when many do, or will come in their "own name," if not saying, "I am Christ," yet saying, "I am some great one;" and thus "deceive many." Let us not suppose ourselves proof against the power of a man's name. It may be the means of leading us away from Christ and truth, to follow an ignis-fatuus. We have already witnessed several such bewilderments in our life time, and we fear we are yet to witness many more such manifestations. O, that God may enable us to "cease from man, whose breath is in his nostrils, for, wherein is he to be accounted of?"

Nothing in our remarks is intended for Sister Weaver personally; for we believe she abhors man-worship as much as any of us. Let her write often for the HERALD OF LIFE, either over her own name or a fictitious one, as best pleases her. If we remember right, we have never refused her a place in our columns. There are not many writers for the paper of whom we can say the same thing; but generally they do not complain; yet some do, and withdraw. We regret this, but can't help it. "Better one suffer than many," is an old maxim.

As to the "mortal resurrection," we perfectly harmonize with Sister Weaver. It is truly a "mortal thing, and will soon die." It never had any other life than a galvanized one; and the galvanic battery, which gave it such, is well nigh demolished by its efforts to continue the appearance of life. It will exhaust its little remaining strength and "be as though it had not been;" for "the dead shall be raised incorruptible;" and they "shall be raised in glory and in honor." "Neither can they die any more." Let us not turn aside to follow a phantazma—an invention of man, whatever his pretensions to wisdom or superior piety. "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them."

From La Fayette Norris.

CAMPTON, IOWA, April 14, 1867.

BR. STORRS.—Baptism is being discussed considerably in this place on account of the different sects trying to get the new converts into their respective church pews. But as yet, few of those that came out in the great revival last winter have joined any of the sects. I really believe a good preacher on the "life theme" could accomplish good in this place just now. I feel the importance of time, and have prayed for help to enlighten the minds of the people. Cannot some good preacher come this way? Two days ago we were called to follow a neighbor to the grave. She was a member of the Methodist church, and an intelligent and noble woman. The most remarkable thing I noticed in the funeral discourse, was, that the preacher laid the principal stress on the resurrection as the hope of a future life, and quoted scripture to prove the same. He referred incidentally to "going to heaven at death," but quoted no scripture to prove it. It did really seem to me that the preacher could not fail to see his own awkward position. But it is the old story of "the blind leading the blind."

In referring to the hope of man in death, I have thought it might be interesting to relate the substance of what the late Sister BUGBEE, of South Bend, Ind., told me the last time I saw her. It was with regard to the conversion to the truth of "Life through Christ at the resurrection," from the fancy of going to heaven at death, of a pious woman belonging to the Presbyterian church, the same that Sister Bugbee had been turned out of. I have forgotten the lady's name; but at the time of which I am writing she was in the advanced stages of consumption. While this lady was sick she sent for Sister Bugbee, and had a long talk with her. In this conversation she wanted to know something more of those doctrines for which sister Bugbee was turned out of church. Sister Bugbee explained them to her at some length, and the sick woman was at once deeply interested on the subject. But Sister Bugbee thought it not best to talk much with her on the subject, she was so weak, lest she might hasten her death, or, at least, give people a chance to talk about her pressing her religious views on an invalid. But the sick woman would not be put off, and almost every day that Sister Bugbee failed to visit her, she would send for her. At these visits Sister Bugbee's time was principally spent in reading the Bible for the sick woman, and comparing scripture with scripture. At first she thought the "sleep of the dead" a cheerless doctrine, and she could not bear the idea of lying in the cold and silent grave. But she became convinced it was the truth, and said she was willing to submit, if it was God's will. She said the resurrection stripped death of all its terrors. As she advanced in the glorious truth, she became more and more attached to Sister Bugbee, and could hardly consent to have her out of her sight. One day the preacher that turned Sister Bugbee out of church, came to visit the sick woman, Sister Bugbee being absent. The sick woman began to ask him how he would explain certain passages of scripture. But the preacher, instead of answering her questions, bent very low forward in his chair, and asked, "Has Mrs. Bugbee been her?" He refused to talk with her on bible subjects, and very soon left. Sister Bugbee said she never saw any one more triumphant in close view of death, and certainly not half so interested on bible subjects. I think this case will compare favorably with popular death-bed scenes. As I never saw Sister Bugbee again, I do not know the circumstances attending the dying hour of this sick woman; but presume it was peaceful, as was also Sister Bugbee's but a few years afterwards.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The first feeling that arises, in looking over the past two weeks, in seeking to report matters of interest, is that nothing has occurred worthy of being noted. And yet, in the fact alone that we have been blessed as a nation of thirty millions of human beings, scattered over thousands and thousands of miles of territory, in peace, prosperity, in freedom from dire calamities, in having a stable government, in successfully mastering many evils, and in benefits almost without number, that, by comparison, makes any other people seem poor indeed, should make us amazed at our indifference and lack of gratitude to God, the giver of every good. The cry comes up, indeed, from the South, in parts over which the armies lately trod so destructively, that the poorer classes still lack bread and the means to raise food; but in a few weeks the crops there will be harvested, and as they are promising in their abundance, the days of want will soon be passed. But that there is such comparatively little suffering and so much hopefulness, cheerfulness and general good will, that seems to obliterate the remembrance and pass into oblivion the late terrible storm of anarchy, violence and rage, seems little less than a miracle. At times one has to ask if the great rebellion that swept into the grave a million of human beings, and destroyed ten thousand million dollars of property, did really take place during the past six years, or was it only a dream. In any other period of the world's history, a hundred years would not have sufficed to efface so effectually the traces of a great war. We have gone back to the discussion of social and political questions, to devising schemes to develop and connect our hyperborean possessions at the north with the tropical south; to the angry nations of the Old World we are selling our monitors, our big guns, and other accumulations of war material. We are ruthlessly driving out the heathen tribes of Indians, as did the Israelites of old their heathen enemies, to bring both sides of our continent into a close, safe and daily communication; our schemes are growing wider and becoming more magnificent each day, and material prosperity instead of God, as the object of daily worship, is the danger we have now most to dread.

Jeff. Davis, after two years' confinement in the dungeons of Fortress Monroe, has been liberated on bail. Horace Greeley was one of his bondsmen.

The Department of State has received information from the Agent and Consul-General of the United States at Alexandria, Egypt, that six of the discontented members of the Jaffa Colony arrived at Alexandria on the 6th of April, on their way home to the United States.

FOREIGN.

The latest intelligence from Europe is of a very pacific character, owing to the settlement of the Luxemburg question by the Peace Conference which assembled in London on the 9th inst.—continuing four days. The following basis for the deliberations of the Conference was agreed upon:

First. The territory of Luxemburg is to remain in the possession of the King of Holland as Grand Duke of Luxemburg.

Second. The neutralization of the Grand Duchy is to be guaranteed by all the European Powers which participated in the Conference.

Third. The Fortress of Luxemburg is to be razed.

The feeling is still general among the public writers that war is only postponed, not prevented, by this settlement. Both France and Prussia were unprepared to commence hostilities. The former had made unusual efforts during the past year to get its army ready; the forces have been called in from Mexico and Algeria, officers have had their leave of absence annulled, the entire army is being reorganized, and every form of arm changed. This will require a year to complete, but as Prussia was even more unprepared, at least Napoleon so deemed, he made his second aggressive demand to get the upper hand; this being as contemptuously refused as the one made last year. War would have necessarily followed except the last resort of a General Conference of nations was sought to ostensibly save the peace of Europe, which both seemed ready enough to do in order to escape the unpleasant dilemma the overreaching spirit of Napoleon had forced them into. But the war spirit evoked—in the one case in the people being conscious that the mismanagement of their Emperor has made France subordinate to a power regarded hitherto as insignificant; and in the other, Prussians being made aware that the unity of Germany can only be attained by a final resort to arms, leaves the whole matter just at it has been all along for the past year. Austria is to be placated or destroyed by Prussia—Russia having already come to an understanding with her—the inchoate condition of Germany is to be fused into national unity, and then, with a united people of forty millions, defiance can be hurled at Napoleon and all his schemes. These, at least, are the avowed feelings of both parties as shown in their respective journals. And the conduct of each Government seems to give assurance that these calculations are no idle fancies.

The rebellion in China, smothered for two years, has broken out again as violently as ever.

The manifesto of the Roman republicans, with the accompanying letter of Garibaldi, which we published recently, would indicate that the threatened rising in the Papal dominions is near at hand.

The Ritualists are unpopular in some parts of England. On Good Friday the Rev. James Hunt, incumbent of a parish near Bridgewater, entered the church bearing in his hand a large wooden cross and followed by the bell-ringer and a woman named Cottey, who has been for some time past the sole member of his congregation. A mob of about 50 persons, including a number of children dressed out with colored paper, soon burst into the church, pelted the reverend gentleman with eggs, beat the woman, Cottey, and tore her clothes to rags, and regaled themselves with tobacco and cider. Mr. Hunt was finally driven to a neighboring house for shelter.

On April 8th, the Emperor signed the decree abolishing slavery throughout the Brazilian Empire, to take effect in twenty years. Children born after to-day are absolutely free.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND TRACTS can be had at the Editor's residence; of GEO. W. YOUNG, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 37 Park Row, Room 40.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since. We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—Rev. L. H. Landon, A. Boynton, B. S. Jackson, Joseph Hamilton, Thomas McClary.

Two Dollars each from—I. N. Sprague, John Kettle, Jonas Notestine, Charles Wendell.

Various Sums.

Osias Clapp, $5; Asa L. Shipman, $3; John W. Snyder, $5; Amos French, $1 50; Mrs. L. C. Crane, $1.75, donation; A. B. W., $5; James Howard, $5; Eld. T. M. Preble, 50 cts.

JAMES BORTHWICK, Scotland, is informed his letter of April 29 is received and its contents. It shall have our attention as early as possible.

MR. H. W. GRISWOLD, of Dubuque, Iowa, will receive 100 copies of "LETTERS TO A CLERGYMAN" in a few days.

Advertisements.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
(few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE,
LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS,
GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
62 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue,
OFFICE HOURS, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK.

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 CHAMBERS ST.,
NEW YORK.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested; showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

THE RESURRECTION.

[A seed, found in the hand of a mummy two thousand years old, when planted, bloomed into a beautiful flower.]

Two thousand years ago a flower
Bloomed brightly in a far-off land,
Two thousand years ago, its seed
Was placed within a dead man's hand.

Before the Saviour came to earth,
That man had lived and loved and died,
And even in that far-off time,
The flower had spread its perfume wide.

Suns rose and set, years came and went,
The dead hand kept its treasure well;
Nations were born and turned to dust,
While life was hidden in that shell.

The shrivelled hand is robbed at last,
The seed is buried in the earth;
When lo, the life long hidden there
Into a glorious flower burst forth.

Just such a plant as that which grew
From such a seed when buried low;
Just such a flower in Egypt bloomed
And died two thousand years ago!

And will not He who watched the seed
And kept the life within the shell,
When those whose loves are laid to rest,
Watch o'er their buried dust as well?

And will not He from 'neath the sod
Cause something glorious to revive?
Ayé, though they sleep two thousand years,
Yet shall his saints be made alive.

Just such a face as greets you now,
Just such a form as here you wear,
Only more glorious far, will rise
To meet the Saviour in the air.

Then will I lay me down in peace,
When called to leave this vale of tears,
For "in my flesh shall I see God," E'en though I sleep two thousand years.

Children's Department.

WASHINGTON'S REGARD FOR HIS MOTHER.

General George Washington, when quite young, was about to go to sea as a midshipman; everything was arranged, the vessel lay opposite his father's house, the little boat had come on shore to take him off, and his whole heart was bent on going. After his trunk had been carried down to the boat, he went to bid his mother farewell, and saw the tears bursting from her eyes. However, he said nothing to her; but he saw that his mother would be distressed if he went, and perhaps never be happy again. He turned round to the servant, and said, "Go tell them to fetch my trunk back. I will not go away to break my mother's heart." His mother was struck with his decision, and she said to him, "George, God has promised to bless the children that honor their parents, and I believe he will bless you."

JOHN RANDOLPH AMONG THE BOYS.

A correspondent of the Central Presbyterian furnishes some reminiscences of his school days more than fifty years ago. The celebrated John Randolph, then at the zenith of his power as a leading member of Congress, had three wards (nephews) at the school (that of Rev. Drury Lacy, Prince Edward county, Va., at which he used to be a frequent visitor. The writer says:

"It was Mr. Lacy's custom to hear his boys recite their Latin and Greek grammar lessons before breakfast, and I have known Mr. Randolph, more than once, to come from Bizare, two miles, and enter the schoolhouse by sunup. At nine o'clock the school was formally opened, when all the boys read verses about, in the Bible, until the chapter or portion was finished. Mr. Randolph seemed highly pleased with the exercise, read his verse in turn, and with Mr. Lacy, would sometimes ask questions. On one occasion, while reading one of the books of the Pentateuch, he stopped a lad with the question:

"'Tom Miller, can you tell me who was Moses' father?'

"'Jethro, sir,' was the prompt answer.

"'Why, you little dog, Jethro was his father-in-law.'

"Then putting the question to four or five others by name, not one of whom could answer, he berated them soundly for their carelessness and inattention in reading, saying:

"'When you were reading last week, William Cook read the verse containing the name of Moses' father, and have you all forgotten it already?'

"Just then a young man caught the name, and, unable to repeat the verse of the Bible, repeated a part of a line from Milton—'The potent rod of Amram's son,' etc.

"Ah,' said Mr. Randolph, 'that is the way you learn your Bible—get it out of other books—what little you know of it'—and, with an exceedingly solemn manner and tone, added: 'and so it is with us all—and a terrible proof of our deep depravity it is, that we relish and remember anything better than THE BOOK.'

"The very utterance, simple as it was, filled every one with awe, and made him feel guilty, while at the same time it imparted a reverence for the Bible which was never felt before, and which, from one mind at least, will never be effaced. Mr. Randolph was so pleased, however, with the young man who quoted from his favorite author, that in a short time—as soon perhaps as he could get it from Richmond—he presented him a beautiful copy of 'Milton's Paradise Lost,' with a suitable inscription in his own elegant handwriting.

METHOD OF THE RESURRECTION.

A few months since a distinguished clergyman of the Baptist persuasion intimated to me in conversation, that he had made a partial examination of the life question as illustrated by Mr. Dobney. He said, however, he was unable to yield full credence to the doctrine, for the reason, that he could not understand what there was of the dead in Christ to be raised on the day of resurrection. Every student of the life question who rejoices in the knowledge of its scriptural sense, will readily perceive the stumbling block of embarrassment, viz., a substitute for the soul is wanted.

Now it must be clearly seen that if we permit our understandings to be encumbered with the pre-conceived idea of an immortal soul, as currently understood, the scriptural truth can never be embraced. The inevitable tendency of the mind is to oscillate like a pendulum—describing an arc, at one termination of which is the deathless soul, and at the other, the universal resurrection. To and fro it rocks, with the sedative consolation that it is all a mystery. Truly it is a mystery! But taking it as a whole—a ship with so many broken spars and tattered sails—with barnacles of ages past clinging to it, will hardly sail in troubled waters. I find my refuge in the hope of passage with a better ark of safety. The capacity of it is great, and not unlike that of good old Noah's refuge, it will hold all worthy of salvation from the deluge of death. Can passage be obtained in such a vessel? Yes, most assuredly—and I feel very strongly impelled to inform my good Baptist brethren, especially, of the good ship in which they can embark with safety.

Before embarking, I refer to a guide-book recently published by the "Am. Bible Union," and find 1 Cor. xv. 45. I read as follows: "The first man Adam was made a living soul; the last Adam a LIFE-GIVING spirit." Now there is a forcible and striking meaning in those words. Like all other words of revelation given us, they are for intelligent realization by the mind. Then upon the supposition of an immortal soul, can it be realized by the mind, that life is given the active consciousness—in other words to that which is already living? Is immortality to be conferred on that which is already immortal? Is sugar to be sweetened, or acid sharpened? No; these things cannot be so. Rom. ii. 7. "To those who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality" is given "eternal life." If those seeking immortality are now in enjoyment of that which they seek—by parity of reasoning they also enjoy glory and honor, and heaven is robbed of the treasure reserved as a reward to the saints. However, I will let Paul be his own commentator. Following the same edition of the guide-book, verse 44—"It is sown a natural body" (or as in the Greek, soma psuchikon, a soulical body.) Assuredly that is the identical "living soul" of the succeeding verse. Now, then, how is it sown? Verse 42: "It is sown in corruption"—43. "It is sown in dishonor. It is sown in weakness." The quality of the seed is furthermore noted. Verse 47. "The first man was of the earth, earthy.' Read again, as a parallelism, verse 45, and learn who was the first man, and into what he was made; viz, a living soul. Now Moses informs us of the process by which he was made such. "The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives, and man became a living soul." Surely, we would not call the process of making as the object made. Yet we are taught that very thing in current theology.

There lies the inactive or inanimate body of Adam, as revealed to us in the order of creation. He was made of the dust of the earth—he was a lifeless soul. Then he becomes active or animate by the agency of the "breath of lives," and is (not has) a living soul." Take away "the breath of lives" and he is reduced to the same condition as before—he is (not, has lost) a dead soul. His breath goes to the great receptacle of "the breath of lives" of all animated existence. It has no element of life in itself as a separate existence, but simply forms chemical relations with the blood, when subjected to certain fundamental conditions.

At this stage the question very naturally arises, in the language of Paul, "How do the dead rise?" Let the answer decide, for he was authorized to declare the method of resurrection. Verse 35: "And with what kind of body do they come?" Verse 36. "That which thou sowest is not quickened (life given it) except it die." Verse 37. "Not the body that shall be sowest thou, but bare grain, perchance of wheat, or of some other grain. Verse 38. "But God gives it a body as it pleased him, and to each of [the seeds its own body." 1 Cor. vi. 14, 15. "And God both raised the Lord, and will also raise up us by his power." "Know ye not that your bodies are members of Christ?" 2 Tim. ii. 11 "For if we died with him, we shall also live with him." What death was that? Rom. viii. 10. "And if Christ is in you, the body indeed is dead because of sin." The power of sin in the Adamic life is extinguished, a new birth transpires—a new principle of life is given—and that life is hid with Christ in God.

Most clearly is it to be concluded, that the man Adam was the living soul—that is the natural body—that is the flesh and blood which cannot inherit the kingdom of God—that is corruption which does not inherit incorruption, that is sown in weakness, dishonor and corruption—that is the bare grain—that si not the body that shall be, and is not quickened except it die. The blood is the life of Adam, who is the living soul, and of all his generations, as well as—by revelation—of all the animal order of creation. Arrest the movement or circulation of that blood, and there is naught left than the dead soul. Now that legitimate conclusion strikes some minds with horror. And why? They lose the soul they wished to save. That Juggernaut is overturned, but they must not be alarmed. I assure them it is not sacrilege. The same expression occurs ten times in the scriptures. It is the self same soul that eats, drinks, slaughters its fellow souls and fulfils sundry other functions of life. Such a soul Christ in his mission on earth sought not to save, if I read the scriptures aright. But I will spare my friends the trouble of searching King James's version to find the passages. There is only a trifling difficulty. Some few things found in the Hebrew original of the scriptures of truth by a remarkable oversight happen not to be in the English translation.

Now, then, the field is cultivated, the grain sown, and the body of that seed must become corrupt. What follows? Paul says, "It rises in incorruption; it rises in glory; it rises in power; it rises a spiritual body." Surely, to make the analogy good of the seed, there must be a principle of life in the natural body that is sown. Paul declares that, also, and he was well assured in doing so, for he had the promise from his Master, Rom. viii. 11—"If the Spirit of him who raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he who raised up Christ from the dead will also quicken (give life to) your mortal bodies, because of his Spirit that dwells in you." Verse 10. "The Spirit is life because of righteousness." Unto Abraham faith was accounted for righteousness. Verse 2. "The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus sets free from the law of sin and death.

Now, then, what "mortal body?" The same living soul—the first man Adam—who was of the earth, earthy, who returned to the dust of which he was made an inactive soul, and having received the breath of lives (Hebrew, Nishmath hayyim) which breath, likewise, as the scriptures tell us, all animals received, he resulted in becoming a living soul. Then, when the body is dead because of sin (observe well, that Paul died daily) Christ became the principle of life in the natural body, correspondent to the same principle of life in the seed of grain.

Rom. viii. 13, 14—"If by the Spirit ye mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Verse 23. "We have the first fruits of the Spirit.... waiting for adoption, the redemption of our body." We have the first fruits in this ephemeral life, and "with patient endurance," wait for the full fruition.

But some grain is diseased or broken and has lost its principle of life. Just so with the natural body, so clearly recognized in scripture as the whole man, if it dies not because of sin. Verse 9. "If any man has not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Verse 6. "For to be carnally minded is death." Chap. vi. 23. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life," &c. If the Spirit is life because of rightousness, then eternal life is the wages of righteousness—but is a gift to us, because his Son is a gift [John iii. 16] and the acceptance of him in our hearts is the bread of life proffered to us.

Evermore, Lord, give us this bread.

L. T.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

THE NATURAL AND SPIRITUAL BODIES.

BY A. G. HUDSON.

"There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body."—PAUL.

As Paul says that which is natural is first, we will first consider it, and in our examination of it we will inquire what is meant by the expression "natural body," what is its origin? of what is it composed? what power has it? and what is its destiny? First; by the expression natural body, we mean the man, the living soul: see 1 Cor. xv. 45. Second, What is the origin of this man—of this living soul? I answer first, he is not an outgrowth of certain laws in nature. Principles have in themselves no power of production: all the principles of mechanics could never produce a single machine; this can only be accomplished by the living agent, applying and combining these principles. We shall look in vain for a better answer to this interrogatory than is given in Gen. ii. 7. "The LORD God formed man." Third, of what is he formed, or composed? The answer comes to us, turn where we will, "Of the dust." Speculate as you may of man's durability, of his wonderful powers, of his capacity for good or for evil; explain Gen. i. 27 as you will; tell us about the rich man and Lazarus, the thief on the cross, or about the spirit's return to God at death; yea, and go farther and take in the whole phenomena of spiritualism, and the answer is still, because no other can be given, God formed man of the dust.

Fourth, What powers has he, and whence are these powers derived? We are now getting into the inner temple, near the home, I suppose, of the imaginary human soul. Let us tread carefully these courts, and perhaps we may become acquainted with this etherial guest.

We do not propose to enumerate all man's power, or to tell whence all come; but we do propose to show that it is more in harmony with the Bible and with sound reason to find the birth of these powers directly or indirectly in the organism that God gave us than it is to find it in something (or rather, nothing) that we know nothing about.

Just at this point I wish to impress this, that we must distinguish between man and his powers; also between the capacity to acquire and the acquirements; and further, more frequently than otherwise, the very existence of the capacity to acquire is contingent and has its birth in prior attainments. The first manifestation, to be noticed, after the formation of the living soul, is life. The most that can be said of this is, it is a condition of organized matter; not an essential condition of organism; but an essential condition for the manifestations of higher powers. All organisms that have life so far as we know, live by breathing. Life, then, is no part of the organisms that is imparted to it or taken from it; but is the condition of it, produced by the breath. The breath of life, that was placed in man's nostrils, affected his condition; changed it from a lifeless to a living one. The wise man says, that man and beasts have the same breath. Eccl. iii. 17. David says, Man's breath goeth forth; he returneth to his earth. Here again we find evidence of the truthfulness of the Bible; for nature joins her voice with inspiration and says, that everything in the animal and vegitable kingdoms; yea, all have one breath. We are sometimes sneeringly asked, if such wonderful results follow the placing of common air into man's nostrils, Why not apply a pair of bellows to the nostrils of a dead man and make him live? As certain chracters are to be answered according to their folly: in reply, let me say, Take a healthy vegitable deprive it of air; witness its death; and then with the assistance of your bellows restore it to life. When you have accomplished that we will try the experiment on man. I presume none will pretend that because an organism has life, it has immortality. As organization must precede life, so life must precede all other manifestations. A step in advance leads us to involuntary motion, which is undoubtedly one of the first manifestations of animal life, and yet I will venture the suggestion that it is one of the first instructors of the living soul: and I will further suggest, may not it be the progenitor of will? for unless I mistake, there can be no will where there is no knowledge. If any think me wrong, let them try to will that of which they have no knowledge. But having learned by involuntary motion the passion of power to move, and a will to move naturally follows. This introduces us to voluntary and locomotion. We have here a capacity for higher attainments; every principle underlying the different sciences is unchangeable and eternal. From this great fountain of intelligence the living soul is invited to drink. The first acquisition of these great truths must necessarily be slow; for we must come into the possession of that which is absolutely new to the race by accident, having no power to convince of that of which we know nothing; but as the living soul progresses in the acquisition of knowledge, judgment, and the power to reason have their birth; for the possession of facts must precede the power to judge of that connected with those facts. I know of but two systems of reasoning: from cause to effect, and from analogy. Can one reason from cause to effect until he has learned something of that cause and effect, or of like causes and effects? Can he reason from analogy until he learns something of that that is analagous? Thus the individual progresses at every step; a capacity for something higher is obtained: he advances until we behold him an intellectual giant, a living cyclopedia; his judgment is sought, his opinions are respected; and yet in all this we find nothing but the unity of man. And here I wish to remark, that when we wish to understand that a healthy and well developed organization lies at the base of all that can follow, we shall then be better prepared to devote proper attention to the fundamental part of our being; and further, we shall better understand the true system of imparting instruction to our children. God forms the living soul: we admire the work of his hands because of the wonderful results that may follow. It is not responsible for its own existence, but becomes responsible for its action. It has an adaptation for the end for which it was created. So had everything else; so far and no farther is it good. To what it might have attained had it been obedient, we may conjecture, but not affirm. We are to deal with it as we find it: with facts, and not with fancy. Our judgment, and not our sympathies, or feelings should be our guide. This rule is considered sound, and governs us in everything but theology; where we generally reverse it.

We now inquire, What is its destiny? The same teachers that tell us it is formed of dust, as plainly tell us to dust it shall return. If any think this is not taught in the Bible, let them send language to the HERALD that would express the fact, suppose it were true. In nature, from the lowest vegetable to man, there is but one voice, "to dust shalt thou return." But is there no hope for the natural body, or living soul in the future? I answer, None. Is there no threatening? I answer, None. But what God pronounced, "To dust shalt thou return." "Thou sawest not the body that shall be," was written in nature's laws long before it was penned by the apostle.

[To be Concluded.]

CHEERFUL WOMEN.

Oh, if "gloomy" women did but know what comfort there is in a cheerful spirit! How the heart leaps to meet a sunshiny face, a merry tongue, an even temper, and a heart which, either naturally, or what is better, from conscientious principle, has learned to take all things on the bright side, believing that the Giver of life being all perfect love, the best offering we can make to him is to enjoy to the full what he sends of good, and what he allows of evil; like a child who, when once it believes in its father, believes in all his doings with it, whether he understands them or not.

Among the secondary influences which can be employed, either by or upon a naturally anxious or morbid temperament, there is none so ready to hand, or so wholesome, as that so often referred to—constant employment. A very large number of women, particularly young women, are by nature constituted so exceedingly restless of mind, or with such a strong physical tendency to depression, that they can by no possibility keep themselves in a state of even tolerable cheerfulness, except by becoming continually occupied.—Miss Muloch.

THE JEWS OF JERUSALEM.

The following appears in the Worcester Spy from a traveller in Palestine, from Jerusalem, March 2, 1867.

"There are about 25,000 people in Jerusalem, 9000 of whom are Jews. All except about 2000 of them, I am told, are very poor. I said they do not go into the inclosure where their temple stood, but they do go every Friday to a portion of the old wall that yet remains on the west side, supposed to be a part of the same that Solomon built. And here is witessed a scene on Friday of each week that I think would touch the hardest heart. I went, in company with several others, to see for myself. It is called 'the wailing place of the Jews.' There we saw them of both sexes, all ages, in many kinds of dress, from satin to tatters and rags (evidently many of them were pilgrims from distant lands and of various languages), many of them having in their hands the Old Testament scriptures, or prayer books. Some were seated on flagging, some kneeling, others grasping, as it were, those old stones in their arms, while others were beating their breasts, all reading or praying in a sing-song tone, most of them sobbing, with tears streaming down their cheeks like rain; and all this 'because of the desolations of Zion.' I was told that their lamentations were after this manner: 'O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance. Thy holy temple have they defiled. We are become a reproach to our neighbors; a scorn and a derision to them that are round about us. How long, Lord? Wilt thou be angry forever?' etc., etc. We were there at about 4 o'clock P. M., and saw as many as two hundred thus engaged. This is kept up from 9 A. M. to 5 or 6 P. M."

A NEW SECT IN ASIA.

"THE HINDUS."—A Sect of Reformers.—There is a reform association in Calcutta, India, bearing the above name. They are most active proselytizers, and have sent missionaries of their own to the other two capitals of India to preach the reformation they have in hand. The following is the covenant which is subscribed by every Hindu who joins the movement:

"1. I shall worship through love of Him, and the performance of the work He loveth, the Supreme Being, the Creator, the Preserver, the Destroyer, the Giver of Salvation, the Omniscient, the Omnipotent, the Blissful, the Good, the Formless, the only one without a second, and none of the created objects, subject to the following conditions:

"2. I shall labor to compose and gradually bring into practice a ritual agreeable to the spirit of pure Theism, and free from the superstitions and absurdities [mark, these are not my words, they are the words of the Hindus themselves] which at present characterize Hindu ceremonies.

3. "In the meantime I shall observe the ceremonies now in use, but only in cases where ceremonies are indispensable, as in marriages or funerals, or where their omission will do more violence to the feelings of the Hindu community than is consistent with the proper interests of the Veda Somaj, as in Sradhas. And I shall go through such ceremonies where they are not conformable to pure Theism, as mere matters of routine, destitute of all religious significance, as lifeless remains of a superstition which has passed away.

"4. This sacrifice, and this only, shall I make to existing prejudices. But I shall never endeavor to deceive any one as to my religious opinions, and never stoop to equivocation or hypocrisy in order to avoid unpopularity. [By the way, it would be well if some of our teachers of new things would conform to this rule.]

"5. I shall discard all sectarian views and animosities, and never offer any encouragement to them.

"6. I shall, as a first step, gradually give up all distinctions, and amalgamate the different branches of the same caste.

"7. Rigidly as I shall adhere to all these rules, I shall be perfectly telerant to the views of strangers, and never intentionally give offence to their feelings.

"8. I shall never violate the duties and virtues of humanity, justice, veracity, temperance, and chastity.

"9. I shall never hold or attend or pay for nautches [that is, native dances] or otherwise hold out encouragemext for prostitution.

"10. I shall encourage and promote to the best of my power, the re-marriage of widows, and discourage early marriages.

"11. I shall never be guilty of bigamy or polygamy.

"12. I shall grant my aid toward the issue, in the vernacular, of elementary prayer books and religious tracts, and also of a monthy journal, whose chief object shall be to improve the social and moral condition of the community.

"13. I shall advance the cause of general and female education and enlightenment, and particularly in my own family circle.

"14. I shall study the Sanscrit language and its literature (especially theological,) and promote the cultivation of it by means not calculated to promote superstitions.

"To-day being the —— day of the month of —— of the Kalyabda ——, I hereby embrace the faith of the Veda Somaj, and in witness thereof I set my hand to this."

CANDOR.

There is nothing sheds so fine a light upon the human mind as candor. It was called whiteness by the ancients to denote its purity; and it has always won the esteem due to the most admirable virtues. The man whose opinione make the deepest impression upon his fellow man, whose influence is most lasting and efficient, whose friendship is instinctively sought where all others have proved faithless, is not the man of brilliant parts, or flattering tongue, or splendid genius, but he whose lucid candor and ingenuous truth transmit the heart's real feelings pure and without refraction. There are other traits that have a higher place in the world's code of honor, but none wear better or gather less tarnish by use, or claim deeper homage in that silent reverence which mind pays to virtue.

A HINT TO TOUCHY PEOPLE.—"I learned a good lesson when I was a little girl," says a lady. "One frosty morning I was looking out of the window into my father's farm-yard, where stood many cows, oxen, and horses, waiting to drink. The cattle all stood very still and meek, till one of the cows in attempting to turn round, happened to hit her next neighbor, whereupon the neighbor kicked and hit another. In five minutes the whole herd were kicking each other with great fury. My mother laughed, and said:

"See what comes of kicking when you are hit."

"Just so, I have seen one cross word set a whole family by the ears, on a frosty morning. Afterwards, if my brothers or myself were a little irritable, she would say:

"Take care, my children; remember how the fight in the barn-yard began. Never return a kick for a hit, and you will save yourselves a great deal of trouble."

LOUIS NAPOLEON.—A private letter from a distinguished son of Massachusetts, now in London, alludes to Napoleon's fading influence and late mistakes in European affairs, and says he has not been the same man since he lost his chief counsellor Morney, and his Private Secretary Mocquard, the latter a man of undoubted ability, who made himself very serviceable to his imperial master.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Christ alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy or their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less rouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all ese matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 173. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 31.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

UNBELIEF A DESTROYING SIN.

[The following discourse was preached by the now EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE, April 21, 1861, just as the late war broke out, and was stenographically reported by Joseph McFarlin, Philadelphia. It is now given, in full, for the first time to the public.]

TEXT.—"Take heed brethren lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God."—Heb. iii. 12.

It may be supposed, by some, that one believing as I do, in the personal reign of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that his personal second advent is at no very distant period, would be very likely to dwell upon that subject, especially, in view of the stirring scenes and momentous events now occurring in this nation; for it has become a matter of frequency with some of those who look for the speedy coming of the Lord, to catch at every passing circumstance in order to create an excitement, and thus prepare the minds of the people for that event. But the proper course to be pursued, is, I think, a directly opposite one. We should be calm, patient, and watchful, so that whenever the hour of His coming may arrive, we shall be ready for it.

From the earliest period of its history, down to the present time of the world, the great contest has been between faith and unbelief. Unbelief is a lack of confidence in God's wisdom, power, love, or truth; either in relation to his promises or threatenings; while faith is in every respect directly the reverse of unbelief. The sin of unbelief has, from the beginning been a most destructive one, inasmuch as it leads us to withdraw our confidence from God and to trust in our own devices and inventions, rather than trust that he will direct our ways; and, while accomplishing his own designs, promote our welfare and fulfil his promises. The apostle has described faith to be "The substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen;" which is, in other words, a firm, unshaken, and unwavering confidence in God's ability to direct and order all things according to his wisdom and love. We may be beset with trials, troubles and perplexities, and things may seem dark and strange to us, but the eye of faith sees love behind them all, and faith exclaims, "I cannot tell now what it means, but I shall learn by and by." God will make all things plain to those who trust in him, and though all the powers on earth should be combined to resist his will, his ends will be accomplished and all his purposes fulfilled. They imagine a vain thing who attempt to thwart God's plans; they may be successful for a time, but their very success may become the means of their destruction. Unbelief is a sin, the root from which all other sins have sprung that have ever been committed on earth; and the apostle in this same epistle has well said, "The just shall live by faith;" no matter what their troubles, trials or difficulties may be, by faith they shall live, after all.

Bible history furnishes us with numerous examples of the destructive effects of the sin of unbelief. It ruined our first parents. God said they should not eat of a certain tree, else they should surely die; but the Tempter replied, that they would not surely die. Then occurred the struggle between faith and unbelief. God said thus and thus. Will you believe him, and rely on his wisdom, power and love? If so, all will be well with you, for God is able to sustain the creature he has made and cause all things to work to its highest advantage. Do not ask, Why did he place me in this position? Why did he prohibit the eating of that tree? for such questions are the evidence of unbelief; but rather ask, Have I confidence in him? and can I rest in the assurance that as he has placed me in this situation, he can accomplish all the good that he designs? But here the tempter insinuates and suggests a different course of action, saying, "It will cause you no harm merely to partake of the fruit of this one tree; then why refrain, when you have access to all the other trees? Such you perceive, was the exercise of unbelief. And did our first parents realize that God was true to his word? Yes: they brought mortality, corruption, and death upon themselves; entailed it upon their posterity, and filled the world with misery, sorrow, and pain.

Again: the Bible relates that at a period anterior to the flood, when millions covered the face of the earth, a state of general unbelief prevailed, and God's counsel was everywhere rejected, with only a single exception—Noah and his household. And how did it happen that only Noah and his family escaped the tide of unbelief which swept over the world? We are told in Heb. xi. 7. "By faith, Noah, being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world and became an heir of the righteousness which is by faith." Faith is always built upon testimony, and God is the witness. He told Noah that the flood was coming, and Noah believed him; yet I suppose that even in his day, he was scorned as a poor old fool for building the great ark upon the dry land. But you have seen what faith did for Noah, and what unbelief did for all the rest of the world: he rode safely in an ark upon the surface of that flood which overwhelmed the rest of mankind.

We find in the history of God's dealings with those who afterward became his peculiar people, that unbelief caused the overthrow of the mighty kingdom of Egypt, as well as the destruction of Pharaoh and all his hosts. When God sent Moses to Pharaoh to demand that he should let the children of Israel go into the wilderness to hold a feast unto their God, Pharaoh replied in the following terms:

"Who is the LORD, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the LORD, neither will I let Israel go!" He said, in other words, "I know nothing about your Gods; I have my own. Who is your God that he should thus command me? I will not recognize him!"

Pharaoh had his own gods: and few there be who have not also their peculiar gods. The blackest atheist on earth can no more exist without a God of some sort than the best christian without his own true God. Pharaoh refused to recognize the authority of the God of Israel, and Moses, therefore, according to divine direction, proceeded to prove by miraculous evidence—by a manifestation of his power, the superiority of the God of Israel to all the gods of Egypt. So when the plagues descended in terrible succession upon the heads of Pharaoh and his people, they relented and permitted the children of Israel to depart.

We find, in Exodus xii., that the Lord told Moses he intended to pass through Egypt, on a certain night, and slay all the first-born of the Egyptians, from Pharaoh on the throne to the handmaiden at the mill; and he directed Moses to kill a lamb and sprinkle the blood on the doorposts of the houses in which the Passover Lamb was to be eaten. Exodus xii. 12

"For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment: I am the LORD. And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are; and when I see the blood, I will pass over you and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you when I smite the land of Egypt.

Here, it will be seen, an opportunity was afforded that people of witnessing the happy result of faith, and the disastrous effects of unbelief: for, while trusting in the LORD, they beheld at once their own salvation and the terrible affliction of their enemies.

No one has the right to say that he possesses faith unless it be accompanied by works; but he should ask God what is required of him, and when he is informed he should set about doing it. The children of Israel went away and did as the LORD had commanded them; and so, also, did Moses and Aaron; and the LORD told them, moreover, to remain in their houses on that night, or else they too would be visited with the plague.

In faith, they sprinkled the door-posts of their houses, and performed all the service that was required of them, and perhaps in anxiety awaited the passage of the destroying angel. He passes over the city during the night, and the light of the morning discloses that while the first born of every Egyptian family is dead the families of Israel are alive and safe.

And where is our safety to be found but in Christ? Take refuge in him whose blood is to us the blood of sprinkling, who is our passover, if we place our trust in him; who is able to save us from all that befalls the world; to deliver us from the shock of contending armies and the calamities of war. If we are resting in God, and in his promises; if we are sheltered in the ark of his love, and sprinkled with the blood of Jesus, we are safe, no matter what may happen in the world around us.

The Egyptians had no sooner become aware of their loss than they urgently implored Pharaoh to let the people go, "or else," said they, "we be all dead men." He complied with their demand—permitted them to depart, but shortly afterward started in pursuit. The children of Israel had not proceeded far before they were completely surrounded with difficulties. Hemmed in between mountains, with Pharaoh and his dreaded host in their rear, and the Red Sea in front, they could perceive no possible way of escape; and moved by the remembrance of their late miserable servitude, "they cried unto the LORD."

Moses, then, in obedience to the command of God, stretched forth the arm of faith over the Red Sea, and the waters parted from the right hand and from the left, and, as the apostle has said, "By faith they passed through the Red Sea as upon dry land." Did Pharaoh follow them in equal safety? No, he undertook the passage, thinking, probably, that wherever they went he could surely go; and he sent his armed men in the chariots, and his famous warriors, who all marched boldly into the sea. But where the children of Israel passed over safely, in faith, the Egyptians, assaying to do the same, in unbelief, were drowned; and Moses said to his people, "The Egyptians which you have seen this day, you shall see no more forever."

The scriptures present us with another example of the effects of unbelief in the history of the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, who though superior in numbers, were unable to withstand the children of Israel, and were at last destroyed. The people of the land had become corrupt, enervated, demoralized, and had filled up the measure of their iniquity in consequence of unbelief; but among them was one, who with her family escaped the general massacre of the inhabitants of the city of Jericho: "By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace." And why did she and her family escape the destruction that fell upon all the rest? Because she believed.

"And she said unto the men (the spies at her house) I know that the LORD hath given you the land, and that your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land faint because of you. For we have heard how the LORD dried up the waters of the Red Sea for you, when you came out of Egypt, and what ye did to the two kings of the Amorites, that were on the other side of Jordan; Sihon and Og, whom ye utterly destroyed," &c.

After Rahab had prayed the spies that she might be spared during the overthrow of the city, "The men answered her, Our life for yours, if ye utter not this our business; and it shall be when the LORD hath given us the land that we will deal kindly and truly with thee.... Behold when we come into the land thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by: and thou shalt bring thy father and thy mother and thy brethren and all thy father's household home unto thee: and it shall be that whosoever shall go out of the doors of thy house into the street, his blood shall be upon his head, and we shall be guiltless; and whosoever shall be with thee in the house, his blood shall be on our head, if any hand be upon him."

Rahab, confiding in the word of the spies, remained shut up in her house with her family, and when the walls and the gates of the city were encompassed by the armies of Joshua, he directed the men to bring out Rahab and her family in fulfilment of the promise made by the spies, saying, "Go into the harlot's house and bring out thence the woman and all that she hath, as ye sware unto her." And after they had brought her out and all her kindred, "They burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein; only the silver and gold, and vessels of brass and of iron they put in the treasury of the house of the LORD."

These examples will serve to convey to you an idea of the true difference between faith and unbelief; for, as I have already said, the great contest on earth has ever been between those two principles: a reliance on God, or a reliance upon our own resources and ingenuity, without confidence in God. In the case just cited, as you must have observed, where faith was exercised there was preservation; and where it was not, although they were stricken with fear, they were overthrown.

I might go on and present many more examples: I might tell you that God had sworn to bring the children of Israel into the land of Canaan, and how, after they had left Egypt, in about two years they came upon the borders of the promised land. The spies, whom they had previously sent to examine the country, returned: two of them with a glowing account of its fertility and beauty, as well as substantial proofs of its fruitfulness; but the other ten returned with an evil report, saying that its cities were great, walled, and impregnable; peopled with a race of giants, and they would never be able to take them, although the two spies previously mentioned, Caleb and Joshua, had said the conquest could be made. The majority of the spies having thus affirmed the impossibility of taking Canaan, the whole body of the children of Israel commenced murmuring against God, notwithstanding they had been eye-witnesses of all the miracles he had wrought in their favor. They had forgotten the sprinkling of the door posts, and the confusion of their enemies; had forgotten the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night; so the LORD told them that, inasmuch as they had murmured against him, and had believed him not, they should go back from whence they came, to wander in the wilderness, and die there, for the sin of unbelief. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God."

You may say, you have exercised faith. Then hold on to that faith; let it neither waver nor depart from you; otherwise you will reap the bitter consequences.

Pursuing the history of Israel still farther, we find after they were settled in the land of Canaan they turned away from God and gave themselves up to idolatry, and consequently experienced all the horrors of war, desolation, and other calamities; their enemies poured in upon them, and ultimately the Ten Tribes were carried into captivity.

Going on to the period of Christ's advent among men, we find that this same spirit of unbelief almost universally prevailed. It paralyzed the hand of Jesus, and he said he could do no mighty works in some places in consequence. They called him the carpenter's son, and refused to give him audience; they cast him out and derided him; and trusting in their own prudence and sagacity, involved their whole nation in ruin at last. Their city was overthrown, trodden down, and even its very site ploughed up; and the Jews to this day remain a striking monument before the world of the effects of the sin of unbelief.

And here I may as well ask you, What has brought this nation into the position which it occupies to-day? Unbelief has done it. Our duty has ever been evident to us all; but we have refused to do what God required of us; and for the sake of a temporary advantage we have, from time to time, compromised with evil doers. I suppose there is not a person in the whole nation who does not readily perceive that slavery lies at the bottom of all our national troubles. What course has our government been pursuing during these many years in relation to the subject of slavery, but a course of unbelief and sin? The founders of our government said to all the world, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created free and equal," &c; and upon that great principle they fought for their liberties. But, alas; they had among them a class of people who were preparing to rivet the chains of slavery. Our revolutionary forefathers doubtless looked to the best interests of their country; but I would ask, without designing to impugn their motives, whether they did not give way to unbelief when they allowed the institution of slavery to be incorporated within the limits of the new confederacy? Was it not a compromise with iniquity? Is [illegible] appear written in the constitution?

Washington, Jefferson, and others, thought that with such a government as ours, it would not be a difficult thing to root out and abolish the curse of slavery, and they looked proudly forward to such a time, when their country would become unquestionably the greatest nation upon earth. But, through unbelief, slavery sprung up and flourished, and obtained a strong hold; and ever since, we have compromised and compromised with that form of evil down to the present time, until that which was formerly only a serpent has become a monster dragon. Oh! if we had but adopted and carried out that great principle embodied in the gospel of our Lord, "Do unto others as ye would have them do unto you," we might not have been what we are to-day. Thomas Jefferson said that he trembled for his country when he remembered that God was just; and when thinking of the curse of slavery, he saw the dark clouds looming up, and the tempest rising, and that unless God would infuse a spirit of kindness and forbearance into the minds of the slaveholders a terrible storm would burst its accumulated wrath upon them. It seems to me that the day of this nation's judgment has come, and it cannot be averted. We are to be judged for the sin of unbelief; and I believe that God deals with nations in their national capacity. He did thus with Jerusalem, and with Egypt, and with other nations. And are we less guilty in his sight than were those nations? We boast that we have reached the very climax of liberty and equality, and that our republic is a model for the whole world. The nations of the East have been fighting, and have deluged the plains with blood in the effort to throw off the yoke of oppression; and here, at last, in our own country, we are about to behold the bloodshed and confusion of a civil war: for the oppressors of liberty have arisen in arms, and it seems as if God had given them over to the spirit of their own madness, in order that they may become the more miserable. They proclaim that they are christians, and that the God of battles is fighting for them. Let me repeat, that I conceive it to be nothing more than the impending judgment of God over this nation for the sin of holding men in cruel bondage and compromising with the system.

This may be the beginning of that great day of God Almighty which is to wind up this dispensation. I will not affirm positively that it is; but it becomes those who put their trust in Jesus, and who are looking for that coming kingdom, to take heed. We shall have need to exhort one another, and hold fast to our faith in God; though the tempest howl around us, and calamity succeeds calamity, and the thunders rattle loud, God is above all and will direct the storm. Our safety, therefore, consists in looking unto him; in looking for shelter in the protection of his wings; committing ourselves and our families into his hands, and waiting to see what the end shall be.

Some one may ask, "Pray, sir, are you a patriot?" Yes, I am a patriot! But my first choice of a ruler is in favor of Christ, the 'KING of kings and LORD of lords;" yet as we are living on the earth, and as we are now subject to earthly government, we are opposed to that form of it which abridges the liberty of speech by gagging us, or threatens to hang us for expressing our views. I am willing to have it known that I am on the side of the government of the United States, and will remain there until Jesus comes to take the government upon his shoulders. Until that time shall have arrived, I must stand up for our present form of government; and I pray God that he will give our rulers heavenly wisdom; and in acting thus, I trust I do not give place to unbelief. No, but faith in God. But as we have connived at this sin, we must expect to suffer; and it may prove a blessing to us in the end. Let us, then, in these days of peril and trial, endeavor to keep our minds calm, though we may not help taking sides with the constituted authorities of our land. We believe that God rules the storm, and that however tempestuous it may appear to us, His name will be glorified in the result.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Thus we spake six years ago; nor have we any of it to retract to-day. God has judged and punished this nation for its unbelief, and the sins resulting from it. Let the nation beware of glorying in its own power, or repeating its past sins in any form, "lest a worse thing come upon" it. God is not to be trifled with. Till the nation returns fully to the principles of the "Declaration of Independence," which "Declaration" was made with an appeal to God, and on which He gave us our nationality: we say, until the people carry out fully and perfectly those principles, God will have a controversy with the nation, and his rod will be held over us; and if it fall on us again, "Wo to the nation." The past judgment will disappear in the severity of the coming one. Away with all unbelief; and let us remember, "Righteousness exalteth a nation," while "sin is a reproach to any people." In all our affairs, temporal and spiritual let us keep in mind, faith in God and obedience to him, is our only security against evil.

OUR LORD AT CAPERNAUM.

[Continued from No. 170.]

But if the forenoon of this long and busy day at Capernaum was rendered remarkable by the change of attitude which Jesus assumed towards the Pharisees, its afternoon was rendered equally if not still more remarkable by the change of the method in addressing the multitude. More than half of the term allotted to his ministry in Galilee had now expired. The temper of the community towards Him had been fairly tried. The result was sufficiently manifest. Here beside Him was a small band of followers—ignorant yet willing to be taught; weak in faith but strong in personal attachment. There against him was a powerful and numerous band; socially, politically, religiously the leaders of the people. Between the two lay the bulk of the common people—greatly excited by his miracles, listening with wonder and half approval to his words, siding with rather than against him in his conflict with the Pharisees. With them, if we looked only at external indications, we should say that he was generally and highly popular. But it was popularity of a kind that Jesus had no wish to gain, as he had no purpose to which to turn it. Behind all the show of outward attachment he saw that there was but little discernment of his true character, but little disposition to receive and honor him as the Redeemer of mankind, but little capacity to understand the more secret things of that spiritual kingdom which it was his office to establish and extend. And as he had altered his conduct towards his secret enemies by dragging out their opposition to the light and openly denouncing the authors, so now he alters his conduct towards his professed friends, by cloaking his higher instructions to them in a new and peculiar garb. As he left the house in which the hasty mid-day meal was taken, the crowd gathered round him—increased in numbers, a keener edge put upon its curiosity by what had just occurred. Followed by this crowd he goes down to the lake side; finds the press of the people round about him oppressive and inconvenient, sees a boat lying in close to the beach, enters it, sits down, and separated from them by a little strip of water addresses the multitude that lines the shore. He speaks about a sower, and how it fared with the seed he sowed: "some of it fell by the wayside, and some upon stony places, and some among thorns, and some upon good soil." He spoke about a field in which good seed was sown by day but tares by night, and how both grew up, and some would have them separated; but the householder to whom the field belonged would not hear of it, but would have both grow up together till the harvest. He speaks of a man casting seed into his ground, and finding that by night and by day, whether he slept or woke, was watching and tending, or doing nothing about it, that seed secretly grew up, he knew not how: he speaks of the least of seeds growing up into the tallest of herbs; of the leaven working in the three measures of meal till the whole was leavened; and he tells his hearers that the kingdom of heaven was like unto each of the things that he describes. His hearers are all greatly interested, for it is about plain, familiar things of the house, the garden, the field, he speaks; and yet a strange expression of mingled surprise and perplexity sits upon every countenance. The disciples within the boat share these sentiments equally with the people upon the shore. Nothing seems easier than to understand the little stories of common life; but why has Jesus told them? What from his lips can they mean? What has the kingdom of heaven to do with them? Teaching by parables was a common way of instruction with the Jewish rabbis. But it had not been in the first instance adopted by Christ; they had not as yet heard a single parable from his lips; and now he uses nothing else—parable follows parable, as if that was the only instrument of the teacher Jesus cared to use. And besides the entire novelty of his employment of the parabolic method, there is that haze, that thick obscurity, which covers the real meaning of the parables that he utters. The disciples take the first opportunity that offers itself of speaking to him privately, and putting to him the question: "Why speakest thou to them in parables?" a question which they would have never put but for the circumstance that they had never known him employ this kind of discourse before. Now mark the answer to the question. "Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. For whosoever hath to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath. Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive: [illegible] their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them."

It was partly then for the purpose of concealment that, upon this occasion, these parables were spoken. Those before whose eyes this veil was drawn had already been tried with a different kind of speech. Most important truths had been announced to them in the simplest and plainest language, but they had shut their minds and hearts against him. And now, as a righteous judgment upon them for having acted thus, these mysteries of the kingdom, which might have been presented to them in another and more transparent guise, are folded up in the concealing drapery of these parables. Speaking generally, parables are meant to make things plainer, not more obscure; and of many of our Lord's parables, such as those of the good Samaritan, the unjust judge, the Pharisee and the publican, it is true that neither by those who first heard them uttered, nor by any who have read them since, has there been the slightest doubt or uncertainty as to their meaning. But there is another and a larger class of parables of Christ to which the description does not apply, which were not understood by those to whom they were first addressed, which may not be understood still, which, instead of being homely tales illustrative of the simplest moral and religious truths or impressions, the simplest moral and religious duties, are figurative descriptions, prophetic allegories, in which the true nature of Christ's spiritual kingdom, the manner of its establishment and extension, and all its after varied fortunes are portrayed. It was to this class of parables that these just spoken by our Saviour belonged. And there was mercy as well as judgment in their employment. Behind their concealing drapery bright lights were burning, the very darkness thrown around which was intended to stimulate the eye to a keener, steadier gaze. As his disciples had dealt with the instructions that had previously come from his lips differently from those who seeing saw not, hearing would not understand, so now Jesus deals differently with them as to the parables. They appear to have been at first as much in the dark as to their meaning as was the general audience on the shore. But they were willing, even anxious to be taught. When the cloud came down, the teachings of their Master, and these dark sayings were uttered, they longed to enter into that cloud to gaze upon that light which burned within. They came seeking, and they found; knocking, and the door was opened to them. To them it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom, but to the others, uncaring for it, unprepared for it, and unworthy of it as they were, it was not given. By a private and full explanation of the two first and leading parables, those of the sower, and the tares, and the wheat, Jesus put into his disciples' hands the key to all

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 173. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 22, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 31.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

UNBELIEF A DESTROYING SIN.

[The following discourse was preached by the now EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE, April 21, 1861, just as the late war broke out, and was stenographically reported by Joseph McFarlin, Philadelphia. It is now given, in full, for the first time to the public.]

TEXT.—"Take heed brethren lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God."—Heb. iii. 12.

It may be supposed, by some, that one believing as I do, in the personal reign of our Lord Jesus Christ, and that his personal second advent is at no very distant period, would be very likely to dwell upon that subject, especially, in view of the stirring scenes and momentous events now occurring in this nation; for it has become a matter of frequency with some of those who look for the speedy coming of the Lord, to catch at every passing circumstance in order to create an excitement, and thus prepare the minds of the people for that event. But the proper course to be pursued, is, I think, a directly opposite one. We should be calm, patient, and watchful, so that whenever the hour of His coming may arrive, we shall be ready for it.

From the earliest period of its history, down to the present time of the world, the great contest has been between faith and unbelief. Unbelief is a lack of confidence in God's wisdom, power, love, or truth; either in relation to his promises or threatenings; while faith is in every respect directly the reverse of unbelief. The sin of unbelief has, from the beginning been a most destructive one, inasmuch as it leads us to withdraw our confidence from God and to trust in our own devices and inventions, rather than trust that he will direct our ways; and, while accomplishing his own designs, promote our welfare and fulfil his promises. The apostle has described faith to be "The substance of things hoped for; the evidence of things not seen;" which is, in other words, a firm, unshaken, and unwavering confidence in God's ability to direct and order all things according to his wisdom and love. We may be beset with trials, troubles and perplexities, and things may seem dark and strange to us, but the eye of faith sees love behind them all, and faith exclaims, "I cannot tell now what it means, but I shall learn by and by." God will make all things plain to those who trust in him, and though all the powers on earth should be combined to resist his will, his ends will be accomplished and all his purposes fulfilled. They imagine a vain thing who attempt to thwart God's plans; they may be successful for a time, but their very success may become the means of their destruction. Unbelief is a sin, the root from which all other sins have sprung that have ever been committed on earth; and the apostle in this same epistle has well said, "The just shall live by faith;" no matter what their troubles, trials or difficulties may be, by faith they shall live, after all.

Bible history furnishes us with numerous examples of the destructive effects of the sin of unbelief. It ruined our first parents. God said they should not eat of a certain tree, else they should surely die; but the Tempter replied, that they would not surely die. Then occurred the struggle between faith and unbelief. God said thus and thus. Will you believe him, and rely on his wisdom, power and love? If so, all will be well with you, for God is able to sustain the creature he has made and cause all things to work to its highest advantage. Do not ask, Why did he place me in this position? Why did he prohibit the eating of that tree? for such questions are the evidence of unbelief; but rather ask, Have I confidence in him? and can I rest in the assurance that as he has placed me in this situation, he can accomplish all the good that he designs? But here the tempter insinuates and suggests a different course of action, saying, "It will cause you no harm merely to partake of the fruit of this one tree; then why refrain, when you have access to all the other trees? Such you perceive, was the exercise of unbelief. And did our first parents realize that God was true to his word? Yes: they brought mortality, corruption, and death upon themselves; entailed it upon their posterity, and filled the world with misery, sorrow, and pain.

Again: the Bible relates that at a period anterior to the flood, when millions covered the face of the earth, a state of general unbelief prevailed, and God's counsel was everywhere rejected, with only a single exception—Noah and his household. And how did it happen that only Noah and his family escaped the tide of unbelief which swept over the world? We are told in Heb. xi. 7. "By faith, Noah being warned of God of things not seen as yet, moved with fear, prepared an ark to the saving of his house; by the which he condemned the world and became an heir of the righteousness which is by faith." Faith is always built upon testimony, and God is the witness. He told Noah that the flood was coming, and Noah believed him; yet I suppose that even in his day, he was scorned as a poor old fool for building the great ark upon the dry land. But you have seen what faith did for Noah, and what unbelief did for all the rest of the world: he rode safely in an ark upon the surface of that flood which overwhelmed the rest of mankind.

We find in the history of God's dealings with those who afterward became his peculiar people, that unbelief caused the overthrow of the mighty kingdom of Egypt, as well as the destruction of Pharaoh and all his hosts. When God sent Moses to Pharaoh to demand that he should let the children of Israel go into the wilderness to hold a feast unto their God, Pharaoh replied in the following terms:

"Who is the LORD, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the LORD, neither will I let Israel go!" He said, in other words, "I know nothing about your Gods; I have my own. Who is your God that he should thus command me? I will not recognize him!"

Pharaoh had his own gods: and few there be who have not also their peculiar gods. The blackest atheist on earth can no more exist without a God of some sort than the best christian without his own true God. Pharaoh refused to recognize the authority of the God of Israel, and Moses, therefore, according to divine direction, proceeded to prove by miraculous evidence—by a manifestation of his power, the superiority of the God of Israel to all the gods of Egypt. So when the plagues descended in terrible succession upon the heads of Pharaoh and his people, they relented and permitted the children of Israel to depart.

We find, in Exodus xii., that the Lord told Moses he intended to pass through Egypt, on a certain night, and slay all the first-born of the Egyptians, from Pharaoh on the throne to the handmaiden at the mill; and he directed Moses to kill a lamb and sprinkle the blood on the doorposts of the houses in which the Passover Lamb was to be eaten. Exodus xii. 12.

"For I will pass through the land of Egypt this night, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both man and beast; and against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgment: I am the LORD. And the blood shall be to you for a token upon the houses where ye are; and when I see the blood, I will pass over you and the plague shall not be upon you to destroy you when I smite the land of Egypt.

Here, it will be seen, an opportunity was afforded that people of witnessing the happy result of faith, and the disastrous effects of unbelief: for, while trusting in the LORD, they beheld at once their own salvation and the terrible affliction of their enemies.

No one has the right to say that he possesses faith unless it be accompanied by works; but he should ask God what is required of him, and when he is informed he should set about doing it. The children of Israel went away and did as the LORD had commanded them; and so, also, did Moses and Aaron; and the LORD told them, moreover, to remain in their houses on that night, or else they too would be visited with the plague.

In faith, they sprinkled the door-posts of their houses, and performed all the service that was required of them, and perhaps in anxiety awaited the passage of the destroying angel. He passes over the city during the night, and the light of the morning discloses that while the first born of every Egyptian family is dead the families of Israel are alive and safe.

And where is our safety to be found but in Christ? Take refuge in him whose blood is to us the blood of sprinkling, who is our passover, if we place our trust in him; who is able to save us from all that befalls the world; to deliver us from the shock of contending armies and the calamities of war. If we are resting in God, and in his promises; if we are sheltered in the ark of his love, and sprinkled with the blood of Jesus, we are safe, no matter what may happen in the world around us.

The Egyptians had no sooner become aware of their loss than they urgently implored Pharaoh to let the people go, "or else," said they, "we be all dead men." He complied with their demand—permitted them to depart, but shortly afterward started in pursuit. The children of Israel had not proceeded far before they were completely surrounded with difficulties. Hemmed in between mountains, with Pharaoh and his dreaded host in their rear, and the Red Sea in front, they could perceive no possible way of escape; and moved by the remembrance of their late miserable servitude, "they cried unto the LORD."

Moses, then, in obedience to the command of God, stretched forth the arm of faith over the Red Sea, and the waters parted from the right hand and from the left, and, as the apostle has said, "By faith they passed through the Red Sea as upon dry land." Did Pharaoh follow them in equal safety? No, he undertook the passage, thinking, probably, that wherever they went he could surely go; and he sent his armed men in the chariots, and his famous warriors, who all marched boldly into the sea. But where the children of Israel passed over safely, in faith, the Egyptians, assaying to do the same, in unbelief, were drowned; and Moses said to his people, "The Egyptians which you have seen this day, you shall see no more forever."

The scriptures present us with another example of the effects of unbelief in the history of the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, who though superior in numbers, were unable to withstand the children of Israel, and were at last destroyed. The people of the land had become corrupt, enervated, demoralized, and had filled up the measure of their iniquity in consequence of unbelief; but among them was one, who with her family escaped the general massacre of the inhabitants of the city of Jericho: "By faith the harlot Rahab perished not with them that believed not, when she had received the spies with peace." And why did she and her family escape the destruction that fell upon all the rest? Because she believed.

"And she said unto the men (the spies at her house) I know that the LORD hath given you the land, and that your terror is fallen upon us, and that all the inhabitants of the land faint because of you. For we have heard how the LORD dried up the waters of the Red Sea for you, when you came out of Egypt, and what ye did to the two kings of the Amorites, that were on the other side of Jordan; Sihon and Og, whom ye utterly destroyed," &c.

After Rahab had prayed the spies that she might be spared during the overthrow of the city, "The men answered her, Our life for yours, if ye utter not this our business; and it shall be when the LORD hath given us the land that we will deal kindly and truly with thee.... Behold when we come into the land thou shalt bind this line of scarlet thread in the window, which thou didst let us down by: and thou shalt bring thy father and thy mother and thy brethren and all thy father's household home unto thee: and it shall be that whosoever shall go out of the doors of thy house into the street, his blood shall be upon his head, and we shall be guiltless; and whosoever shall be with thee in the house, his blood shall be on our head, if any hand be upon him."

Rahab, confiding in the word of the spies, remained shut up in her house with her family, and when the walls and the gates of the city were encompassed by the armies of Joshua, he directed the men to bring out Rahab and her family in fulfilment of the promise made by the spies, saying, "Go into the harlot's house and bring out thence the woman and all that she hath, as ye sware unto her." And after they had brought her out and all her kindred, "They burnt the city with fire, and all that was therein; only the silver and gold, and vessels of brass and of iron they put in the treasury of the house of the LORD."

These examples will serve to convey to you an idea of the true difference between faith and unbelief; for, as I have already said, the great contest on earth has ever been between those two principles: a reliance on God, or a reliance upon our own resources and ingenuity, without confidence in God. In the case just cited, as you must have observed, where faith was exercised there was preservation; and where it was not, although they were stricken with fear, they were overthrown.

I might go on and present many more examples: I might tell you that God had sworn to bring the children of Israel into the land of Canaan, and how, after they had left Egypt, in about two years they came upon the borders of the promised land. The spies, whom they had previously sent to examine the country, returned: two of them with a glowing account of its fertility and beauty, as well as substantial proofs of its fruitfulness; but the other ten returned with an evil report, saying that its cities were great, walled, and impregnable; peopled with a race of giants, and they would never be able to take them, although the two spies previously mentioned, Caleb and Joshua, had said the conquest could be made. The majority of the spies having thus affirmed the impossibility of taking Canaan, the whole body of the children of Israel commenced murmuring against God, notwithstanding they had been eye-witnesses of all the miracles he had wrought in their favor. They had forgotten the sprinkling of the door posts, and the confusion of their enemies; had forgotten the pillar of cloud by day, and the pillar of fire by night; so the LORD told them that, inasmuch as they had murmured against him, and had believed him not, they should go back from whence they came, to wander in the wilderness, and die there, for the sin of unbelief. "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God."

You may say, you have exercised faith. Then hold on to that faith; let it neither waver nor depart from you; otherwise you will reap the bitter consequences.

Pursuing the history of Israel still farther, we find after they were settled in the land of Canaan they turned away from God and gave themselves up to idolatry, and consequently experienced all the horrors of war, desolation, and other calamities; their enemies poured in upon them, and ultimately the Ten Tribes were carried into captivity.

Going on to the period of Christ's advent among men, we find that this same spirit of unbelief almost universally prevailed. It paralyzed the hand of Jesus, and he said he could do no mighty works in some places in consequence. They called him the carpenter's son, and refused to give him audience; they cast him out and derided him; and trusting in their own prudence and sagacity, involved their whole nation in ruin at last. Their city was overthrown, trodden down, and even its very site ploughed up; and the Jews to this day remain a striking monument before the world of the effects of the sin of unbelief.

And here I may as well ask you, What has brought this nation into the position which it occupies to-day? Unbelief has done it. Our duty has ever been evident to us all; but we have refused to do what God required of us; and for the sake of a temporary advantage we have, from time to time, compromised with evil doers. I suppose there is not a person in the whole nation who does not readily perceive that slavery lies at the bottom of all our national troubles. What course has our government been pursuing during these many years in relation to the subject of slavery, but a course of unbelief and sin? The founders of our government said to all the world, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created free and equal," &c; and upon that great principle they fought for their liberties. But, alas; they had among them a class of people who were preparing to rivet the chains of slavery. Our revolutionary forefathers doubtless looked to the best interests of their country; but I would ask, without designing to impugn their motives, whether they did not give way to unbelief when they allowed the institution of slavery to be incorporated within the limits of the new confederacy? Was it not a compromise with iniquity? If not, why then does not the term "slavery" appear written in the constitution?

Washington, Jefferson, and others, thought that with such a government as ours, it would not be a difficult thing to root out and abolish the curse of slavery, and they looked proudly forward to such a time, when their country would become unquestionably the greatest nation upon earth. But, through unbelief, slavery sprung up and flourished, and obtained a strong hold; and ever since, we have compromised and compromised with that form of evil down to the present time, until that which was formerly only a serpent has become a monster dragon. Oh! if we had but adopted and carried out that great principle embodied in the gospel of our Lord, "Do unto others as ye would have them do unto you," we might not have been what we are to-day. Thomas Jefferson said that he trembled for his country when he remembered that God was just; and when thinking of the curse of slavery, he saw the dark clouds looming up, and the tempest rising, and that unless God would infuse a spirit of kindness and forbearance into the minds of the slaveholders a terrible storm would burst its accumulated wrath upon them. It seems to me that the day of this nation's judgment has come, and it cannot be averted. We are to be judged for the sin of unbelief; and I believe that God deals with nations in their national capacity. He did thus with Jerusalem, and with Egypt, and with other nations. And are we less guilty in his sight than were those nations? We boast that we have reached the very climax of liberty and equality, and that our republic is a model for the whole world. The nations of the East have been fighting, and have deluged the plains with blood in the effort to throw off the yoke of oppression; and here, at last, in our own country, we are about to behold the bloodshed and confusion of a civil war: for the oppressors of liberty have arisen in arms, and it seems as if God had given them over to the spirit of their own madness, in order that they may become the more miserable. They proclaim that they are christians, and that the God of battles is fighting for them. Let me repeat, that I conceive it to be nothing more than the impending judgment of God over this nation for the sin of holding men in cruel bondage and compromising with the system.

This may be the beginning of that great day of God Almighty which is to wind up this dispensation. I will not affirm positively that it is; but it becomes those who put their trust in Jesus, and who are looking for that coming kingdom, to take heed. We shall have need to exhort one another, and hold fast to our faith in God; though the tempest howl around us, and calamity succeeds calamity, and the thunders rattle loud, God is above all and will direct the storm. Our safety, therefore, consists in looking unto him; in looking for shelter in the protection of his wings; committing ourselves and our families into his hands, and waiting to see what the end shall be.

Some one may ask, "Pray, sir, are you a patriot?" Yes, I am a patriot! But my first choice of a ruler is in favor of Christ, the "KING of kings and LORD of lords;" yet as we are living on the earth, and as we are now subject to earthly government, we are opposed to that form of it which abridges the liberty of speech by gagging us, or threatens to hang us for expressing our views. I am willing to have it known that I am on the side of the government of the United States, and will remain there until Jesus comes to take the government upon his shoulders. Until that time shall have arrived, I must stand up for our present form of government; and I pray God that he will give our rulers heavenly wisdom; and in acting thus, I trust I do not give place to unbelief. No, but faith in God. But as we have connived at this sin, we must expect to suffer; and it may prove a blessing to us in the end. Let us, then, in these days of peril and trial, endeavor to keep our minds calm, though we may not help taking sides with the constituted authorities of our land. We believe that God rules the storm, and that however tempestuous it may appear to us, His name will be glorified in the result.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Thus we spake six years ago; nor have we any of it to retract to-day. God has judged and punished this nation for its unbelief, and the sins resulting from it. Let the nation beware of glorying in its own power, or repeating its past sins in any form, "lest a worse thing come upon" it. God is not to be trifled with. Till the nation returns fully to the principles of the "Declaration of Independence," which "Declaration" was made with an appeal to God, and on which He gave us our nationality: we say, until the people carry out fully and perfectly those principles, God will have a controversy with the nation, and his rod will be held over us; and if it fall on us again, "Wo to the nation." The past judgment will disappear in the severity of the coming one. Away with all unbelief; and let us remember, "Righteousness exalteth a nation," while "sin is a reproach to any people." In all our affairs, temporal and spiritual, let us keep in mind, faith in God and obedience to him, is our only security against evil.

OUR LORD AT CAPERNAUM.

[Continued from No. 170.]

But if the forenoon of this long and busy day at Capernaum was rendered remarkable by the change of attitude which Jesus assumed towards the Pharisees, its afternoon was rendered equally if not still more remarkable by the change of the method in addressing the multitude. More than half of the term allotted to his ministry in Galilee had now expired. The temper of the community towards Him had been fairly tried. The result was sufficiently manifest. Here beside Him was a small band of followers—ignorant yet willing to be taught; weak in faith but strong in personal attachment. There against him was a powerful and numerous band; socially, politically, religiously the leaders of the people. Between the two lay the bulk of the common people—greatly excited by his miracles, listening with wonder and half approval to his words, siding with rather than against him in his conflict with the Pharisees. With them, if we looked only at external indications, we should say that he was generally and highly popular. But it was popularity of a kind that Jesus had no wish to gain, as he had no purpose to which to turn it. Behind all the show of outward attachment he saw that there was but little discernment of his true character, but little disposition to receive and honor him as the Redeemer of mankind, but little capacity to understand the more secret things of that spiritual kingdom which it was his office to establish and extend. And as he had altered his conduct towards his secret enemies by dragging out their opposition to the light and openly denouncing the authors, so now he alters his conduct towards his professed friends, by cloaking his higher instructions to them in a new and peculiar garb. As he left the house in which the hasty mid-day meal was taken, the crowd gathered round him—increased in numbers, a keener edge put upon its curiosity by what had just occurred. Followed by this crowd he goes down to the lake side; finds the press of the people round about him oppressive and inconvenient, sees a boat lying in close to the beach, enters it, sits down, and separated from them by a little strip of water addresses the multitude that lines the shore. He speaks about a sower, and how it fared with the seed he sowed: "some of it fell by the wayside, and some upon stony places, and some among thorns, and some upon good soil." He spoke about a field in which good seed was sown by day but tares by night, and how both grew up, and some would have them separated; but the householder to whom the field belonged would not hear of it, but would have both grow up together till the harvest. He speaks of a man casting seed into his ground, and finding that by night and by day, whether he slept or woke, was watching and tending, or doing nothing about it, that seed secretly grew up, he knew not how: he speaks of the least of seeds growing up into the tallest of herbs; of the leaven working in the three measures of meal till the whole was leavened; and he tells his hearers that the kingdom of heaven was like unto each of the things that he describes. His hearers are all greatly interested, for it is about plain, familiar things of the house, the garden, the field, he speaks; and yet a strange expression of mingled surprise and perplexity sits upon every countenance. The disciples within the boat share these sentiments equally with the people upon the shore. Nothing seems easier than to understand the little stories of common life; but why has Jesus told them? What from his lips can they mean? What has the kingdom of heaven to do with them? Teaching by parables was a common way of instruction with the Jewish rabbis. But it had not been in the first instance adopted by Christ; they had not as yet heard a single parable from his lips; and now he uses nothing else—parable follows parable, as if that was the only instrument of the teacher Jesus cared to use. And besides the entire novelty of his employment of the parabolic method, there is that haze, that thick obscurity, which covers the real meaning of the parables that he utters. The disciples take the first opportunity that offers itself of speaking to him privately, and putting to him the question: "Why speakest thou to them in parables?" a question which they would have never put but for the circumstance that they had never known him employ this kind of discourse before. Now mark the answer to the question. "Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given. For whosoever hath to him shall be given, and he shall have more abundance; but whosoever hath not, from him shall be taken away even that he hath. Therefore speak I to them in parables: because they seeing see not; and hearing they hear not, neither do they understand. And in them is fulfilled the prophecy of Esaias, which saith, By hearing ye shall hear, and shall not understand; and seeing ye shall see, and shall not perceive: for this people's heart is waxed gross; and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them."

It was partly then for the purpose of concealment that, upon this occasion, these parables were spoken. Those before whose eyes this veil was drawn had already been tried with a different kind of speech. Most important truths had been announced to them in the simplest and plainest language, but they had shut their minds and hearts against him. And now, as a righteous judgment upon them for having acted thus, these mysteries of the kingdom, which might have been presented to them in another and more transparent guise, are folded up in the concealing drapery of these parables. Speaking generally, parables are meant to make things plainer, not more obscure; and of many of our Lord's parables, such as those of the good Samaritan, the unjust judge, the Pharisee and the publican, it is true that neither by those who first heard them uttered, nor by any who have read them since, has there been the slightest doubt or uncertainty as to their meaning. But there is another and a larger class of parables of Christ to which the description does not apply, which were not understood by those to whom they were first addressed, which may not be understood still, which, instead of being homely tales illustrative of the simplest moral and religious truths or impressions, the simplest moral and religious duties, are figurative descriptions, prophetic allegories, in which the true nature of Christ's spiritual kingdom, the manner of its establishment and extension, and all its after varied fortunes are portrayed. It was to this class of parables that these just spoken by our Saviour belonged. And there was mercy as well as judgment in their employment. Behind their concealing drapery bright lights were burning, the very darkness thrown around which was intended to stimulate the eye to a keener, steadier gaze. As his disciples had dealt with the instructions that had previously come from his lips differently from those who seeing saw not, hearing would not understand, so now Jesus deals differently with them as to the parables. They appear to have been at first as much in the dark as to their meaning as was the general audience on the shore. But they were willing, even anxious to be taught. When the cloud came down, the teachings of their Master, and these dark sayings were uttered, they longed to enter into that cloud to gaze upon that light which burned within. They came seeking, and they found; knocking, and the door was opened to them. To them it was given to know the mysteries of the kingdom, but to the others, uncaring for it, unprepared for it, and unworthy of it as they were, it was not given. By a private and full explanation of the two first and leading parables, those of the sower, and the tares, and the wheat, Jesus put into his disciples' hands the key to all the eight parables that he delivered; taught them to see therein the first plantation of the church—the field, the world—the good seed, the word of God; the entrance and the allowed continued presence of obstruction and opposition,—the silent and secret growth of God's empire over human hearts; the small enlarging into the great; its pervasive transforming power; its preciousness, whether found after diligent search, or coming into the possessor's hands almost unaware: the end of all in the gathering out of that spiritual kingdom of the Lord, of all that should offend.

What was true, locally and temporarily, of the instructions of that single day, of that small section of our Lord's teaching, is true of the whole body of those disclosures of God made to us in the Bible. There are things simple and there are things obscure; things so plain that he who runs may read; things so deep that he only can understand who has within him some answering spiritual consciousness or aspirations, out of which the true interpretation springs. We must compass the simple first, if we would fathom the obscure. We must receive into honest hearts and make good use of the plainest declarations of the divine word, if we would have the lamp kindled within us, by the light of which the more recondite of its sayings can alone be understood. And if we refuse to do so, if we will not follow the course here so plainly marked out for us, if we turn our eyes from that which they could see if they would, if we stop our ears against that which they could understand, if we follow not the heavenly lights already given so far as they can carry us, have we any right to complain if at last our feet stumble upon the dark mountains, and we look for light, and behold it is turned into darkness? It is in an inner, remote sanctuary that the true Shekinah, the light of God's gracious promise, still shineth, to be approached with a humble, tractable spirit, the prayer upon our lips and in our heart, "What I know not, Lord, teach thou me; I beseech thee show me thy glory." It is not in the intellect, it is in the conscience, in the heart, that the finest and most powerful organs of spiritual vision lie. They are seals that cover up many passages and pages of the Bible, which no light or fire of genius can dissolve; there are hidden riches there that no labor of mere learned research can get at and spread forth. But those seals melt like the snow-wreath beneath the warm breathings of desire and prayer, and those riches drop spontaneously into the bosom of the humble and the contrite, the poor and the needy.

The Whole in a Nut-shell.

Man was made of the dust of the earth; and lives by eating and breathing in common with other animals. But of all earthly creatures, he is endowed with the highest order of intellect; in consequence of which his infinitely wise Creator saw fit to make him accountable to Him for his conduct; therefore, he put him under divine law and government.

He also decreed the penalty for the violation of the law, which is Death.

Now, since sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men for all have sinned: it is certain that all must die.

Had nothing more been done for man; it is positively certain, and as clear as the noonday sun, that the whole human family would have passed off in their generations, like the beasts of the field; and in no respect could their condition in death have been a whit different from that of a beast. And there is no possible way to evade this point but to give the creature man an immortal soul. This fills the first side of the shell.

And now for the second side. Divine mercy did not leave the creature in this deplorable and helpless condition: but freely offers to him a resurrection to life from the dead, on condition of complying with certain requirements. Some comply with the requirements, and will, therefore, obtain a resurrection to life. This fills the second side of the shell. But others do not comply; therefore, their condition remains the same as it would have been had mercy held out no offer of life to any; and they still remain in the first side of the shell. There is no possible way to evade this point, but to admit that all men will be raised to immortal life and happiness, irrespective of any compliance with any divine requirement. So there are just three doctrinal pedestals, one of which the Christian must stand on; viz, 1st. All men have immortal souls. 2d. All men will be saved. 3d. The wicked dead will never be raised to life.

Thus both sides of the shell are filled, and here we would stop; but would just say the most absurd thing, going the rounds in the Babylonian whirlpool, is the idea that a man deserves extra pounding for refusing a good offer. The privation of the thing offered is all divine justice demands that he should suffer. The Gospel offers us eternal life: if we reject it, our punishment is the privation of it. Sin, when finished, brings forth death; but no punishment by suffering after death. Nor does the wickedness of the wicked deprive them of eternal life, were it not that their wickedness prevents them from accepting it. None are raised to another life but those who are fit to live another life. One wicked life is enough for any man to live. God is just, but man is a fool.

Z. CAMPBELL.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND TRACTS can be had at the Editor's residence; of GEO. W. YOUNG, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 37 Park Row, Room 40.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, MAY 22, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not; he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will est where it ought.

JAMES BORTHWICK, Hawick, Scotland: Package sent by American European Express Company, 72 Broadway, New York. The Express charges we have paid to Hawick, in full.

Our friend Borthwick sent to us for ten dollars' worth of Books; among which was Judge HALSTED's work, "THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," and he says:

I trust the foregoing works will be the means of doing much good in the circle of my acquaintance and to my own mind. I know in whom I have trusted for salvation, (or, as you would have it, for life), and have an earnest desire to know the whole counsel of God relative to the future. The cords of popular and pre-conceived notions are strong; but the truth, Samson like, can break the strongest fetters that bind the soul to error. I take the liberty of expressing my kindest regards to you.

We suppose we are indebted for the order for books to the HERALD OF LIFE, sent to Hawick, regularly, by Walter Patterson, Delhi, N. Y. Others, also, are sending the HERALD to Scotland. May the good work, begun there, years ago by WM. GLEN MONCRIEFF, be gloriously carried on by Him who watches over the seeds of truth. Some of it has fallen, and will still fall into good ground, and the fruit shall yet appear to the glory of our Lord and LIFE-GIVER, Jesus, the Sower of the good seed. Let the precious seed be scattered all over Scotland, England, and the wide world.

Explanation Wanted.

BY POLLY G. PITTS.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA.

BR. STORRS:—There has been much said in the HERALD OF LIFE on the subject of the devil, and the conclusion of the writers, as a general thing, is, that there is no devil, or no wicked, personal and spiritual intelligence separate from man. Now the burden of proof that has been brought is James i. 13–15. I wish to ask you, and the writers in the HERALD on that subject, some questions. If James i. 13–15 is proof that there is no devil, how do you harmonize James iii. 19, "Thou believest that there is one God; thou doest well; the devils also believe and tremble." Again, Mark v. 12, 13. All the devils besought him, saying, Send us into the swine, that we may enter into them. And forthwith Jesus gave them leave. And the unclean spirits went out and entered into the swine," &c. How can the lusts of man go out of him, and enter into swine? Pray tell us what you think went out of the man, and entered into the swine? Why did the devils know Christ when man did not? You know that is written, "He suffered not the devils to speak, for they knew him." And again, when they did speak they said, "I know Thee who Thou art, thou holy One of God; art thou come to torment us before the time?" There are a great many more passages that I should like to have light upon; I mean on this subject. I have asked these questions for light. I want to believe the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. There are others that feel as I do, on this subject; and as our people are not afraid of investigation, and as a general thing know the Scriptures, and some are bible students indeed, I hope that they will look at these questions or passages and harmonize them with the general tenor of the scriptures.

Your sister, searching for truth, and waiting for Jesus. May God's Spirit lead us into all truth.

RESPONSE TO SISTER PITTS.

We do not propose to go into a detailed answer to the foregoing questions; nor to determine positively as to whether it be a fact that spiritual beings exist called devils, or devil. The fact, however, that the terms devil, satan and devils, are used in the scriptures of the Old and New Testaments does not prove that either of them apply to spiritual beings, in the sense usually understood. That these terms are applied to things of evil on this mundane sphere, or to this world, cannot be denied; that they are used of beings or things not of this world has long been assumed, but never has been proved.

Judge HALSTED in his work, THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE, has taken the subject in hand so thoroughly that we feel a delicacy in saying anything. He has treated it at large on pages 454 to 487, to which we would refer those who wish to go into a full examination of the subject. We do not say that we adopt all he has said on it; but we do say that he has thoroughly demonstrated that the common ideas of a spiritual, personal satan, devil or devils, is a superstition arising out of the ignorance of the dark ages.

On page 454 Judge HALSTED says, "There are two words in the Heb. signifying the same thing, namely, tsr, and stn, each defined an adversary, an enemy." He gives the instances in which these words occur, and shows the absurdity of supposing a personal, spiritual being, as usually understood. In remarking on 2 Sam. xix. 22, where David speaks as follows, "What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me?" he says, "Heb., stn: Greek, epiboulos: Latin satan: Douay, a satan Italian, in place of Satan: English version, adversaries." He adds, "Thus we see, that stn [satan] grew up in Rome, from a small s in the Latin to a big S in the Italian."

Judge HALSTED, on page 464, gives the origin of the term devil. He says:

"The word devil is a mongrel word compounded from the Lat. and Ital. de, of, and the English word evil. According to the Ital. mode of expression of evil would be written, de' evil, of the evil; but where two vowels come together one is struck out, so that here it would be d'evil of the evil; and as before a noun used in an abstract sense, here evil, the Ital. article is not to be rendered, as we have seen, the is not to be used before evil. This gives for d'evil, of evil: and striking out the apostrophe, we have devil. It means simply, of evil; used for the principle of evil; and in reference to an idol, for, (a thing) of evil Hence devil (a thing) of evil, is proper enough for an idol, so a disease is a (a thing) of evil; and we shall see that the Rheims, and E. V., New Testaments call a disease a devil, and diseases devils. But whether they intended that their word devil should be understood as, simply (a thing) of evil, the reader may judge for himself after we have got through with the word DEVIL in the Rheims and E. V. New Testament."

How natural to transform de evil into devil; and then, at length, to personify it, and fancy it is a spiritual being. Paul, in Rom. vi. repeatedly speaks of sin having dominion over people, and of their being servants of sin; also of men obeying sin. Is sin therefore a person? Jesus saith, John viii. 34, "Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin." Here sin is personified. Shall we conclude, therefore, that sin is a personal being? That it is a devil, is an undoubted truth: it is a "thing of evil." So are many other things, "things of evil;" and hence devils. But it does not follow that any of these things of evil are spiritual beings, personally existing.

In Numb. xxii. 22, speaking of Balaam, on his way to visit Balak, who had sent for him to curse Israel, it is said, "the angel of the LORD stood in the way for an adversary [Heb. satan] against him." The Greek is diabalein, in this place, "from the verb diaballo, whence the Gr. noun diabalos, an accuser," which is the word so often translated in the N. T., devil. It will not be pretended that this satan, or devil, in Numb., was the popular spirit devil of our days; for it is expressly said it was "The angel of the LORD," and he was resisting Balaam in his wicked course, which the modern devil certainly would not do. This case is only one example of many to show that there is no reliance on the terms devil and satan to prove the existence of personal spiritual beings to which they are applied.

In the New Testament the word devils [plural] is not diabolos, but daimon. As to the origin of this term, we give the following from Judge HALSTED's work page 457:

["The Lat. daemon, which is the Gr. daimon, is defined a daemon, good or bad genius; Lares (household gods.) We thus learn, that] the Gr. lying [things], called, in the Gr. of Exod. xx. 4, idols, there called by the Lat. graven; by the Douay, graven (thing), is here called daemon; and this is the Lat. word for which the Douay and E. V. of the Old Testament so often give devil; and for which, as we shall see, the Rheims, and E. V. of the New Testament so often give, devil.] The Ital. in Lev. xvii: 7 is, And they shall not sacrifice more the their sacrifices to demonii [the same Lat. word,] demons: Douay, And they shall no more sacrifice their victims to devils: E. V., And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto devils: Margin, "Literally, to he-goats. Many of the heathen deities—as Pan with his attendant Fauns and Satyrs—being represented as bearing this form either wholly or in part: and the goat being in Egypt, where various kinds of animals were wont to be worshipped, an especial object of adoration."—Ed. [Thus at the very first occurrence of the word devil in the Douay, and E. V., we learn what it means. The Hebrews, in their bondage in Egypt, followed the idolatry of Egypt. They were now forbidden such practice. The Douay and E. V. devils were imported from Egypt. The Egyptians imported them from pagans farther east. Devils means, simply, [things] of evil: the Gr. gives, lying [things.]

Thus it will be seen that daemons is simply "things of evil," especially as applied to idolatry, so that their devotees were denominated worshippers of devils, sacrificing to devils, that is, worshippers of idols, as things of evil. Hence, so far, there is no proof that daemons were personal, spiritual beings. That persons who were possessed of evil diseases were called daemoniacs is evident; especially such as were afflicted with monomaniaism (partial madness) and such as were thus disordered in all their mental operations. We here give another extract from HALSTED's work, p. 465:

Matt. iv. 23; Gr., And went about all Gallee Jesus.....and curing every disease and every bodily indisposition en, among that people. Matt. iv. 24; Gr.....and they brought unto him all those kakos echontas, badly having, with various diseases and tortures distressed kai, even, or, and daemonized and moonified, or, epileptic, and paralytic, and he cured them: Lat.,....and who daemonia had: Rheims,.... and such as were possessed by devils and lunatics, and those that had the palsy: E. V., and those who were possessed with devils, &c. [Here, at the very first occurrence of the Rheims and E. V. word devils in the New Testament, the Gr. of v. 23, 24, shows that devils means diseases, or bodily indisposition; v. 23 saying, that he cured every disease and every bodily indisposition.]

Thus we see that the daemons were often none other than the persons afflicted by madness, or some other "evil thing." When these persons came in contact with Jesus, and he was about to heal them, the daemons spake: that is, the persons who were the subjects of His visitations. In their desperation they talked as monomaniacs often do, who sometimes fancy strange things of themselves, supposing, though a single individual, that they are a multitude, or that they are entirely another person to what they really are. Many such cases are on record in our days.

The monomaniacs are usually unwilling to be disturbed in their fancied greatness; and hence manifest a reluctance to be interfered with, "Let us alone" is with them a common cry; yet when the power of Jesus arrested them, they felt an influence on them which they could not withstand; and hence the language often employed by them. The madness which was on these afflicted ones in one case, was transferred to irrational brutes; thus demonstrating the reality of the cure on the one hand, and the awful nature of it on the other. Judge HALSTED remarks in brackets, on this case as follows:]

[Nothing is said of the unclean spirits, E. V., devils, in v. 12, leaving the hogs: so that we have as 2,000, Margin, 6,000, or 7,000 unclean spirits, bad breaths, E. V. devils in v. 12, suffocated, strangled in the sea! I had never before translated these verses: and I think the reader will enjoy as good a laugh as I did while rendering them. One would think that Orthodox devils would have known enough to quit the hogs before the hogs got their noses under water. But instead of that, they held on in the hogs, and were suffocated in the hogs. They must have been as much out of their wits as Legion was. The man here spoken of was a lunatic, or madman; and Jesus complied with his lunatic suggestion, and sent his lunacy,—madness—into the hogs, and they broke and pitched into the sea. The miracle was a striking one; and was well calculated to cast ridicule on the superstitious notion of daimonia then prevailing among the Hebrews, derived by them from the Pagans.]

What we have said may serve to lead our inquiring friend to read the entire work from which we have made extracts, and to come to the conclusion that we have had about enough of superstition in the church, and that the time draweth nigh for it to go, with the swine, into the lake and perish. Let those who are determined still to worship devils, do so, if they will. They seem to think faith in diabolos and daemons, as spiritual beings, having personality, is as important as faith in God or our Lord Jesus Christ. To them it may be; for their religion is one of terror; and makes an eternal state of torment, for immortal souls as important to its success, and the existence of their devils, as the grand truth of revelation, "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in God, and God in him."

DOUBTFUL APPLICATIONS.—A good cause does not need texts of doubtful application to sustain it; and by introducing them the truth is hindered, instead of being promoted. The truth is best promoted by the scripture statement of the subject from texts in harmony with the general tenor of the word of God and with his known perfections. By such a presentation conviction is fasted on candid minds; but when texts are introduced, because there is something in them that may have an entirely different meaning, the truth suffers by it.

Persons who hold with us on the non-living of the wicked from the dead, sometimes refer to texts which we think have nothing to do with the subject; and then some reader writes, asking us to explain a difficulty they find in such texts, in such application. We can't do it, and do not ourself accept the application. This must suffice in reply to an inquirer in Grafton, Ill., as well as to others, on some other topics.

Hope.

Hope is made up of two component parts, viz., desire and expectation. While one man may desire a thing and not expect it, another may expect and not desire it; neither of these alone constitutes hope, and even when combined are liable to disappointment unless based upon immortal promises. God, seeing mankind would hope for something, gave them something to hope for. In the creation, when God placed Adam in the fair abode of Eden, making him Lord over the earth, he left him not without hope. Adam, while in innocence, could hope for perpetuated life and not hope in vain, because his hope was based upon the promise of his Creator. But this promise, like all other promises of God, was conditional. When Adam would no longer submit to the condition his Creator had placed him under, the lust of his eye and his strong animal appetite conceived and brought forth sin. God was no longer under obligation to perpetuate his life. His command had been disregarded, and man was driven from his abode, and cherubim and a flaming sword guarded the tree of life. Where was man's hope now? He might still desire a perpetuated life, but he could not expect it upon any promise of God. There was now no alternative; man must die. He could no longer hope, with surety. Driven away upon the accursed earth, man was left to toil, sweat, groan and die. But, blessed be God, he still loved man. He so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life.

As it was in the case of Adam, so it is now. We have the promise of eternal life; but it is upon conditions. If we obey the gospel of God's dear Son we can hope with confidence for future life. If we refuse to obey, we must yield to the just demands of the law. If by one act of disobedience the human race are subject to death, how can we escape if we do not yield obedience to Christ?

SANFORD HART.

Unionville, Conn.

Value of Truth.

BY L. C. THORNE.

We are not unfrequently met by advocates of popular theology with the query, "suppose the dead are unconscious, and that none who die in their sins will ever live again; in what good can a belief in the doctrine result?" It must, I think, be apparent to all that the above has little force or significance except as it involves questions respecting the relative qualities of truth and error and their influences as components of our religious faith; for according to the proposition contained in the question it follows that the faith of those religionists who do not accept the doctrine is defective upon those points, and that either their christian usefulness is impaired, in consequence, or error is possessed of virtue. Truth and error are opposites; the one rising in the scale of value just in proportion to the vitality of the relationship it sustains to us, while the effects of the other must of necessity be evil and that co-extensive with the confidence we repose in it. Not only, therefore, is it impossible to reasonably claim pre-eminence for error, but it is also impossible to conceive any circumstances in which truth has not value, a quality to the dignity of which error can never rise.

Without stopping to notice the first of the immediate benefits of deliverance from error, attendant upon belief in the points of doctrine under consideration, let us see if the good resulting from it is not "much, every way."

In the first place, learning them we learn our true nature, whither we are tending, and our complete dependence upon some power beyond self for any future life. Thus enlightened we comprehend how and why it is that the natural or carnal mind "is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be," it being "enmity against him;" and comprehending this we become aware of the true position of the "adversary," in battling with whom we are, assisted by the spirit of grace, qualified to act with a degree of intelligence and confidence which ignorance upon the subject must utterly preclude. So, besides rendering our own success as candidates for the incorruptible inheritance vastly more certain, we not only glorify God and his dear Son by the acceptance of divine truth, but, armed with it, we more effectually war against giant falsehood, putting down its stronghold and releasing its long bound captives, who, rejoicing in their deliverance from the darkness of sin and error, do praise God as they only can who largely experience the glaring light and liberty of truth.

Faith in the doctrine secures to us more perfect conception of the character of the Creator and of his love toward us as displayed in the institution and perfection of the redemption scheme. If the assumption of inherent immortality were true, and man was invested with a conscious entity which should outlive him and pass onward to a state of everlasting happiness or misery, then it would follow that when man developed an incapacity to act in accordance with the divine will God was bound by obligations of simple justice to either blot out the race and give no more any existence or save it in some way from a condition so extreme that the human mind is totally incompetent to conceive of the existence of any just proportion between it and the offence. The more apparent does this position become when we reflect that God did not, when he stated the law, or at any time subsequently, so much as hint at such a state, much less declare it the penalty for transgression. And what would we then have? A Creator in debt to the created. A debt, too, which he did not discharge until thousands of years afterward, and then only by selling his own Son! But the glorious fact is, salvation is by grace. "By grace are ye saved through faith; and that not of yourselves; it is the gift of God." From the dogma of man's twofold nature, his transmission to heaven or hell (theological hell) at death, his eternal existence in sin and suffering, in short from all the errors and absurdities to which the immortal soul theory inevitably leads, does the doctrine in question free us, and solves for us the problem of our origin and destiny. Origin and destiny; what a depth of meaning and mystery is wrapped in those two words; and yet how beautifully and perfectly does the inspired volume reveal it. It is when, as through the medium of these truths, we are enabled to contemplate the illimitable love of Jehovah twining within its tender but mighty and unyielding grasp a perishing race and behold him giving his only begotten Son that whosoever of that race should believe on him might not be blotted out of being, but have eternal life, that our conceptions of his goodness and mercy swell to their utmost limit. It is then that the heart becomes most sweetly tuned to a Redeemer's praise; then that every sanctified emotion of our being unites in blessing him who takes "no pleasure in the death" of them that die, but would that all should eat of the bread of life and live forever.

No true follower of Jesus can fail to feel a deep interest in the proclamation of the gospel's glad tidings; and whatever, therefore, is by proper and conclusive scripture evidence shown to be part of those tidings it becomes our duty to both believe and declare; for as the whole is precious beyond measure every part thereof must partake of the same nature. That traveller, then, Zionward who flatters himself that he already possesses strength enough to wage successful warfare against the enemies of God and condemns further accessions of truth as of little or no importance is in imminent danger of falling by the way, and of learning, when too late, that all truth is inestimable, and revealed in mercy. With a reception of the warning, cheering light of each new item of gospel truth is roused the aspiration to reach onward and upward to new and higher degrees of religious knowledge and experience, while with gaze firmly fixed upon the bright and lofty aim of Christ-like perfection we win, in the good fight of faith, ever increasing glory to the Father as we near the great object of our hopes and prayers. Some of the most precious gospel truths have been permitted to slumber for ages under the rubbish of tradition; but the time draws nigh when they will be proclaimed, as it were, from the very hill tops, and christendom will stand still to listen, wondering at its own slowness of heart to have learned so late.

"Thus Saith the Lord."

Adventists more than others have been unwilling to accept any doctrinal view unless it could be proved to be scriptural. So, when arguments have been presented, however well supported by Doctors of Divinity, our cry has been, "Give] us a 'THUS SAITH THE LORD.'" This is as it should be—as God wants it. But of late, I have been compelled to think some of us have got off our guard in this respect, and so be liable to receive new doctrines without going "to the law and testimony."

Now, all God's honest-hearted ones will search for and gladly accept truth. Just as soon as a darling theory is proved to be unfounded in the scripture, honest minds denounce it. Very many precious saints have lived and died with mistaken ideas concerning God and Christ and glory, because light had not come to them. But in these days of investigation and numerous discoveries every one's faith has an opportunity to be tested. Come, brethren and sisters, let's "search the scriptures," and know the mind of God as there revealed.

But what is uppermost in my mind now is the idea of a "Mortal Resurrection!" Does the Bible teach it? Do even "the Fathers" endorse it? It startles the whole world of Bible students, to-day, as a truth just discovered, if indeed it be truth. The church now living never heard the doctrine mentioned before; if, indeed, it rises "to the dignity of a doctrine." Some of our leaders have embraced it; but many of Christ's little ones sit in mute astonishment and inquire, "Do the scriptures teach it?" That none may mistake it we repeat again, Some of our leaders preach that through the atonement of Jesus Christ saints and sinners will rise with mortal bodies at the last day. Or, as we have had it urged upon us recently, "Everybody comes up from the grave just as they go down into death." Before God, we beg our brethren to tell us "a reason" for such a hope.

We look at this idea in the light of human reason; but reason staggers at it. What! the headless, armless, legless, mangled, butchered, burned, bruised bodies, that shocked the ages that beheld them, go down into death to be brought back headless, armless, legless, sawn asunder, bleeding, groaning at the resurrection? Is this, then, the "new birth" for which creation now groaneth, and with us "travaileth in pain together?" Are these ghastly beings truly redeemed bodies? Can it indeed be the awakening in God's image to which David looked with perfect satisfaction? Is it true that saints are to bring back from the grave the same corruptible bodies that went into death?

Turning from reason to revelation, we inquire. "How are the dead raised, and with what body do they come?" Paul considered it foolishness to believe "that which thou sowest" is "that body that shall be." It goes into the ground as a seed. At the resurrection, Paul says, 1 Cor. xv. 38, "God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body"—not the body that is when "thou sowest," but "the body that shall be" after the seed bears grain. As "one star differeth from another star in glory"...."so also is the resurrection of the dead." Why? Because "it is sown in corruption; it is raised in incorruption. It is sown in dishonor; it is raised in glory. It is sown in weakness; it is raised in power. It IS SOWN A NATURAL BODY; IT IS RAISED A SPIRITUAL BODY. There is a natural body and there is a spiritual body."

Is this not plain? The poor, weary, wasted body, or the ashes of God's martyred saints, the beheaded ones and the deformed and lame and blind who sleep in Christ, when with groans and strong cryings their poor bodies went into death, are compared to less brilliant "stars." But when, through the "Second Adam," who was "made a quickening spirit," they come forth with spiritual bodies, all blooming with beauty and health, singing, "O grave, where is thy victory," they are compared, as a contrast, to the "glory of the sun." But admitting them to be raised with their former mortal bodies, where would be the contrast? With this view Paul should have said, "It is sown in corruption, it is raised in corruption; it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in dishonor; it is sown in weakness, it is raised in weakness; it is sown a natural body, it is raised a natural body." But not so; for Paul concluded the whole by saying, "THE DEAD SHALL BE RAISED (not rise) INCORRUPTIBLE." If it means here, as some teach, that "they shall rise incorruptible, to meet the Lord in the air," then sinners must ascend too, for it reads "the dead," not a part of the dead.

Never was it so taught before, that Paul in this fifty-second verse of 1 Cor., xv. chapter, treats of anything but the resurrection of the dead saints, and the raising of the living ones. We want proof that he as much as hints in this verse at the subsequent rising to "meet the Lord in the air." A theory is hard pushed that thus begs support. And as before intimated, if this verse takes "the dead" into the air where Jesus is, every sinner, if raised, goes there too, and goes with incorruptibility.

Once more. Being "begotten by the incorruptible seed," as all christians are in this life, as a natural consequence, at birth, we must be incorruptible beings. We are told by some that Christ rose from the grave with a mortal body, and was not changed to deathlessness till just before his ascension. Where is a "Thus saith the LORD" for that assertion? Did not Jesus say, previous to his death, "they that ....obtain....the resurrection from the dead are equal unto the angels; neither can they die any more?" It does not read, They that obtain the resurrection and a subsequent change. It matters not how many Lazaruses, or Dorcases, or widows' sons had been raised from the dead prior to the resurrection of Christ; the great Head of the church, HE HIMSELF is the sample or "first fruits of them that slept," and every member of the body to which that Head belongs will rise with his life and nature. And the reason why Lazarus and others could be "raised to die again" was because there had not then been opened a new and living way." Furthermore, had any one been born from the dead to immortality before Christ rose, he could not have been the "first born from the dead," as he now is. And not till God brought back Jesus from the dead was there a living demonstration given to us that life eternal is attainable after the present life ceases. O glory to God for this precious "pledge of the harvest." No wonder that impetuous Peter cried out, "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ which....hath begotten us again unto a lively hope by the resurrection of JESUS CHRIST FROM THE DEAD." Yea, blessed, say we, and on account of this "hope," "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord, from henceforth." Amen.

So then, dear brethren and sisters, let us prove all things and hold fast that which is good. If the opinion concerning mortal resurrected bodies be correct, it can of course be proved. And I earnestly entreat those who advocate it so vehemently to give us the sacred testimony favoring it. Honest minds ask it. Many are bewildered among the numerous opinions concerning the resurrection. One class says that righteous and wicked are raised with mortal bodies; another that the wicked will not rise at all. Another that there will be two resurrections, 1000 years apart; another says "No; the 1000 years are in the past, and righteous and wicked will come forth at the coming of the Lord." Who is right? All cannot be. Let Adventists examine their own numberless opinions of faith as thoroughly by the scriptures as they have searched the theories of their neighbors. Error cannot benefit us. Truth sanctifies and makes us free. Let us seek to know the truth as it is in Jesus.

On account of these varied opinions we are instructed to have forbearance, love, charity and patience one with another; so that we can be kind to those who do not understand the scriptures just as we do. The Holy Spirit is what leads us into truth. It doesn't drive nor force, but leads gently. O that the waiting ones in this hour of searching for truth and of running "to and fro" with God's messages, may remember that it is our duty to be kind to those who differ from us.

God help us to be like the meek and lowly Jesus, who loved all mankind, and died for us while we were yet sinners. Without his Spirit we are none of his.

MARIA MATHEWS WEAVER.

Westfield, Mass., April 15, 1867.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The foregoing communication was sent to the World's Crisis. Not finding admission there, it was returned to the writer at her request and sent to the HERALD OF LIFE. We do not wonder the Crisis declined it. That "mortal" sheet goes in for a "mortal resurrection."

FROBISHER'S WORK ON THE CULTIVATION OF THE VOICE AND ACTION.—This work is designed to instruct the student and all self-improvers, in the art of public speaking; it is calculated to make that study interesting by the clear and simple style of his views and teachings. As every American is called upon at some time to take part in public matters, such instruction as this work affords will be found very useful. It is not necessary to master the whole of his system either; separately or taken together, all his ideas can be practically and beneficially applied at once, both in public speaking and social intercourse. Bro. J. E. Frobisher, the author, is an old instructor in elocution. Ivison, Phinney and Blakeman, publishers, New York. 264 pages.

The Increase of Evil.

Prophecy assures us that the last times will be marked by a great prevalence of evil, and one of the strongest evidences, therefore, that we are now living in that eventful period of the world's history consists in the fact of the present fearful increase of vice of every description. A writer in an English journal, mourning over a retrogression of the moral condition of certain laboring classes in that country, says "the Sabbath day finds the country lanes filled with lolling peasants in their working day rags, sleeping off the beer of the Saturday night, and their hobbledehoys shooting sparrows, or raising 'the loud laugh that speaks the vacant mind;' in the towns, or where the pale mechanic is 'in populous city pent,' you find, perhaps, a greater pride of person and respect for appearances, but an equal earnest of a people living 'without God, and without hope in the world.' Nothing is more discouraging to the social philosopher than to find the little pains taken by parents to preserve the respect or conciliate the obedience of their children—their recklessness of bad example, the absence of any attempt at patriarchal discipline by the dignity or propriety of their conduct. At last we come face to face with the fact that that nearly £90,000,000 a year are spent in spirits, beer, and tobacco; that the poor man's church is conspicuous by the absence of the poor man; that the masses never enter the establishment or the conventicle; and that they broadly and openly avow their distaste and disbelief in the popular theology."

Each class of society has its peculiar forms and degrees of evil, and if our English lamenter had, for a moment, considered all classes he would have been impressed with the fact that among them wickedness in its multifarious forms, is rapidly increasing. Of course, ascending the plane of enlightenment and culture it is found to maintain a more respectable existence, until, finally at the summit, interwoven in the affairs of both church and state, it is polished into a sort of refinement, but, nevertheless, always wickedness, and to every lover of truth and virtue, loathsome.

The writer quoted from complains that people "broadly and openly avow their distaste and disbelief in the popular theology." Doubtless, very many professing christians are amazed and horrified to think they are surrounded by beings so steeped in ignorance and sin as to reject popular theology; but if they would enter into an earnest examination they would find it and bible theology widely at variance, and could hardly fail to see that the inconsistencies and revolting doctrines of the former are drawing thousands of thinking people into infidelity and affording a perpetual barrier to myriads of others, intercepting their approach to the truth, and to Christ. If ministers of the various sects would cast their idols of man-made theology "to the moles and to the bats," and with Bible in hand go before the people proclaiming the simple gospel of Jesus Christ, there would soon be little need for such distinguishing terms as the "establishment, or the conventicle," in any land, and very many of our fellow beings who now wander down the dark paths of sin and death would be induced to pause and contemplate the incomparable love of God, and by it be allured up into the highway of holiness which leads to life everlasting. May all who profess to teach in the name of Christ diligently seek the truth, and, finding it, have the moral courage to declare it.

L. C. T.

The Struggle for Divine Life.

Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, speaking of the difficulties, objections, and struggles of an awakened mind to emerge into the divine life in his "Lost One Found," among other things says:

"Often the difficulty in the way hangs upon some single fact in life which has been a controlling one—some one remaining hostility in the pride of the heart which refuses to yield—and in the severing of that the choice may be made free. I recall to mind a very interesting and attractive young man, who sought me once for religious guidance. He had been gay, self-indulgent, and living without God, but was now awakened and serious, yet hesitating and proud. His wife he described to me as a christian woman; but he acknowledged himself a neglecter of God's salvation, yet now desiring to find the way of peace. Our conversation occupied a long evening. At last I said, 'Now go home, take your stand for Christ to-night; tell your wife that the time past of your life has been enough for sin, and that you now mean to live for Christ, and seek the kingdom of God. Kneel down with her, and begin your united prayer to-night. Will you do this?' 'No,' he replied, 'I cannot.' I remonstrated and entreated in vain; he was immovable. I then said to him, 'I have nothing more to say,' and for five minutes we sat in silence. I resumed the book which I had been reading, but presently repeated the question, and was again refused. After some minutes' further delay, he rose from his seat and sighed deeply. I saw the tears starting from his eyes, and I asked the same question again. He replied, 'I will,' and immediately left my house. The next evening I saw this young man coming into our lecture-room with a young woman leaning on his arm, whom I had often marked there before as a stranger and a woman of a sorrowful spirit. They came to the front seat immediately before me, and kneeled together in silent prayer. How joyful to me was that token of the divine victory. At the close of our worship I approached them, and he introduced his wife to me. I told her what he had promised me the night before, and asked, 'Did he do it?' She answered me, 'Yes, he did.' I turned to him and said, 'And how do you feel to-night?' 'Sir,' he exclaimed, 'I am the happiest man in the city of Philadelphia.' It was a triumph of grace. For several years this young man walked among us as a useful, active follower of Christ, highly valued and much beloved. He closed his pilgrimage in a rapid consumption. On one occasion near his death, I said to him, 'Do you remember the evening when you first came to my study?' 'Remember it!' said he; 'I shall never forget it throughout eternity. It was the birthday of my soul.' He raised his feeble hands as he spoke, and clasping them together, covered his face and burst into tears. Years have gone by since then, but the scenes are as fresh before me as the events of yesterday. What an instant, effective choice was his! And how truly did that single choice mark him as 'the lost one found!'"

The Battle Moves Forward.

During my recent absence of four weeks from home and family (which period embraced the discussion week in Brooklyn) some things occurred that may be of general interest. I propose, therefore to give some account of them next week. At present I can only mention a single item, and I do it to encourage the hearts of those who are glad to witness the spread of the Life views committed to our trust. On the evening of the 8th inst., I spoke one hour and twenty minutes in the Universalist church in Fort Plain, N. Y., from the words, "In Christ shall all be made alive." Among my auditors were four ministers—Rev. B. Hawley, D. D., the resident Methodist pastor; Rev. Mr. Baker, the former Universalist pastor of the place; Rev. Mr. Young, a resident Lutheran minister and the principal of the village public school; and my beloved father, who is a Methodist local preacher. Since that time four replies to my sermon have been given in Fort Plain pulpits, three of them by Rev. Dr. Hawley in the Methodist church, and one of them by Rev. Dr. Skinner, Universalist, who preaches for the Universalists in F. P. on every alternate Sunday. I have been urgently requested to return to Fort Plain forthwith and continue the agitation. Particulars hereafter.

R. W.

Salem, May 20.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. E. B. Taft.

STOCKTON, CAL., April 25, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—It is now over seven months that I have been laid aside, not having been able to do anything at public proclamation. I had two runs of typhoid fever, which left me very feeble; and I have not yet sufficiently recovered to think of putting the harness on and engaging in the work: but I gladly give my testimony that God is good, supremely good, under all circumstances. This I have fully realized under my present affliction, it being the greatest trial that has come on me since I engaged in the ministry. The HERALD OF LIFE has made its regular visits, making glad my heart, as, undoubtedly it does all those who believe in immortality only through Jesus Christ our Lord. There are many adversaries, and my mental powers have been so much affected that I could do but little in any way towards defending the cause I so much love. I have not failed however to do what I could to spread the glorious doctrines of the LIFE-GIVER. Where one can be found who desires to know the truth, and is not prejudiced by the "traditions of the elders," he at once sees the great love and mercy, as well as the justice of God, in this life-giving doctrine through Christ alone. Your brother in the gospel hope.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—Br. TAFT sends us $12 for books and new subscribers: all of which we have forwarded as he directed. We thank you, dear brother, and hope it may please our covenant God perfectly to restore your vigor of body and mind; and may your labors in California be crowned with abundant mercy. Let us hear from you often.

From Polly G. Pitts.

FREDERICKSBURG, IOWA, May 15, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Enclosed find one dollar for Helen Robertson, sent by a lover of truth: also, a dollar from myself for the HERALD OF LIFE. I cannot tell when I can send any more, but will try to do what I can. It is hard times here, and many will starve if they are not helped. May God open the hearts of those that have plenty, that it may never be said any died for the want of food in this land of Bibles, the land that has been blessed above all others with liberty, and the right to think and speak the convictions of one's mind untrammelled; where God has showered His blessings of plenty, and to spare. I feel it is the abuse of these blessings that brings the curse, the mildew, the blight. O let us watch and pray always, that we "escape all these things" that are coming on the world, and stand before our coming King with joy and rejoicing. Your sister, hoping for deliverance, when our great Deliverer shall come, and exalt him that is low, abase him that is high; and overturn, overturn, and overturn, till he whose right it is shall reign in righteousness. May grace, mercy, and truth be and abide with you, and the whole Israel of God, henceforth and forever.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—We thank "A Lover of Truth" for the $1 for the support of Sister Helen Robertson, and take the occasion to say, this month is nearly closed, and we need $17 more to pay her board bill for May; and she will probably be in that field into, if not through July. If some 40 or 50 will give $1 each they will cheer her heart and be the richer themselves, while promoting the education of the freedmen and their children.

From Nicholas Allpool.

LOCUST POINT, OHIO, May 9, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I received BIBLE VS. TRADITION, also four numbers of the HERALD OF LIFE, with which I am well pleased. I expect to get some subscribers for it. I am all alone here, with one exeption, in advocating the doctrine of no immortality or endless life except through Christ alone. I have been for many years a member of the "United Brethren in Christ," but did not believe in endless torture, but I did believe that man had an immortal soul till about twelve years ago, when, by chance, I saw the "Discussion" between Prof. Mattison and yourself, which gave me light, and I have ever thanked God for that light. I searched God's holy word with an unprejudiced mind, and am convinced of the the truth of no immortality out of Christ; and my hope of eternal life is very much increased; and I am determined by the grace of God to follow my dear Redeemer through evil report as well as good. There is opposition from some; but there are charitable people here who are willing for me to understand for myself, though they do not agree with me. Time-honored sentiments are hard to be removed. We should always be gentle and gain by love and the word of the Lord. I am not a public speaker, and am 62 years old; but I am willing to do the best I can in the cause of my Master, and labor and pray in faith till God did answer. I think there could be much good done out here if the doctrine were thoroughly presented. I never heard a sermon on the subject. If some good brother should come near us, many would be happy to hear on the subject.

I am yours in heart and hand. Though miles are between us, I trust we may hear our Lord and Master when he comes to take his people home, to be with him forevermore. This is the prayer of your brother in love.

JULINE FRENCH, Rehoboth, R. I., writes:—I have been confined for over a year with a broken and sprained limb, and cannot walk yet only with crutches, and have been so situated that I have not received any of my papers since last Sept. till March. I hope now to get them every week; the contents are food to my soul, for they come laden with glorious truths. I feel to praise the Lord for the light I have received on His word from your valuable paper and books. I wish I was able to give more for the cause of this glorious truth, "Life only in Christ" our LIFE-GIVER. But I am poor and unable to earn much at present. My prayer is, that the Lord would bless the Editor and all who write for the paper.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—"Four dollars" were sent with the foregoing for the HERALD, and $1.20 for "LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST." The Lord bless and prosper you, dear, suffering, praying soul.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The liberation of Jeff. Davis on bail has been the exciting topic of conversation the past week. He has been spending some days in this city in a quiet way, being unwilling to draw much attention to himself by allowing demonstrations as many here would like to have him. There is very little feeling of animosity now expressed toward him, and he will no doubt escape from severe punishment, as the immediate pacification of the South is regarded as bound up in the treatment to be awarded him and the other leaders of the rebellion.

The accounts of the state of the crops from every section are of the most flattering character.

It was fortunate that the Atlantic Telegraph Company, after successfully laying the cable of 1866, immediately repaired that of 1865. The cable of 1866 has just been broken by an iceberg, and our only line of communication with the Old World is at present the cable of 1865. The Company expects to repair the damage without delay.

FOREIGN.

Constantinople correspondence, dated the 20th of April, contains matter relative to the progress of the Eastern question to a war crisis, which is of the highest importance, particularly when read in connection with the defeat of Omar Pasha in two severe battles in Candia, and the renewed representation of the great Powers to the Sultan as to the advisability of the cession of Crete to Greece. Russia, according to the report, was gradually encircling the Turkish provinces, due east, south, and south-east, with her troops, and large bodies of the soldiers of the Czar were stationed near Simpheropol, between Kars and Tiflis, while the country between Kars and Erzeroum, in Armenia, was scoured by Russian cavalry. Sebastopol "stronger than ever," had one hundred and fifty thousand men in and around the city. Odessa was filled with troops, and it was quite evident that Russia was prepared to administer at any moment to the effects of the "sick man" with profit to herself.

The Pope has found himself in a strange predicament with regard to the provisional appointment of a bishop to a Russian diocese. The Pontifical act is published in the official Roman Journal, and is accompanied by a confession that his Holiness has no means of transmitting this nomination to its destination, owing to the interdiction which prevents the bishops of Russia, under heavy penalties from communicating with the Holy See. He therefore hopes that his decision will be reproduced by all the newspapers, and that in this way it will come to the knowledge of the bishop and the Catholics of the diocese concerned. Is not this a curiosity, this appeal to the press by a power which condemns the press as a diabolical invention and the source of all the evils which afflict society?

Some of the French journalists have discovered a cause for alarm and inquietude in the ambitious and "audacious" schemes of Bismarck to annex Holland to the Germanic Confederation—that is, to Prussia. And in bringing to light the new intrigues of Prussia they have discovered the secret reason of the lately proposed cession of Luxemburg to France.

A conservative deputation waited upon Count Bismarck May 7 to congratulate him upon his escape from assassination this day last year. In his reply Count Bismarck is reported to have said:—"The situation is now more serious than ever it was before."

The reform leagues of England made a grand outside rally against the Derby Reform bill on the 15th inst. in London. Mr. Bright advised a vigorous opposition to the measure at its third reading, and then endeavored to have the question remitted to the people at large.

The latest advices from Brazil, which are to the 8th of April, bring no important intelligence from the seat of war. The Brazilians were preparing an invasion of Paraguay at a point up the upper Parana, but in Buenos Ayres and Montevideo the disposition toward making peace seemed to be on the increase.

The rinderpest has again made its appearance in England, and orders have been issued in Council for the prevention or restriction of its ravages.

The position of Spain, in a political as well as financial point of view, continues to be very deplorable. The recent revolutionary attempt in Catalonia having again failed, extensive arrests are being made of those engaged in getting it up.

At date of Queretaro, April 27, Gen. Escobedo reports another repulse of his enemy. Gen. Diaz had been visited on the 20th by a German Princess with a proposal of terms for the disbanding of the Austro-Belgic corps, and guaranteeing the life of Maximilian. Gen. Diaz disclaimed any authority to pardon the usurper.

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO FORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—Nicholas Allpool, Christopher Cushing, Polly G. Pitts Aaron Mason.

Two Dollars each from—John Shafer, Mrs. Mary A. N. Bacon.

Various Sums.

LaFayette Norris, 25 cts. on general fund; D. B. Salter, $25 on pledge; Mrs. P. Waterman Fuller, $5; Eld. E. B. Taft, $3.

Freedmen's Mission.

For Helen Robertson.

D. B. Salter, Saltersville, N. Y.......... $4

"A Lover of Truth"................ $1

Advertisements.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,

Importers and Jobbers of

HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.

TERMS—NET CASH.

No. 58 White Street,

(few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.

WILLIAM H. THORNE; LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS, GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.

62 East Twenty-First Street,

Near Fourth Avenue.

OFFICE HOURS, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON

MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,

No. 25 CHAMBERS ST., NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,

NEWSPAPER,

BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,

AND STEREOTYPERS,

(ROOM 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.

Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view o. the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These questions are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent for 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,

Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

LINES.

O 'tis a rough and stormy sea
On which the christian rides,
Rude storms, wild winds and foaming waves,
Oft come, and threat'ning tides.

Yet, cheering thought, the Saviour slept
Amid the storm's rude blast;
He guides our bark, and surely we Shall reach our haven at least.

Beyond the clouds there is a sun
Tho' hidden be its ray,
After the storm there is a calm,—
After the night, the day.

MARIA M. WEAVER.

* * * * * * * *

"O for a faith that will not shrink
When tempests rage without."

* * * * * * * *

"That when in danger knows no fear,
In darkness feels no doubt."

TO ALL.

St. Mark, xiii., 37.

Could christians watch ten thousand years
Before their Lord himself appears,
Yet, as He then shall come at last,
'Twere wise, through all such ages past,
T'have watched and waited, and have borne
The scoffer's jest, the worldling's scorn.
But those who watch not in the day
Will surely sleep the night away.

Lord, make me at all hours awake,
And self-denied Thy cross to take,
Robed for Thy nuptial feast in white,
With lamp in hand and burning bright;
Nor lack of precious oil be mine
When the loud cry "Arise and shine!"
Proclaims Thee come, in bridal state,
And when preparing be too late!

—Littell's Living Age.

Children's Department.

BRIGHTENING ALL IT CAN.

The day had been dark and gloomy, when suddenly, toward night, the clouds broke, and the sun's bright rays streamed through, shedding a flood of golden light upon the country.

A sweet voice at the window called out in joyful tones: "Look! oh, look, papa, the sun is brightening all it can!"

"Brightening all it can? so it is," answered papa; "and you can be like the sun if you choose."

"How, papa? tell me how."

"By looking happy, and smiling on us all day; and never letting any tearful rain come into the blue of those eyes; only be happy and good; that's all."

The next day the music of the child's voice filled our ears from sunrise to dark; the little heart seemed full of light and love, and when asked why she was so happy, she replied, laughingly: "Why! don't you see, papa, I'm the sun? I'm brightening all I can."

"And filling the house with sunshine and joy," answered papa.

Cannot little children be like the sun every day—brightening all they can. Try it, children.—Child at Home.

STORY OF A PICTURE.

A painter once wanted a picture of Innocence, and drew the likeness of a child at prayer. The little supplicant was kneeling beside his mother; the palms of his uplifted hands were reverently pressed together; his rosy cheek spoke of health, and his mild blue eye was upturned with the expression of devotion and peace. The portrait of young Rupert was much prized by the painter, who hung it up on his study wall, and called it "Innocence." Years passed away, and the artist became an old man. Still the picture hung there. He had often thought of painting a counterpart—the picture of guilt—but had not found the opportunity. At last he effected his purpose by paying a visit to a neighboring gaol. On the damp floor of his cell lay a wretched culprit named Randall, heavily ironed. Wasted was his body and hollow his eye; vice was visible in his face. The painter succeeded admirably, and the portraits of young Rupert and Randall were hung side by side, for "Innocence" and "Guilt." But who was young Rupert and who was Randall? Alas! the two were one. Old Randall was young Rupert led astray by bad companions, and ending his life in the damp and shameful dungeon.

THE FARMER THAT WOULD NOT SELL.

Mr. Coffin, in his "Four Years of Fighting," tells the following incident, which occurred as our troops were moving to Gettysburg:

When the Fifth corps passed through the town of Liberty, a farmer rode into the village mounted on his farm wagon. His load was covered by white tablecloths.

"What have you got to sell, old fellow? Bread, eh?" said a soldier, raising a corner of the cloth, and revealing loaves of sweet, soft, plain bread, of the finest wheat, with several bushels of ginger-cakes.

"What do you ask for a loaf?"

"I haven't any to sell," said the farmer.

"Haven't any to sell? What are ye here for?"

The farmer made no reply.

"See here, old fellow, won't you sell me a hunk of your ginger-bread?" said the soldier, producing an old wallet.

"No."

"Well, you are a mean old cuss. It would be serving you right to tip you out of your old bread-cart. Here we are marching all night and all day to protect your property and fight the rebs. We haven't had any breakfast, and may not have any dinner. You are a set of mean cuss es round here, I reckon,' said the soldier.

A crowd of soldiers had gathered, and others expressed their indignation. The old farmer stood up on his wagon-seat, took off the tablecloths, and replied,

"I didn't bring my bread here to sell. My wife and daughter sat up all night to bake it for you, and you are welcome to all I've got, and I wish I had ten times as much. Help yourselves, boys."

"Hurrah! hurrah! hurrah!" "Bully for you!" "You're a brick!" "Three cheers for the old woman!" "Three cheers for the girls!"

They threw up their caps, and fairly danced with joy. The bread and cakes were gone in a twinkling.

"See here, my friend, I take back all the hard words I said about you," said the soldier, shaking hands with the farmer, who sat on his wagon overcome with emotion.

A SURPRISED MINISTER.

A certain minister had promised a little boy of his that he should accompany him to church on the following Sabbath. The little fellow, although not quite four years old, was still old enough to remember the promise. But when church time came it happened that he was sound asleep, and his parents went away leaving him in bed. Some time after he awoke, and, calling to mind the promise given him, he hurried down stairs only to find his father and mother gone. Determined not to be frustrated in this manner, he made his way into the street, and crossing to where the church stood, entered the open door. The minister at that moment was beginning his sermon. Fixing his eye upon his father the little fellow waddled up the aisle in his night clothes, until directly opposite the pulpit, when he halted, and looking up at him called out:

"I des you fordot me!"

THE HEALING DAY.

[From Prophetic Times.]

"Moreover, the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun; and the light of the sun shall be seven-fold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people and healeth the stroke of their wound."—ISAIAH xxx. 26.

The contrast is very striking between the calamities which have happened to our world in the past, and the blessings that are to come upon it in the future; between the strange things that have transpired upon it, and the stranger still that are to transpire upon it. There was a day in the past when the first act of sin was committed on the earth; there is a day in the future when the last stain of sin shall be purged away from it. There was a day in the past when the curse came down upon our globe with crushing, blighting, paralyzing power, disordering everything, and making the whole creation travail together in pain until now. There is a day in the future when the curse shall be lifted off from the disordered framework of creation, and

"The groans of nature in this lower world,
Which heaven has heard for ages,
Shall have an end."

There was a time in the past when our sin-smitten world came under the ban of exile from the great family of worlds, of which God is the Father, and Jesus Christ the Elder Brother: there is an hour in the future when the sentence of seclusion will be repealed, and our exiled earth be restored to open, happy intercourse with other worlds; when angels will visit it again without concealment, and men will hear the voice of the Lord God, as Adam did when he walked amidst the bowers of Eden in the cool of the day. There was a time in the past when a flood of water swept in desolating judgment over our world; there is a time in the future, settled and determined in the purpose of God, when a flood of purifying fire shall wrap the world in its regenerating influence. There was a time in the past when the Son of God entered our world in humiliation to suffer and to die; there is a time in the future when He shall enter it again in power and great glory, to judge it in righteousness.

In its primary sense the text quoted above has reference to the Jews. It belongs unquestionably to them. The idea is embodied in what is distinctly and peculiarly Jewish phraseology. It can receive its complete and literal fulfilment only in the experience of the Jewish people; and in its application to them, there is no difficulty in determining what is the point of time indicated by the language employed. Two expressions are made use of to define the time referred to: these are "the "breach" and "the wound" of his people. "The breach" has reference undoubtedly to the separation of the Jewish people into two distinct kingdoms. This took place after the death of Solomon. Then ten of the tribes were sent away from his son Rehoboam, and made a distinct nation. This was "a breach" indeed; and it was never afterwards healed, or bound up. It continued till the captivity. From that the ten tribes which constituted the kingdom of Israel have never yet returned; they became outcasts from that day. They have been lost since then from the knowledge of the rest of the world. The most persistent and persevering efforts have been made to trace them; ingenious and elaborate theories have been devised to prove their connection with this, that, or the other nation, from one end of the earth to the other. But it has all amounted to nothing. No one knows where the lost ten tribes are, but God has hidden them.* And no one ever will know, till God is pleased to bring them out from their hiding place. They are "outcasts" from the land of their fathers; and they must continue outcasts till the time appointed of God for their return shall come. This casting out and hiding of those ten tribes from the knowledge of the world may well be spoken of as a "breach" upon the nation; and that breach has never yet been "bound up."

The other two tribes of Judah and Benjamin remained united. They continued in their own land for more than a hundred years after the ten tribes were carried away. Then, after seventy years captivity in Babylon, they returned to their own country and occupied it for about five hundred years longer. The rejection of Christ, their Messiah, filled up the measure of their iniquities. Their city was destroyed by the Romans, and they were dispersed and scattered abroad over the face of the earth. For eighteen centuries the prophecy recorded by Hosea has been fulfilled in them: "The children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice, and without an image, and without an ephod, and without a teraphim." Of the ten tribes it is impossible to tell where they are;* of the two tribes it is almost equally impossible to tell where they are not. They are dispersed among all nations, yet absorbed by none, identified with none. They are worldwide wanderers. They are a reproach and a byword among all people. Their continued separate existence is as much a miracle, in its way, as it would be if there were five or six millions of drops of fresh water preserved in the ocean, tossed by the storms of eighteen hundred years, yet retaining their freshness and their identity as distinct individual drops. And this disposition of Judah was the "wound" inflicted on the nation—as the outcasting of Israel was "the breach."

But this "breach," we are assured, is to be "bound up;" this "wound" is to be "healed." This implies clearly and inevitably the national restoration of this whole people, the ten tribes, as well as the two tribes, to their own land again. It is childish trifling with serious things, it is sheer nonsense to say that this refers only to the spiritual blessings which Christ was to bring to the gentile nations.

Suppose yourself in attendance at an hospital: a patient is brought in who has received a dangerous flesh wound. You go to him and say, the surgeon is coming who will bind up the "breach" and "heal the stroke of his wound." What would he understand by your promise? Certainly, that that very wound of his would be closed and healed, and his sufferings from it relieved; and if, instead of this, after a while, he should find out that this was not your meaning, but that you only intended that in another part of the country, or in another quarter of the globe they were to have a surgeon one of these days who would be very skilful in healing people, what would he think? Would it not be the most natural thing in the world for that poor man to feel that you were simply mocking his misery? And if I were a Jew, it seems to me that I should feel so, when I heard christian ministers handle passages like this text, and say that "the breach," and "the wound" belong to the Jews, but that the binding up and the healing belong to the gentiles. Not so. Both parts of the text have the same application. The people on whom "the breach" came are the people to be bound up. The people who were wounded are the people who are to be healed. See how plainly the fact of Israel's restoration is taught by the prophet Jeremiah: "Behold I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them in mine anger; and I will bring them again into this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely; yea, I will rejoice over them to do them good, and I will plant them in this land assuredly with my whole heart, and with my whole soul." Jer. xxxii. 27, 41. And the fact that the kingdom of Israel as well as Judah, is embraced in these promises is most distinctly set forth by Ezekiel, when he says: "Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make one stick of them, and they shall be one in mine hand; and I will make them one nation in the land upon the Mount of Israel, and one king shall be king over them all, and they shall be no more two nations; neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all." Nothing could be more clear and explicit than this. And when this is accomplished it will be true indeed that "the breach of the people shall be bound up, and the stroke of their wound be healed."

The question is, when will this take place? I answer: not till the Lord Jesus Christ shall return in person to our earth. But how can this be proved? Easily enough; "Thus it is written, the Redeemer shall come to Zion and turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Isaiah lix. 20. But it may be asked, how can it be proved that it is a personal and not a figurative or spiritual coming that is here spoken of? I answer by showing how he went from Zion on his first coming to it. The disciples stood on the top of Olivet and saw him go in person away from Zion. And as they stood there gazing up after him into heaven, an angel appeared to them and said: "This same Jesus who is taken from you into heaven shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." If he went away figuratively or spiritually, then he will come again figuratively or spiritually. But if his going away was a literal, personal going, then his coming again will be literal and personal too.

When Zechariah is speaking of the gathering of Israel unto their Messiah, he says: "His feet shall stand at that day upon the Mount of Olives. This denotes a personal presence if language can express such a presence. And it is to their glorious Shiloh, personally present, that "the gathering of the people shall be," according to the words of the dying Jacob. "And when the dispersed of Judah, and the outcasts of Israel are made one people again in their own land, when they are cleansed and purified, and made a praise and a joy in the earth, then, indeed, will the day have come when the Lord shall have bound up the breach of his people, and have healed the stroke of their wound."

This I take to be the meaning of this text in reference to the Jews.

*Truly, "blindness in part has happened to Israel," when Israel does not know herself, as our friend of the Prophetic Times seems not to know that the Anglo-Saxons, and their associates, are of the "lost tribes." On this subject we have not had a doubt for nearly twenty years. They are just as distinct a people as the Jews themselves, and have all the prophetic marks given to the "ten lost tribes;" especially is this true of the Anglo-Saxons as the posterity of Joseph in the line of Ephraim, his youngest son, who was the head and leader of the ten tribes, or kingdom of Israel. We hope the "blindness" will ere long be removed from the eyes of our brother Israel of the Prophetic Times, on this matter. Let them read the following texts and give them a fair construction, and see if God has not brought "them out from their hiding place." Gen. xlviii. 16–19. Gen. xlix. 22–26. Deut. xxxiii. 13–17. Jer. xxxi. 9, 18–20. Hosea i. 10. Can a people described as they are in these texts be "hidden" so as to make it "impossible to tell where they are," except that "blindness in part has happened to" them? Will the Prophetic Times answer?—ED. HER. OF LIFE.

THE NATURAL AND SPIRITUAL BODIES.

BY A. G. HUDSON.

[Concluded from No. 172.]

We now proceed to examine the spiritual body, and we inquire, What is to be its origin, what its relation to the natural body? and what its destiny?

To nature it may be said, Thus far shalt thou go, and no further. If there is a future for us, natural philosophy has never lifted the veil. But it is written, Life and immortality are brought to light through the gospel. The apostle affirms, There is a spiritual body. But lest we should make the mistake that millions are making, he modifies his expression by saying, Howbeit, that is not first which is spiritual, but natural; and afterwards that which is spiritual. If that which is spiritual precedes the resurrection, what weight has this language of the apostle in his argument for the resurrection?

In speaking upon the origin of the spiritual body, I am not dictating to any what they shall believe; and I shall think no less of any one if he does not adopt the opinion that the formation of the spiritual body will be as positively a creative act as was the original formation of the natural body; that the Almighty power, through the person of Jesus Christ, is yet to do this thing. The most that we know about it is, it is to be like Christ's glorified body; that its existence is not to terminate; that it will be free from all the ills the living soul is subject to, and while it may be true that God only hath immortality, for aught I know, this will be preserved.

Where then is the connection between the natural and the spiritual? I answer, primarily there is none. While death comes as a legitimate result of transgression, I do not understand that future life comes naturally from a life of obedience, while I believe the future condition of the redeemed will be affected by their faith and works in this life; in other words, that they will be rewarded according to the deeds done in the body, I yet believe that life itself will be the absolute gift of God, which no amount of faith or works could ever secure. God gives us natural life: we make our happiness or our misery. If accounted worthy of future life, God will give it; and unless I mistake, we are to-day affecting the eternal condition of that life. If that be so,

"How careful ought we all to live
How watchful every hour;
For we a strict account must give,
For exercise of power."

Here we see the great necessity for the LIFE-GIVER. If, on the other hand, we are immortal, or have an immortal soul, and our condition in the future is what we make it in this life, what does Jesus do? Just what spiritualism says, and no more. He was more a Saviour than the rest of us, just in proportion as he was better, and taught better principles. If these conclusions can be avoided I should like to have some one tell how. We are not dependent upon Jesus Christ, but upon the principles he advocated! That the observance of those principles will bring happiness as long as there is life, I deny.

We are now led to the question of identity. In what does it consist? Strictly speaking, there is no such thing as finite personal identity for any length of time while there is life. This is absolutely true, physically, intellectually and morally; for finite beings are continually changing; and no man can say to-day, I am strictly speaking the same that I was yesterday. When we say we were born in such a time and in such a place, if our words were to be taken in their absolute sense we should have to modify them materially. The most that we can mean by an expression of this kind is, an existence was then commenced; and for what I am to-day, I was primarily, dependent upon that beginning. Identity, strictly speaking, belongs only to immutability; in other words they are synonymous.

The identity is recognized by the memory; and we remember nothing but what we have learned. Whatever there is then of identity in a living soul, worthy of the name, I find in that that is acquired. How do you, my friend, identify the Bible or Uncle Tom's Cabin? By the form or by the collection of ideas. Burn every one of Mrs. Harriet Beecher's stories to-day, and if she could from memory, and did, re-write, the work referred to, would you, or would you not, identify it? would it be a reproduction or would it be a new production? and would the form of the matter, or the question whether it was the same matter form any part of our inquiries.

Principles and truths are not dependent upon organism for their existence, but the individualization of them is. The mind is knowledge individualized. The capacity for mind lies in the organization. Character is a quality of the mind, and is the offspring of intelligence and law. The mind and character of the individual determine his standing with God and man. This is what is judged; and that only has a promise of preservation which is begotten by the word. This is what I understand by the "new man"—by the "inner man." The word is the seed that the sower went forth to sow. This seed, Peter says, is not corruptible but endureth forever. But if he teaches anything it is, that the natural man is corruptible. See 1 Peter i. 23–25. This new man, begotten by the word, becomes the essential man in the christian. It is that, and that only, which is to be preserved. It is that which cannot sin. The natural man is still under sentence of death, without hope. This new man must be begotten or no house will be provided for it. This inner man connected with a body like Christ's glorified body, at the resurrection, will be what I understand by living again. The preservation of the individualized mind and character, is what I understand by the preservation of the identity. As natural birth does not instantly follow generation, and as the harvest does not instantly follow the sowing of the seed, so the new birth will not instantly follow generation. Character is not formed in a moment.

"While the lamp holds out to burn,
The vilest sinner may return" is poetry and orthodoxy; yet it is not Bible, but it is a license to sin as positively as papal indulgences. When there is a birth without generation, and a harvest without seed, you may find some analogy from which to argue the doctrine of universal salvation, or a resurrection of the wicked dead; which is, in my opinion, the same thing. The work to be done is not a cleansing of something already in existence, and immortal; but it is the formation of something new. May we form such characters in this life that we be accounted worthy of spiritual bodies.

THE SHEEP KNOW HIS VOICE.

Not long since a man in India was accused of stealing a sheep. He was brought before the judge, and the supposed owner of the sheep was also present. Both claimed the sheep, and had witnesses to prove their claims, so that it was not easy for the judge to decide to which the sheep belonged.

Knowing the customs of the shepherds, and the habits of the sheep, the judge ordered the sheep to be brought into court, and sent one of the two men into the another room, while he told the other to call the sheep and see if it would come to him. But the poor animal, not knowing the "voice of a stranger," would not go to him. In the mean time the other man, who was in the adjoining room, growing impatient, and probably suspecting what was going on, gave a kind of "chuck!" upon which the sheep bounded away toward him at once. This "chuck" was the way in which he had been used to call the sheep; and it was at once decided that he was the real owner. Thus we have a beautiful illustration of John x. 3, 5—"And the sheep follow him; for they know his voice. And a stranger they will not follow, but flee from him; for they know not the voice of strangers." Jesus said: "I am the Good Shepherd, and know my sheep, and am known of mine."

VARIETIES.

SELECTED BY W. M.

Henry Ward Beecher, who seems to lack any positive system of religion, has written for the N. Y. Ledger a novel entitled "Norwood; or, Village Life in New England."

The Ambassador, the Universalist organ in New York says that for some reason—perhaps inexplicable, perhaps not—the Universalist denomination lags behind most of the Protestant denominations in regard to the Social Reform; of course, specially excepting that embodiment of shameless neutrality, the Episcopal church.

At the time of the earthquake in Missouri and Kansas, April 24, an acre of ground three miles south of Carthage, on the Miami Canal, sunk ten feet, showing that the shock extended to Ohio. The ground sunk bodily, leaving a perpendicular wall of ten feet or more on all sides. The canal bank was seriously endangered by the subsidence.

The Society of Friends in England, which has of late been rather fading away, until their present membership in England is only about 15,000, is reviving.

The question of religious toleration is the absorbing topic of the day in Peru, and is being keenly discussed, the Catholic party dealing largely in denunciation and threats.

The Church Monitor, of Halifax, takes ground for a common priesthood as follows: "Who, then, are priests? All true believers by virtue of their union with Christ, their Great High Priest."

It would seem that the question of ritualism is about being brought to a crisis in Great Britain. The Bishop of London has signed "letters of request" to Dr. Lushington, the Dean of the Court of Arches, charging Rev. A. H. Mackonockle, incumbent of St. Albans, Holborn, London, with four offences:

1. The elevation and adoration of the Holy Elements.
2. The placing of lights on the communion table.
3. The use of incense.
4. The use of the mixed chalice.

The Bishop of London is backed by the Church Association, and the clergy of St. Albans by the English Church Union. Large sums of money are contributed by the members of these private associations. It is hopeful to see this war of the church upon itself. It shows that the inside is growing, the logic of which is, that the outside must break. With the power of custom depolarized, and the superficial pretences of the clergy exposed, the people of the world will make haste to a better and happier life.

Zion's Herald shows how extremely ridiculous is the plea of the English Church that its apostolic succession guarantees purity in doctrine. "One of its bishops is writing books to prove that the Pentateuch is a collection of old-wives' fables, and publishing hymn-books, from which the name of Christ is carefully expunged, for the use of the churches of his diocese. Another coquets with Rome, adopts the confessional, and favors all the new theatrical performances of ritualism. Another who has only lately died, would have made a good Presbyterian or Methodist minister, if his theology could have been mended a little; he thought the apostolic succession a delusion and a snare. Brilliant illustrations, these, of the virtue of the said apostolic succession as a guarantee for the purity of the Church in faith and doctrine!"

Do the best we can in teaching a promiscuous crowd of boys, and some little chap among them will be almost sure, through design or blunder, to turn all the labor of a serious lesson into a ridiculous farce, in spite of us; but a teacher will be less likely to lay himself open if he avoids too figurative language in his talk.

In a certain Sabbath-school, the superintendent made a powerful appeal to the scholars to be active and useful, and among other things he told them they should all be locomotives, each taking along his train to heaven. The next Sabbath, just as the school opened, in came one of the best and most zealous boys with thirteen new scholars behind him, and went up the aisle uttering a noise, "choo, choo," imitative of the engine, to the amazement of the superintendent and scholars.

"What does this mean?" asked the astonished superintendent.

"Why," said the boy, "you said we must be locomotives, and here I am with thirteen cars behind me."

A sect is one of the most common as it is one of the most convenient forms of human combination for common objects. And what is it to be sectarian? Why to prefer the interests of your own corporation to that of any other. And so every man is sectarian who is blessed with distinct preferences.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Chris[t] alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy for their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage as his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 174. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, MAY 29, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 32.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
No. 37 Park Row,
(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.
GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

RECONCILIATION.

BY ELD. S. W. BISHOP.

Not long since, in taking up a religious paper, my eye chanced to fall on this expression—speaking of an individual "who was converted," the writer remarked, "He went home rejoicing in the smiles of a reconciled God." This led me to ponder this question, What is the true doctrine of reconciliation? On this point I am satisfied the religious world at large is in the fog. The idea generally entertained is this: God is in a condition of mind towards all unconverted people that amounts to perfect enmity: that we must take some course to appease his infinite wrath and make him become friendly to us: that God the Father is an awful God, and were it not that Christ stands between us and God his vindictive wrath would hurl us all down to hell, en masse: that God is the representative of inexorable justice and direful indignation, but Christ is all love, mercy and compassion towards the children of men: and that the office work of Christ consists chiefly in preventing the Almighty from executing summary vengeance on the unsheltered head of the sinner: that when God, by a great amount of penance doing on the part of the sinner, and special coaxing on the part of Christ and the church, consents to let the sinner be saved, this is reconciliation.

In harmony with this idea is arranged all the church machinery for making converts; anxious seats, altars, sensation sermons, and singing, praying, etc. How many times have intelligent infidels left these meetings in disgust at the fanatical proceedings of popular revivalists. Not only are they in the fog as to the true doctrine of reconciliation, but they have made a fatal mistake as to the true idea of conversion. They suppose that conversion consists wholly in a feeling of ecstatic joy. Their only object therefore is to get the subjects of their religious mesmerization to "feel happy." Just as though to feel happy under the influence of a religious frenzy was a sure evidence of conversion.

Now the true doctrine of reconciliation consists simply in the bringing of the mind of man in harmony with the mind of God. God never changes. He is "the same yesterday, to-day, and forever." The most clear and forcible view we can ever get of the character of God is found in the life of his only begotten Son. Christ is God's representative to the human family. Whatever of loveliness there is in the character of Christ, he borrowed from the infinite fountain of love, the eternal Father. "In him dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." And just so far as we give evidence of having, in our own hearts, received the Spirit of reconciliation, so far shall we be made partakers of, assimilated into, God's great character of love. And we shall at all times manifest the loveliness of the character of Christ, "the image of God," formed in us the hope of glory.

How perfectly evident it must be to all thinking minds, that this condition of heart can never be attained unto by the use of the above named revival machinery. When we turn to the word of God, we find given in the clearest language the only instrumentalities God has ever employed to bring the mind of man into a condition of reconciliation with himself. See James i. 18. "Of his own will begot he us by the word of truth." The church of God in this present time is in a begotten state, or an embryotic state of spiritual life, "waiting for the adoption," or the full development, the birth, at the appearing of Christ, which consummation or birth is brought about by a resurrection from the dead. This is the divine arrangement, the plan of redemption through Christ. I know it is generally supposed that the "birth of the Spirit" takes place when men are converted, but this is not true. That conversion and the birth of the Spirit are two different things must be evident for the following reasons:

First, the birth of the Spirit is wholly a work of the Spirit of God. Conversion is not. To get a man converted, according to the Bible use of the word, is simply to give him a pure heart. Purity of heart can never be obtained only by faith. See Acts xv. 9. "And put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." Again, this same change is termed, Eph. iii. 17, "Christ dwelling in the heart by faith." This same change is called, Col. i. 27, "Christ in you, the hope of glory." No man can hope for glory unless he believes the record that declares that glory is coming. Thus there can be no conversion where there is no faith. Faith is explained by Paul, Rom. iv. 3, simply "to believe God."

The conclusion to which we are inevitably driven by these scriptures is, as we have already stated, that conversion is not the work of the Spirit of God alone; there can be no real conversion independent of the truth, or word of God. But the birth of the Spirit is a work or change accomplished through the agency of the Spirit of God only; therefore the birth of the Spirit is not conversion.

Second. Begetting must always precede the birth; and as we have proved that the change commonly denominated conversion and being begotten of God are identical, we therefore prove again that conversion and the birth of the Spirit are not the same. The birth of the Spirit is a work to be accomplished after we are converted. Still let us bear in mind that this last change, or birth, is really the completion of the work commenced at conversion. Another fact forces itself upon our consideration, viz., we cannot believe God so as to bring about in us the change called conversion; that the truth or word of God is wholly unavailing to the accomplishment of this work in us, except that word be made powerfully efficient through the operation of the Spirit of God. Consequently, we find the following in Eph. iii. 16, 17, "That he would grant you according to the riches of his glory to be strengthened with might by his Spirit.... That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." Now this settles the question forever that Christ cannot dwell in our hearts by faith only as the Spirit of God performs its legitimate office work in creating the word of God in us, a vitalized, spiritual life power.

This begetting is spoken of by Paul, 1 Cor., iv. 15, in the following language: "In Christ Jesus I have begotten you through the gospel." How do we get into Christ? Paul says, in the above quotation, that it is by being begotten through the gospel. All who are in Christ, then, are, in this present time, in a begotten state, and therefore whatever advantages are by promise secured to those who are in Christ can only be gained by those who are begotten through the gospel; because this is the only way we can possibly get into Christ. The change spoken of so many times in other portions of the sacred word is also brought to view in the language of Christ, John xvii. 17. In his prayer for his people he says, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." How much mysticism has been thrown around the doctrine of sanctification!

The view taken of it by a large class of religionists is fruitful in fanaticism and evil because it leads people away from the word of God. It has been supposed to consist in a certain state of feeling. Consequently, acting upon this opinion with regard to the nature of this work, people frequently appoint public meetings to pray for sanctification. And when assembled, such earnest, energetic, and continued exertions, both in voice and limb, to reach the desired blessing, would impress you at once that the people were ready and willing, but the great work in hand was to persuade God to be willing. One good brother told me that he had knelt on his knees praying for this kind of sanctification till both knees had become callous. Now if he had the right idea of sanctification, how cruel it was in God to let him call so long and endure so much and not get the coveted blessing after all. To sanctify is simply to set apart for a sacred purpose. This is most effectually accomplished when we really believe the word of God. One reason why people are so fluctuating in what they term their christian experience is, that their supposed christianity is mere sensationism. When the change takes place spoken of in the use of such various terms in the Bible, this is reconciliation. It is reconciliation on this principle: our minds are in harmony with the mind of God. In the language of Paul, "We have the mind of Christ." In other words, we are "spiritually minded," which "is life and peace." God is wholly spiritual; and when we become spiritually minded we are reconciled to God, because our minds become spiritualized by receiving into them, through the Spirit and word of God, a germ of that life in which alone He exists. This is the only means of bringing us into union with God; therefore the only way we can possibly be reconciled to God. When we are begotten of God, it is of course the commencement of a new life. Now, as certain as this is true, none will ever attain unto that new life except those who are begotten here. All must readily see that the next great change after conversion, or begetting, is the last development, the completion of the work begun; in short, the birth of the Spirit. Mark, there is no intervening change between the begetting and the birth, save the growth toward that last great change. What is the birth? I answer, "And if the Spirit of him who raised our Lord Jesus, Messiah, from the dead, dwell in you; he who raised our Lord Jesus, Messiah, from the dead will also vivify your dead bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii. 11. (Syriac, by Murdock.) We are begotten here, but that change which is wholly the work of the Spirit of God is a resurrection from death, or its equivalent. How utterly foolish to suppose that any will come to the birth except they be begotten here. Paul's testimony, Phil. iii. 9 is, that in order to get a resurrection from death he must be in Christ. To be in Christ, we have proved, is to be "begotten through the gospel." Paul tells us again, 1 Cor. xv. 22, that on the same principle that we die in Adam, we shall be made alive in Christ. We die because we are partakers of Adam's corruptible nature; we are made alive because we get into Christ; and we get into Christ by being begotten by the incorruptible seed, the word of God. This is the commencement of a new life, the being made partakers of the Christ life; the becoming possessed of the germ of a future life; and when the great morning shall dawn, this life begun, will culminate in a resurrection from the dead to all who are begotten here, and positively to no others.

How harmonious is the word of God when viewed in the light of its glorious, unperverted truth.

How clearly can we see that all is consistent, philosophical, and in harmony with all that we know of the science of God's creation. O that God would spread the glorious light of the "Life in Jesus Christ alone" to the consolation and comfort of all christian hearts. With what holy joy and reasonable satisfaction can we contemplate the divine plan, instituted expressly to give life to a death-doomed race; and with what pleasure and earnest longing can we look forward to the time when the great plan shall be consummated, and mortality shall be swallowed up of life. Amen.

"THE DEAD KNOW NOT ANYTHING."

"So says the word of God." But our friends who believe that we are "intangible, immortal souls, dwelling in bodies of flesh," say that "it means that when a man is dead his body knows not anything." But that cannot be so, for with their view, "the immortal soul within is the intelligent part," and the body is simply "a case for that soul," and hence unintelligent. To say that "the body is intelligent while such a soul is in it," would be as absurd a statement as this that "the skull is intelligent while the brain is in it."

Now, with the popular view, the body never did know anything, hence the text cannot apply to it, but it must apply to something which when alive knew something, and which when dead knows nothing. If the soul spoken of is that intelligence, then it must refer to that. Hence a soul alive knows something, but a dead soul knows nothing. Then it proves that a soul can die and know nothing, hence the dogma of the natural immortality of the soul is a hoax, and contrary to the Bible and reason, for both declare that the man is wholly mortal. "The soul that sinneth it shall die."

Still, with the evidence of the Bible before us, men hear to traditions and fables. With the fact that "the dead know not anything," these misled men assure us that the dead not only know something but that they can even attend their own funerals, and hear all that the officiating ministers have to say about them, and can see their own bodies, their friends, etc.; but Christ declared to the Jews, "Many prophets and righteous men have desired to see those things which ye see, and have not seen them, and to hear those things which ye hear, and have not heard them."

Isn't it very strange that those dead prophets and righteous men should know nothing about what was going on in the earth in Christ's day, if those who die now-a-days do know, both seeing and hearing, what is going on in our midst?

But men are blinded by their preconceived opinions. The case brought to view in last week's HERALD concerning the supposed death of Sister Lye of this city, a number of years ago, is an illustration of this fact. Because after her revival from what was supposed to be death, she related what transpired in her room and in the church during that supposed state of death, many thought that her immortal soul, which they believed she had, had left the body and passed some time in the room where her body lay, then went into the meeting house, heard what was said there, afterwards came back to her body, and all was made alive again. This has been advanced as a proof that the dead do know considerable.

In reply, I affirm that the woman did not die, and no immortal soul left her body. If not so, then all must admit that every clairvoyant gets out of his or her body from fifty to three hundred or more times in a year. These clairvoyants go into a trance, and then tell us something that is transpiring a thousand miles off, describing persons, conversation, houses, streets, etc. etc., correctly. These things are well known. But they talk to us while in the trance state, and describe these things that are more or less distant from us, and if our opponents are correct in their apprehensions, then it proves that these clairvoyants are in the body and out of it; at the same time; for, while talking with us, they may be witnessing things a thousand miles away. My impression is, that it is best to abide by the sacred oracles; they declare "The dead know not anything." Then Sister Lye and the other clairvoyants were alive and not "out of the body" either.

A certain medium attempted to give me a positive proof that the dead do know something, and brought to view a circumstance which she said occurred in Plymouth, Mass., as the proof. Her statement was as follows: Two ladies were sitting together sewing one evening, and all at once the figure of a little girl stood in the doorway. This figure was dressed in white, and stood gazing at them for several moments, when one of the ladies, supposing that her little girl, who had been asleep in an adjoining room, was "up in her sleep," arose and went to the door, when the figure suddenly vanished. The mother was surprised, but seated herself again, when the same figure re-appeared. Both ladies looked at it attentively, and the mother thought she saw her little girl who died some time ago. To assure herself that it was not the one whom she had placed in the bed-room, she went there but saw nothing to give evidence that the child had been out of bed; so she thought it must be her deceased little girl who knew enough to come back again." The medium says, "What do you think of that?" I replied, "It is no proof to me whatever that the dead know anything, or that they are alive." At this answer she seemed astonished; but I gave her an instance, that came from equally as reliable a source. It was as follows:

A gentleman in Elliot, Me., told me, that one day he was at work in a cedar swamp with another man. Toward evening, he saw what he thought to be his wife, who had not died, coming toward the swamp. Both men saw her, and both recognized her as the first man's, Hanscomb's, wife. The sun-bonnet, calico dress, the features and all, were those of Mrs. Hanscomb. Mr. H. said, "Wife, what do you want?" No reply was made. The question was repeated, but elicited no reply. Both men thought it strange, while H. thought his wife had lost her reason. The men were somewhat alarmed, and soon started for their homes. The figure went ahead of them with a gliding motion. The men were sorely puzzed. Finally H. said to his friend as they came in sight of his own dwelling, "You had better go around that side of the house, and I will go round this side, and we can head her off." Both men then separated, and met again in front of the house, but no figure was to be seen there. H. found the door locked, and the key hanging on a nail near the window. He took the key, went into the house and waited for further developments.

Late in the evening his wife returned home. In answer to his questions, she told him that she had spent the afternoon and evening at a neighbor's. Had not been asleep since the previous night; had not been to the swamp. The next day he called at his neighbor's and the same information was given. His questions surprised all parties, and his relation of the circumstance at the swamp surprised them yet more.

I said to the medium, "What does that prove?" She was unable to give an answer. These are the slim supports that men rest upon, who do not listen "to the law and to the testimony." Andrew Jackson Davis, the noted spiritualist, and first clairvoyant subject of Prof. J. Stanley Grimes, sees with his associate spiritualists a plenty of just such objects as have been described. They reject the Word. Let us hold fast to it, and turn away from those who seek after familiar spirits, instead of making themselves familiar with the "word of God."

"The dead know not anything."

Yours, writing for immortality,
F. H. BURBANK.
Philadelphia, Penn., May, 20, 1867.

ABRAHAM'S TEMPER OR DISPOSITION.

In this aspect of his character Abraham was more like Jesus Christ, stood nearer to the most illustrious of his descendants than perhaps any man; than any at least I have seen, or have read of. What a contrast he offers to those sour, selfish, narrow-minded, mean, greedy, grasping, ill-tempered, or ill-conditioned Christians who present religion in a repulsive rather than in an attractive aspect, ever reminding us of the saying, "The grace of God can dwell where neither you nor I could!"

Where, for example, shall we find such a pattern of courteousness as Abraham offers for our imitation? It is the noon-tide hour, when, in hot southern lands, labor, which begins with the first blush of dawn, takes a pause, and breathing-time. Abraham sits in his tent-door enjoying its grateful shade, and, looking out on the plain of Mamre, from which the sun's fiery beams have driven men, bird, and panting beast to such shelter as rocks, and trees, and tents afford, he descries three men approaching; making for his tent, toiling along under the boiling heat. Strangers, neither clansmen, nor neighbors, nor friends, they have no claim on him. He may wait their approach, leaving them to solicit his hospitality. Not he. Abraham rises, nay, he runs to meet them; and mingling respect with kindness, courtly manners with the most benevolent intentions, he bows himself to the ground. Not one who says, "The favor which is worth the giving is worth the asking," he anticipates their request, and makes offer of his hospitality. But they may fear being burdensome to him. So, to remove any reluctance on their part to accept his kindness, he makes light of it—speaking of what he was about to offer as no tax on his generosity, as but "a morsel of bread." Nor is this all. With that delicate regard to others' feelings which true kindness prompts, he would make it appear that they will oblige him more by accepting, than he does them by offering, his hospitality. "My Lord, he says," addressing him who appeared the chief man of the three, "My Lord, if now I have found favor in thy sight, pass not away, I pray thee from thy servant; let a little water be fetched and wash your feet; and rest yourselves under the tree; and I will fetch a morsel of bread, and comfort ye your hearts—after that ye shall pass on." And in a short while—for Sarah and the servants are hastily summoned from their different occupations to supply the wants of the strangers—the three are seated at an ample b ard, Abraham giving the finishing touch to his courtesy by respectfully standing beside his guests while they eat. Throughout the whole transaction, he presents a beautiful model of what was once understood by that excellent, though now much misapplied term, "a gentleman." This is what every Christian should be. Modern use has greatly perverted the words gentleman and gentlewoman from their original and excellent meaning. What they indicate cannot be conveyed by a patent of nobility. It belongs to no rank. It is the ornament of the highest, and should be the ambition of the humblest. The temper and manners these terms express are compressed into this one brief exhortation of the Apostle, "Be courteous." Courteousness is a Christian duty; and nowhere can a better example of it be found than in this story—the eight verses of Genesis which relate it containing a better lesson on true politeness than the whole volume of "Lord Chesterfield's Letters to his Son."

Abraham's generosity, a still higher virtue, is equally remarkable. In proof of that, look to the manner in which he treated Lot, his nephew. Early deprived of a parent's care, fatherless, if not also motherless, Lot is, I may say, adopted by Abraham—received into his nest, taken under his sheltering wing. Not so unhappy as some who have had no other return for such kindness as he rendered Lot than the basest, blackest ingratitude, whose lives have been embittered and their bosoms stung by those they had kindly nursed, still Abraham's connection with Lot cost him much care and trouble. Quarrels arose between their servants, and matters at length came to this pass—that they must part. Now, there can be no doubt that Lot lay under the strongest obligations to Abraham. It was his part to accept his uncle's judgment in this juncture, and leave to his decision their separate paths in life. The patriarch had been a father to him—a friend kinder than many fathers. Besides, Abraham was the elder of the two, and also the greater of the two: more than that, the land of Canaan, which was Lot's only by sufferance, was his by promise. Abraham might have said to Lot, "You have no right whatever to this land, to a foot of it; go in peace, but seek your portion elsewhere. Such is my decision: and, remember, I have power to enforce it." Yet the uncle generously bestows on the nephew a share of his own property: more than that, as if he was the younger and also the weaker of the two, as if the land of Canaan had been promised to the other rather than to him, as if he had been the party who had received rather than conferred favors, in determining their respective positions Abraham leaves the choice to Lot. He will take Lot's leavings. "Let there be no strife, I pray thee," says this right nobleman, "between me and thee. We be brethren. Is not the whole land before thee? If thou wilt take the left hand I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, I will go to the left." What self-denial, self-control, self-sacrifice in that speech! What liberal and magnanimous generosity his! What a model of a Christian this man!

Men often do wrong by insisting on their rights. Far be that from Abraham! He seeks not his own, but the things of others; and here offers one of the costliest sacrifices ever laid on the altar of peace. This sacrifice, be it remarked and remembered, did not go without its reward. Abraham found it; as, I cannot doubt, he very sensibly and very gratefully felt on that eventful morning when, standing on Bethel's rocky heights, he turned his gaze from the plain—Lot's choice—all smoking like a burning furnace, to the green hills around dotted with his flocks; to his herds safely browsing on the dewy pastures, and to the tents below, where his family were reposing beneath the shadow of the shield of God—every head laid on its pillow of sweet sleep and peace. Still, as then, let me add, good men will, and shall sooner or later, profit by every sacrifice they make for peace. Let us "seek peace and pursue it."

But never did Abraham, or any one else, present a finer model of disinterested generosity and true nobility of mind than he, amid scenes that usually inflame the worst and most selfish passions of our nature. He stands on a field strewn with the ghastly dead; the air is filled with the shouts of conquerors and the groans of captives; a rich spoil lies scattered at his feet; his cheek is still red with the flush, and his sword with the blood of battle—and his bearing there offers an example of one of those bright gleams which occasionally relieve the horrors and gild the lurid clouds of war. A man of peace, the battle was not of his seeking. But the news had reached his tents that Lot and his family are prisoners. The tidings awaken all his old affections. His trumpet sounds to arms. Lot must be rescued. With more than three hundred retainers following his banner, he pushes on at their head; overtakes the foe; and, throwing himself on their ranks, achieves a surprise, a rescue, and a signal victory. By the rights of war the spoil, at least the greater part of it, falls to him; and therefore the King of Sodom, content to get back his subjects, and perhaps the captives to boot says, "Give me the persons and take the goods to thyself." He might have done so. Many would have done so—all, indeed, who, taking advantage of forms of law, and regardless of justice, gratitude, and the claims of others, insist on their legal rights. Not so did Abraham. What a rebuke his conduct administers to such mean and mercenary spirits! What an example his of that high Christian principle that sets hum anity and justice above mere legal claims—the law of God, in fact, above the law of man—and scorns to touch what the latter may through its imperfections grant, but a higher law, the golden rule, "As ye would that others should do unto you, do ye also unto them," forbids a man to take. With a single eye to the glory of his God and the just claims of the unfortunate, Abraham gives up his legal rights; and to the King of Sodom returns this magnanimous answer, "I have lift up mine hand unto the Lord, the most high God, the possessor of heaven and of earth, that I will not take from a thread to a shoe latchet, lest thou shouldest say, I have made Abraham rich. Here is a pattern to copy! Playing as high-minded a part as this grand old patriarch, equally well illustrating the Christian maxim, "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory to God," how would we adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour?—Sunday Magazine.

EXTRAORDINARY HALLUCINATION.

Mrs. Ann Thwaites, who departed this life in the year 1865, was the widow of a prosperous tea merchant of London, and the fortunate possessor of about $2,000,000. She had, at the time of her death, a sister, Mrs. Tebbitt, and several nephews and neices. To them, as well as to almost everybody, it would appear, with whom she had ever come into contact, she left small legacies. The bulk of her properity she bequeathed to Mr. John Sims Smith, a medical gentleman who had once brought her through a dangerous sickness, and to his brother, Mr. Samuel Smith, who had been for years the manager of her property. The probate of the will, offered by these two gentlemen, was resisted by the heirs at law, on the grounds that the instrument had been procured by undue influence, and that the deceased was not of sound disposing mind.

On the point of undue influence, no testimony thus far seems to have been elicited which ought to shake the validity of the document in dispute; but of the insanity of the testatrix there can hardly be any rational doubt. It is true that a great many witnesses—several of them, to be sure, legatees under the will—bore testimony to the worthy widow's shrewdness in money matters, and sharp, business-like habits. Mr. Edward Smith, son of the medical gentleman aforementioned, thought he had never known a saner woman; but then she had given him £10,000. A surgeon gave a favorable opinion of her strength of mind, and her eminent ability as a whist player. But there were some awkward facts to set off against these opinions. In the first place Mrs. Thwaites believed herself to be the Holy Ghost. Mr. John Sims Smith, she said, was God the Father. Her ideas as to the Trinity, however, were rather foggy, for she had faith, also in an invisible Creator; and when her husband died she refused to put on mourning for him because he was the devil. She was several degrees above God, who could do nothing without her; and if she died, chaos would come again. Fortunately, however, she was immortal. She furnished apartments in her house in Hyde Park Gardens at an expense of $125,000, expecting to be delivered there of the Saviour of the world. In a few years she was to come into possession of Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle. When she hemmed dusters, as she did sometimes in a state of temporary blindness, God put the needle in at one side of the cloth and the devil drew it out at the other. "I have power," said she one day, "over the whole of creation. It was through me the cholera came. My Father said to me, 'my dear, turn on the screw,' and the cholera came. After that he said, 'Turn it off,' and then it disappeared." Her husband she had drawn through the moon by his own gross electricity, and through the dark volcanoes of the earth, and he now reigned king of the devil. If she was perplexed how to act, she used to speak to God about the matter, and he would say, "My dear, do so, and so, and I will see you through."

Taking these astounding hallucinations in connection with the fact that she cherished animosity toward most of her relations, we cannot easily believe that with all her shrewdness and business habits, and cleverness at whist, she was a very fit person to dispose of the large sum of money which she inherited from her husband, "the king of the devil." The counsel for the proponents seem to have relied chiefly on the argument that aberrations upon certain particular points, or as one of the advocates mildly expressed it, "certain mystical and peculiar views of religion," were in no manner inconsistent with general soundness of mind; so that Mrs. Thwaites, in spite of her enthusiastic sentiments, was quite as capable of making a will as John Bunyan or Swedenborg, or Dr. Cumming. The case was not ended at last accounts.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Tree of Life.

Br. Storrs:—I saw in the 27th number of the Herald of Life an article in which the writer, speaking of the tree of life, seems laboring under some mistake. He says: "But there was a provision made to continue Adam's life during his entire probation, be that probation longer or shorter; that provision was the tree of life." Yet he positively denies that God's original plan can fail. Then I would ask what plan he has provided to keep us, Adam's children, alive during our probation, be it longer or shorter? We have no access to the tree of life until we are put on probation, much less until our probation ends. Our children are not probationers until they are old enough to act for themselves; nor are adults on probation until they come in contact with divine truth. Nor was Adam on probation until the command was given him. It will not avail anything to say the command is gone out into all the world, and every individual is thereby probationated; for it is written, "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God, ...and without faith it is impossible to please him." He says, it is clear to his mind that Adam did eat of the tree of life; but denies that it was ever designed to impart immortality; notwithstanding the text, "lest he should eat and live forever." He seems to overlook the original plan entirely by trying to find it. He asserts that the original plan of God in bestowing immortality on man was only through "the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead." But he ought to know that Spirit cannot be obtained only through obedience to God. Therefore the true original plan was to give immortality to none but the obedient. Adam's right to the tree of life hung on this obedience to God; for as soon as he disobeyed he was driven away from it, having forfeited his right to it. But how does any one know that he did eat of it? There is no more evidence of it than there is that he had an immortal soul, and did not need either the tree of life or the Spirit that raised up Jesus from the dead, in order to obtain immortality. Of the two the latter is the more reasonable. I also admit that God has never changed his original designs, and never will; but he has changed the dispensation of grace several times. First, there was the Adamic dispensation, which began and ended with Adam; then followed the patriarchal, which ended at the time the children of Israel came out of Egypt, when every man killed his own lamb, and offered his own sacrifice; that is, the head of every family officiated as priest in his own household. Next followed the Aaronic priesthood, and the Mosaic, or law dispensation. And now, having gone by that, we are under the gospel dispensation. And now why is Adam dragged down to this dispensation, and his immortality made to hang on his faith in Christ, and in the efficacy of the Spirit that raised him from the dead?

Now let us come to the point. Did God create man and leave him no means of obtaining eternal life before he sinned? He could not have been just in so doing. The writer to whom I refer says it was not in the tree of life: then it was nowhere; for it was not in Jesus, or in the Spirit that raised him up; for neither of these was intimated to him before he sinned. The first intimation of a Messiah given to man was—"The seed of the woman to bruise the serpent's head." This was after Adam sinned. Without sin there would have been no need of a Saviour, and none would have been given. So, on the writer's theory, mankind would have lived on in obedience to God and died like beasts, without a resurrection to eternal life. "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

But not so: if Adam had not sinned he would have eaten of the tree of life and lived forever; and the reason why he was driven away from it is, because sinners have no right to live forever. If the writer is correct, there is no use of the tree of life in the world to come; but it will certainly exist there. Rev. ii. 7, and xxii. 2.

I may be mistaken; but he seems to design to put up the bars and wedge them up so tight as to shut a certain people out of the age to come, and to prevent them from eating of the tree of life and living forever. Hope he may retrace his steps, see his error, and live forever.

Z. Campbell.

Judge Edmonds lectured before the Spiritualists of Brooklyn, and stated among other things that this sect now numbers four millions of believers.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, MAY 29, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will est where it ought.

"Another Soul."

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian church held its convocation at Cincinnati, Ohio, recently. The Daily Gazette of that city gives a report of several sermons preached there by "eminent divines." Among them is one by Rev. W. D. Howard, on "The Blessings of Adoption." Among other things Mr. H said:

"God works a mighty change upon those whom he adopts; he makes them gentle and good, puts another and nobler soul within them. It is as when you take a branch of one tree and engraft it upon the body of another. The tree, by its sap and juices, infuses life and much of its own character into the adopted branch, and it grows and becomes a vigorous tree."

Now, we like that idea of "another soul." The fact is, the natural man has an animal soul, and no other by his natural birth; consequently, it is a perishing, corruptible soul; totally destitute of any principle of immortality. Hence he needs and must have "another and a nobler soul" put "within him." Truly to accomplish this, "God works a mighty change" in those whom he is preparing for full adoption, which is not completed till the resurrection.

The illustration of "engrafting," also, we like. It is scriptural. Christ is "the vine:" those "engrafted" into him have "another soul" given them; the life of which is not of themselves. The vine, or "tree, by its sap and juices, infuses life....into the adopted branch." That is the true doctrine. "Christ is our life;" and "another soul" is only derived from him, by a union with him. The old "soul" is a mortal, corruptible, dying soul; for the "soul that sinneth it shall DIE:" and "all have sinned," and hence all the old animal souls are doomed to "death, the wages of sin." Let all see to it that they get "another soul" before death overtakes the old soul; for, if they die without "another soul," death will hold them eternally in its dominion; for it is only by "another soul," whose life is "infused" by "the sap and juices" of the living Vine, or Tree of Life, Christ Jesus, that any man can get a resurrection from the dead, or a life in the future state; and such as attain to that state, "cannot die any more," because they have received "another soul;" an immortal, undying soul. That is when and where an immortal soul first makes its appearance, or truly has existence. It is by virtue of a union with Christ, the Life-giver, who is "the resurrection and the life," that men attain to a life hereafter, and by which, only, is secured immortality, endless life. Let none forget this truth or despise it, lest that come upon them which is written, "Behold ye despisers, and wonder, and PERISH;" for God has provided no other way, or medium, for an entrance into life hereafter except Christ Jesus. All who reject or neglect Him will "utterly perish in their own corruption;" having no principle of immortality themselves.

Prophecy and the Signs of the Times.

Some may wonder that we say no more on these topics. One principle reason is, we wish not to seem even to countenance a state of excitement, which we believe to be an injury to true piety. We have seen too much of this in the last twenty-five years to be easily drawn into that state in which nearly all definite time setters are found. The tendency of nearly all who make the advent the chief matter of their preaching or writing is to run into a "definite time" setting for the event; and that is followed too often, with an uncharitable spirit towards all who do not accept their time conclusions. We know enough of such things to wish to keep clear of such a result, believing it neither promotes piety nor a preparation to meet the Lord. We have no faith in any of the calculations about the "definite time" of the conclusion of the present age, based on figures; but we are settled that the end is not very distant. Everything in the Eastern world indicates the speedy overthrow of the "harlot woman," or the downfall of "mystic Babylon"; which event is closely connected with the second advent of Christ to reign on the earth and over the nations.

Let us all watch and pray, and not suffer ourselves to be carried into any whirlpool of excitement, whether it comes from politicians, speculators, or religionists of any class or character. A calm faith in God our Saviour, and resting in him as our hope and joy, is what we all most need to fit us for the coming events, now evidently "nigh at hand." Let us all strive to cultivate the meek and lowly character of our blessed Lord. So shall it be well with us when he calls us to himself, though it may be through fiery trials.

"Pounding Children."

[We take the following from the New York Tribune, and commend it to all parents and others having charge of children. We hope, also, they will be enabled to see that the idea of a "pounding" God, who is to pound young and old sinners "to all eternity," or for a short time after a resurrection, with no design of making them behave better, is not half as good as that of the mistaken minister who "pounded" his child to death to make him say his prayers. Read and learn that pounding never made a child love its parent; and the preaching of a "pounding" God never led a child of Adam to love God, but has made many a one an infidel; and that is its natural, if not inevitable tendency.]

The public sensibilities have recently been outraged by several well-authenticated reports of protracted, persistent, inhuman tortures inflicted on mere infants by their parents or guardians respectively—tortures which have repeatedly induced death. Some of the torturers were low, ignorant, drunken brutes, as might be expected; but others held respectable positions in society, one of them being a clergyman in fair standing. That some of the children of tender years, heedlessly "bound to service" by some asylum or other public charity, should be fearfully misused, though deplorable, is by no means amazing; but that a father should maul and maim his own little child, even to the extent of beating out its tender life, would seem so contrary to nature, such a libel on our race, as to be absolutely incredible. Yet the evidence that it has been done—not once only, but many times—not among savages in some dark age, but in this focus of christian civilization in the year of grace 1866, it is too direct and irresistible to be doubted.

Nor will it do to assume that the perpetrators of these horrors were moral monsters. Some of them, we know, are men brutalized, or rather demonized, by habitual drunkenness; but others were persons of good habits, fair moral character, and even of unexceptionable church standing. The clergyman who killed his little son at Medina, N. Y., though mentally weak, had not previously been regarded as depraved. Had he known enough to stop beating his child a little short of killing him, he might have lived out his own days under the mantle of respectability and in the unmingled odor of sanctity.

We deem him, with others of like unhappy fortune and evil fame, victims of a false conception of parental rights and duties. They had been told that to "spare the rod" was to "spoil the child"—that it was their duty to constrain him to obedience at any cost. He had failed to do what was required of him—he must be made to do it at any cost—and, to effect this, the infliction of physical pain was his only resource. So he by turns beat and exhorted (or prayed) until the exhortations having proved ineffectual, the beating did its perfect work; achieving not subjugation, but death. Can we wonder that the hapless parent regards himself as rather unlucky than depraved—as misjudging rather than criminal?

The great mass of parents have yet to learn that their displeasure with a child is no reason and no excuse for beating it. Nor does the simple fact that it has done wrong give them warrant to subject it to physical torture. Here, for instance, is a child of five to ten years, who in the hope of thereby attaining enjoyment or escaping punishment has told a lie. The father, naturally indignant, thereupon gives it a beating. What relation has the penalty to the offence? or rather, what good result may be fairly expected from the beating? Can you rationally expect it to love and speak the truth because you have mauled it? Is it not far more likely to hate and loathe you? That child will be a good deal more apt henceforth to tell one lie to hide another than to abhor and shun lying altogether.

"But may not a parent justifiably use force to restrain a child from evil doing?"

Certainly. If the child insists on throwing the hammer at the looking glass, or doing any wanton, malicious mischief, the requisite force may be employed to constrain it into better behavior. But to restrain from evil doing is one thing; to inflict pain because evil has been done is quite another. Many a child has been hardened into inveterate depravity by chastisements inflicted under the mistaken notion that its evil propensities might thus be subdued and eradicated.

We beg every parent who is prone to beating his child to recall the experiences of his own childhood, and consider what were the effects on his moral nature of any and every penal infliction he ever endured. We doubt that so many as one in ten can fairly say that all the parental beating to which he was subjected did him as much moral good as harm.

We are not pleading for indulgence. Every child should be taught to know the right and to do it. What we urge is that the rod, the whip, the cudgel, are implements of parental discipline which have on the whole done far more evil than good—that more children have been confirmed and strengthened in wrong doing than rescued therefrom by the infliction of physical pain. How many have been bludgeoned into idiocy or permanent mental infirmity by misjuding fathers can never be known till the sea shall give up her dead. There are abundant means whereby a parent may evince his displeasure, his sorrow, in view of the faults of his child, without mauling it. Withdraw or withhold indulgences which you would gladly have accorded, had not your past confidence been abused—let your child realize that your loss of faith in its integrity inevitably subjects it to privations and restrictions—show that your love for it constrains you, most reluctantly, to render it less happy because of its transgressions—but keep the lash for unreasoning brutes, and beware of employing it to deface and disfigure the image of God.

Annihilation.

"There is not one passage in all God's word that even implies, much less announces, the idea of annihilation in respect to man, unless it be in respect to man as man, and not in respect to his constituent parts. As to those parts the body nor spirit is annihilated, although man, viewed as a composite being, ceases at death, and continues thus till the resurrection. Such a cessation as this we ever have asserted, for it is plainly announced by most of the passages urged against us by our adversaries.—Landis, on Immortality, page 225, published by the Methodist Book Concern.

The annihilation of "man as man" is all we ever contended for. We never did hold what Landis' insinuation affirms, that the "constituent parts," which went to make man, were annihilated. But death—as the penalty of the divine law—leaves those "parts" just in the same condition they were in before man's creation. "Dust thou art, unto dust shalt thou return," is the declaration of the Lord God. That, surely, is a perfect dissolution, or dissolving of the man. Landis has granted us, in the above concession, all we have ever affirmed; and says, moreover, "Such a cessation as this we ever have asserted"! We place a mark of surprise after this announcement of L., and we think his Editor ought to have done the same; for it must have been a new thought in the "orthodox" theory of immortality, which has always affirmed "the soul is the man."

Is the Identity Lost in Death?

A correspondent writes us, "I heard a sermon on the immortality of the soul, in which the preacher dwelt for some time on the point, 'If man die as a whole, then their identity would be lost; therefore, the righteous would have to be recreated." He asks if we cannot "give a condensed note of "our" views on that point."

We can. Such preachers "do err, not knowing the scriptures, nor the power of God." If David could say, "I am fearfully and wonderfully made, ... Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being unperfect: and in thy book all my members were written, which in continuance"—yomeem, days—"were fashioned, when as yet there was none of them," Psa. cxxxix. 14–16, surely a christian may say, Though men die as a whole, their identity would not "be lost": the identity is just as safe and secure in God's hands after death—if he pleases to preserve it—as before we came into life at first. Calling it a re-creation does not frighten us; nor does the cry of "absurd" or "impossible"; for we have learned "what God has promised he is able also to perform"; and he needs no scholastic dabblers, with their inventions of worldly wisdom, to help him bring "again into existence" (Septuagint of Job xiv. 14.) those who "shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, even the resurrection from the dead." Lk. xx 35. It is really sickening to hear men who profess to believe God is infinite in wisdom and power, talk as if they knew what he cannot do! They seem to think they must help him out of difficulty, by furnishing a soul of some sort that does not or cannot die; so that infinite knowledge and power need not be overtasked to preserve the "identity" of the righteous! Alas! by worldly wisdom men never did and never will find out God. God has pledged himself to raise "the dead in Christ," and that is enough. If they were not "dead as a whole," then "as a whole" they need no resurrection and cannot have one. The identity of the righteous is that of members of Christ's body, and their life is hid in him, and when Christ, who is their life, shall appear, then shall they also appear with him in glory. See Col. iii. 3, 4. As to the wicked dead, they have no identity of life; for, "they are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise." See Isa. xxvi. 14. "Like sheep they are laid in the grave; death shall feed on them." See Psa. xlix. throughout.

Judgment.

"The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son....because he is the Son of man." John v, 22, 27. Jesus "was tempted in all points like as we are," and was mighty in that he knew no sin; therefore God laid help (i. e., his holy Spirit) upon him. He was a wanderer upon the earth; was spit on, reviled, stoned; he suffered hunger and thirst; had not where to lay his head. He learned obedience by the things which he suffered. The Captain of our salvation was made perfect through suffering. Why should he not be a merciful high priest? Has he not drunk the gall and wormwood of this bitter life? Is there not a good and sufficient reason why he should be Judge of our race, "because he is the Son of man"? Jesus declares, John viii. 15, "I judge no man." John xii 48, "The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day." Paul adds, "If we would judge ourselves we should not be judged." 1 Cor. xi. 31. How shall we judge ourselves? Answer: Come to the word and learn the will of God concerning us. "Beloved, if our conscience accuse us, God is greater than our conscience:" but if our (enlightened) conscience excuse us, and the holy Spirit bears witness with our spirits that our sins are forgiven, what further judgment do we need? Are we not adjudged to life? Have we not received the earnest of our redemption? In other words, "If the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead, dwell in us," God stands pledged to raise us up to life everlasting. There is no need of a future judgment on such as have the holy Spirit in them. "He that believeth not is condemned already;" John iii. 18: that is, He was condemned in his Adamic nature before Christ came into the world. A conditional pardon was offered to him: he rejects it. His condition is made neither better nor worse. He was and is under the sentence of death: he will have no future judgment except that of execution. God will not torment him because he would not accept of life in that goodly land, where the inhabitants shall never say, "I am sick."

W. H. Hanford.

New York.

Self-knowledge and Humility.

Dear Brother:—I study the scriptures. They teach me self-knowledge, and divest me of vain conceit, vanity, or foolish pride. I esteem it as self evident that self-knowledge is the foundation of humility, and this knowledge is the gift of God. How amiable and lovely it makes any one appear, and how calm, serene, and happy are all who are really robed in humility. Who can sufficiently appreciate the enjoyments of the truly contrite and humble? They look to God with unwavering trust, and feel and know that all their blessings come from him alone through Jesus Christ, our Life-giver. Humility is one of the most striking traits in the character of a christian, and the strongest evidence that he who possesses it is taught of God. Without it there is but little or no self cultivation that can ever profit. "Blessed are the poor in spirit, for theirs is the kingdom of heaven." And yet this pure, unmixed humility aspires after a fame that infinitely transcends all that is deemed great or honorable or glorious among the exalted ones of worldly fame. May every one who professes to be religious, study to be humble and learn of Christ. Amen.

James ——

Monroe, N. C, May 15, 1867.

What we see in Jesus.

We behold in Jesus a most beautiful and lovely exhibition of the most perfect virtue. We see virtue in him in its purest and most affecting forms. We see respect for the will of God, and reliance on God's providence; we see zeal for truth and righteousness, and a love for all mankind; we see abhorrence of iniquity, and pity for the fallen and abandoned; we see tenderness for the misguided populace, and strong disapprobation of their false leaders; we see spotless purity, and strict temperance: great consciousness of personal worth and sanctity, and remarkable humility; we see great zeal, and great patience; great ardor, and yet great sobriety; we see a mind that looks forward to far distant ages, yet attending to the interests and the duties of the present moment; we see a heart so tender that it weeps for the thoughtless and abandoned, yet so strong that it bears reproaches, desertions, persecutions, and treachery without a moment's wavering; we see a true enjoyment of life, and yet a readiness for a premature and cruel death; we see constant activity, and no bustle; constant beneficence, and no ostentation; youth and temptation, yet prudence and straightforwardness; great poverty, and cheerful contentment; a perfect contempt for riches and worldly honors, without surliness or sullenness; without superstition, and yet without fanaticism; fond of retirement and meditation, yet active in society, making it his business to go about doing good. But I cannot describe his character; it is so complete, and so completely lovely. I cannot describe what I feel when I contemplate it: I am so filled with admiration, I am so lost in its loveliness, that I can not refrain from tears. Well, we have this character presented before us in the Gospels; it forms the great subject of the Gospel story. We have this lovely man, this wonderful teacher, this great reformer, this ceaseless benefactor of mankind, this friend, this advocate, this example of all that is most pure and good and god-like, presented to our view on every page.

Another great fact presents itself. This great and singular benefactor of mankind; this lover of truth; this friend of righteousness; this favorite of God; this servant and Saviour of our race, is a man of sorrows, and has not where to lay his head. He is reviled and slandered; he is hated and persecuted. Even the priests and the scribes, the most forward pretenders to religion; and the Pharisees, the richest and most popular of the religious sects, did hate and slander him. They reviled him horribly. They called him a sabbath-breaker, a seditious man, a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber, a companion of publicans and sinners, a Samaritan, a madman, a blasphemer and a devil. Here is another great practical lesson. It is this: That sin is strongest and securest when it names itself religion; that error is strongest when it calls itself theology or the word of the Lord; that error and sin, as they exist among orthodox sectarians and hireling theologians, are the greatest of all evils, and call for special rebuke and denunciation; that they cannot be destroyed without the spirit of martyrdom, nor perhaps without martyrdom itself; but that the toils and the sufferings of the truthful and the good shall bring them down to the dust, and make them a loathing and an abomination to all generations.

The Gospel assures us that the persecuted and martyred reformer was raised from the dead; was shown alive to many witnesses, and was received to glory. They thus encourage us to count our losses gain; to regard the power of our persecutors as weakness; to look on death as a conquered enemy, and a resurrection from it as the beginning of more extensive labors and successes in the cause of truth and righteousness.

A Life Lover.

Rufus Wendell at Fort Plain.

[Preparatory Remarks.—The matter which, in my paragraph of last week, was promised for this number I have been variously hindered from preparing seasonably. I have under way an article on "Labor in New Fields," which, were it completed, would still be rather long for the inside page. As the article is not anywise likely to be too short, I take from it the following, which is the introduction of the discourse which I preached on the evening of May 8th in the Universalist church in Fort Plain, N. Y.—R. W.]

If the audience will indulge me in a few introductory words, I wish to say that I gratefully appreciate the courtesy and kindness of those who have invited me to speak here this evening. The friends to whom I am indebted for this privilege understand—well understand, I presume—that the view I hold on the subject of human nature and human destiny, is neither that of Universalism on the one hand, nor that of orthodoxy on the other; and I take it for granted that they expect, not only that I will unhesitatingly declare and, as far as I am able, maintain my own convictions of truth, but that I will refer to opposing systems of belief whenever it may seem to me that my argument can be made clearer or stronger by such means. These liberties I shall freely use; not, I trust, in the spirit or with the purpose of a mere controversialist, but as one who is seeking to ascertain and unfold the real teachings of God's Word on a subject of the deepest importance. Not intentionally shall I utter a single word that can wound the feelings of any whose views I may controvert as unsupported by the oracles of God. I shall endeavor to bear in mind that hard words are a poor atonement for soft arguments. When I speak of the orthodox, I shall refer to those who profess to find the doctrine of eternal torment in the Bible. Genuine orthodoxy I of course believe repudiates that dogma, but, for the sake of avoiding an inconvenient circumlocution, I shall content myself to call that orthodoxy which is reputedly so. And when I speak of Universalists, my reference will be to those who believe the final holiness and happiness of all men to be a doctrine of the holy scriptures. I have only to add, before introducing my subject, that for every opinion I may express, and every interpretation I may offer, I hold myself responsible to any one in the audience who will undertake to show me the way of the Lord more perfectly. Any opinion that I may offer for your acceptance, that will not endure the test of the most searching scrutiny, must in the nature of the case, be worthless; and the man who helps me to get rid of error is my benefactor and deserves my gratitude. The precept of Paul should be with us all a practical maxim—"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good."

The "Smutty Grist."

A DIALOGUE.

A.—Who has the "smutty grist" now?

B.—Hiram.

A.—In what does it consist?

B.—In a "mortal resurrection."

A.—Why is such a resurrection smutty?

B.—Because it is a blasted existence.

A.—"How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" 1 Cor., xv. 35.

B.—Hiram says, "The same body that was buried is raised from the dead."

A.—Suppose a man has lost a limb; is a drunken bloated, sot, what then?

B.—Hiram says, "If a man was buried with one leg he will come up with one leg; if a drunken, bloated sot, he will be raised from the dead a drunken, bloated sot."

A.—Horrible! May not Hiram have a "darling theory" to save? What does the Bible teach?

B.—If Hiram admitted 1 Cor. xv. 52—"The dead shall be raised incorruptible," or our Lord's words, Luke xx. 36, "Are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection," his theory would be stranded.

A.—"With what body do they come?" Is it the mortal body that we put in the grave?

B.—"Thou sowest not that body that shall be." 1 Cor. xv. 37.

A.—"The dead shall be raised incorruptible;" that is, says Hiram, "be raised from earth up to heaven."

B.—The dead are sown in the grave—sown in weakness: the dead will be raised up out of the grave "in power—in glory."

A.—Does not Paul say, that "this mortal must put on immortality?"

B.—Yes.

A.—Must not the saint be raised mortal in order to put on immortality?

B.—No. "This mortal"—i. e., Paul then living, the image of the earthy—"must"—in the future—"put on immortality," or "the image of the heavenly;" as David said, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness." "It (the dead) is sown in (the grave of) corruption; it is raised (from the grave) in incorruption: it is sown a natural (animal) body, it is raised a spiritual body." Truly, a mortal resurrection is a "smutty grist." Who would have thought that one who has called the views of others a "smutty grist," would so soon have put one in the market himself? How art thou fallen, O Hiram, son of the Camp: thou that didst strengthen the churches, and didst greatly weaken the sons of Anak! Surely Delilah or Jezebel has shorn thee of thy locks. I fear you have drunk of that fornicating wine (the torment theory) with which all nations have been made drunken. "Be watchful, therefore, and repent." Call no more hard names (see Isa. lxvi. 5.) "Feed the flock of God;" not with gall and wormwood, or "smutty" grain, but with the pure wheat. From your brother in Christ, who is admonished to "provoke to love and good works."—Crisis please copy.

W. H. Hanford.

New York.

The Righteous, Only, Live Again.

Is it not evident, when Job uttered the language recorded in chap. vii. and x., that he understood the righteous only would live again? I understand him to say, chap. vii. 21, simply this, If my transgressions are not pardoned, and my iniquity is not taken away, I shall sleep in the dust a perpetual sleep; and when the time comes for the dead to be judged, I shall have no existence, no life: unworthy to obtain a resurrection, the wrath of God will abide on me. Again, chap. x. 21, 22, in view of his sins, he speaks of going to a land of darkness from whence he should not return. Does not that agree with the declaration recorded in chap. xxi. 32, where he is speaking of the sinner—"Yet he shall be brought to the grave and shall remain in the tomb?" It appears to me there was a reason for the question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" It is plain to me, if we would live again, we must be partakers of that Spirit which raised Christ from the dead—that the resurrection is the crisis—that it is the hope brought to light in the Gospel. Lord, give thy children more of that Spirit, that they may be thoroughly regenerated and finally born into the kingdom of heaven.

A. G. H.

Half of the Widow's Mite.

A gentleman called upon a rich friend for some charity.

"Yes, I must give you my mite," said the rich man.

"Do you mean the widow's mite?" asked the solicitor.

"Certainly," was the answer.

"I shall be satisfied with half as much as she gave," said his friend. "How much are you worth?"

"Seventy thousand dollars."

"Give me, then, your check for thirty-five thousand; that will be half as much as the widow gave; for she, you know, gave her all."

The rich man was cornered. Covetous people often try to shelter themselves behind the widow's mite, and under the cover of her contribution give meanly to the Redeemer's cause. Her example, indeed, rightly interpreted, would pluck selfishness out of the soul, and fill to overflowing the channels of true benevolence.

Letters and Extracts.

From R. W. Neale.

Southington, Conn., May 20, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—We have had a specimen of Prof. Mattison's knowledge of the immortality of the soul in Southington. About the 1st of March, the brethren and sisters thought it duty to have a series of meetings. We accordingly rented a church that was unoccupied, formerly Unitarian. We continued our meetings for several weeks, during which time the people became very much interested in the great truths of the Bible, and a goodly number saw and embraced them and united themselves with the despised company. The churches began to be alarmed, and something must be done, as their "craft was in danger;" so they sent for the "D. D." above named, and the churches all united to put down the "heretics." As we wanted to get all the light we could, we went and heard him; and when he had closed his third lecture, the people were thoroughly satisfied that he was quite a blackguard. The name of "George Storrs" was used freely every evening. He brought up some things about him in the discussion of '54 that I happened to know were false; such as suppressing some of his articles and selecting such as you thought would do to put in the Examiner. He would commence his lecture by telling the people George Storrs had gone over into non-resurrection, and would put on such a coloring to that doctrine that some of the hearers thought it awful. He related the circumstance of your bringing Hobbes on to the stand as a witness to prove that the doctrine you were then discussing was of earlier origin, than he had said. Mattison says, "George Storrs said, I have found a christian writer of such a date, and he says so and so." "And," says Mattison to the congregation, "I went and examined; and who do you think the christian writer was? It was Hobbes, the Deist." (Great laughter.)

We challenged him twice to discuss it; but he refused, saying he did not want to fight. I think I can safely say he has done us no harm. The Lord reward him according to his works.

Note by the Editor.—Whoever will read our "Discussion" with the noted "Prof." Br. Neale speaks of, will find that the said personage has not lost his faculty for willful misstatements since he has been made a "D. D." The same propensity to "do evil that good may come," still cleaves to him. He knows we never "suppressed" any of his articles, or "selected" any part of them. We published all he sent us for the Examiner relating to the discussion between us: and he knows that Hobbes was not a "Deist;" for he lived and died a member of the church of England, "and received burial under its forms." This fact was clearly brought out in the conclusion of our discussion with the shameless "Prof.," who still reiterates the falsehood that Hobbes was a "deist." Hobbes rejected the doctrine of inherent immortality: for this, all manner of deception has been resorted to, in order to blacken his character. He was not only a member of the English "National church," but held the doctrine of that church in relation to the Godhead, (called "the Trinity") Is such a man a "deist?" We do not find that he differed from the main doctrines of that church except on the immortality question. The lie about the scene of his death has been so abundantly refuted that even the "Prof." should blush to repeat it. Hobbes lived to the age of 92, and died in peace. His biographer says:

"His last years and days were characterized by cheerfulness, activity, and soundness of mind."...."He early embraced the christian religion, and was equally ready to defend its tenets when attacked by Papists or Sectaries." "He had great aversion to theological controversies, but was much inclined to whatever tended to promote piety or sound morals."

Whenever he visited Papal countries he always adhered to protestant principles and maintained them in his worship. If some of his traducers among "Professors" and "D. D.'s," had half the principles of piety and truth that Hobbes had, they would not continue the vile slander that "Hobbes was a deist." It is time they ceased to retail such an unfounded and malicious falsehood. They had better understand that "all liars shall have their part in" a certain "lake," not even excepting clerical ones.

From Eld. W. S. Campbell.

Br. Storrs:—I was suddenly overtaken with the chills and fever April 27, since which I have had rather poor health. I was apparently well restored from that attack; but in an evil hour I was tumbled down headlong by a chill, May 11, repeated the 13th, and again the 15th, and broken on the 17th. But to those who have had this disease there is no need to say one word. To those who have not, ever so much might be said and yet there would be no realization of the trouble and effect. To these who have seen me in a bad "shake" not a word is needed to convince of the suffering; and whoever may have seen the immediate effect upon body and mind will be prepared to excuse my want of energy or attention to business till there shall have been time for recuperation. I am now, I think, doing well. I had been so free from the symptoms for six months, up to the time of the attack before alluded to, that I did not dream of danger. I therefore labored without care or concern as to the result of fatigue, and this is the consequence.

I regret that much labor that I had planned to accomplish is yet undone, and perhaps ever will be.

The articles on the general judgment will be resumed: and in the hope that a plain, common-sense view of the subject may lead some to give up what is really a foolish and unworthy objection to the doctrine of "No life out of Christ."

Much good is done by the discussion of the question of the non-living of the wicked dead. It is a fact that all unprejudiced minds must at once appreciate, that the doctrine of the immortality of the gospel, the only hope for the race, ultimates in this position. They live not who have no life force.

Two Letters from Eld. J. Lewis.

Otto, Ill., May 8, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—I am on the old battle field once more, and feel to rejoice in God and praise his holy name for his tender mercies in the preservation of life, health and strength to travel and sow the good seed of the kingdom; and more so, when we find the seed springing up and bringing forth fruit unto holiness, so that the end shall be everlasting life. The little band is firmly established in the faith of the gospel, contending earnestly for the faith of life only to those who believe in Christ, and that the wicked will "remain in the congregation of the dead;" not to be raised to torture and kill again.

We find it is good to be here, where so many give us a hearty welcome. May the Lord bless them. We have not as yet visited many places; but we have a good report from all parts. Glory to God, the old torment doctrine, together with the immortality of the soul, and a sky kingdom, is disappearing. We found three packages of tracts here, without knowing who sent them, or on what terms. Please let us know. We feel truly thankful for them, and all past favors. May the Lord bless the donors.

Note by the Editor.—The pamphlets and tracts are for your private use, from E. Wolcott, Oceanport, N. J., and an equal amount to Br. Walter, from the same; sent to Hornsby.

Otto, Ill., May 17, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—I have just returned from Summum, a beautiful flourishing village, containing three church houses; one Baptist, one Dutch Reformed; and a Campbellite, in which we preached on What is Man? to a very interesting audience. The people in general are glad to see the old one-armed preacher once more. They have not lost sight of the glorious truth of no life out of Christ; and, consequently, no resurrection to the wicked. Glory to God, the seed that was sown here, in '64–5 is springing up and bearing fruit to the glory of God, notwithstanding there are some that are constantantly crying, "Mad dog; it is a wicked doctrine," &c. Many are inquiring about Br. Campbell; they want him to come out here again. Hope he will. May the Lord direct. Last evening we preached at schoolhouse No. 16, in the neighborhood of Br. Hughs, on the kingdom. Br. Hughs renews his subscription for the Herald of Life for another year. So you see the importance of traveling over the old ground often, in order to keep the work moving. Would that there were more to help in this vast field. But as we are alone, single-handed, we can't fill half the calls to preach. May the blessed Lord keep us in a good state of health, body and mind, so that we shall be able to stem the torrent of opposition. You may expect to see more names of subscribers coming along almost every week, as we have the promise of more soon. Pray for the old one-armed preacher.

Mistakes.—It is not pleasant to have mistakes occur by writers, compositors, or proof-readers: yet all these things do occur and are as much a trial to the Editor as they can be to the readers of the paper. Owing to the heavy tax on our eyes, we have for some time past given up proof-reading to a professional proof-reader. Many errors have failed to be corrected, and complaint has some times been made by the writers on this account. We have suffered more in our editorial articles in this matter than any of our correspondents; yet we have supposed it was of little use to make a notice, the next week, of the errors, as most readers would never go back to see how it would read when corrected. They might have felt there was something wrong when they read the article, but it is passed and they refer not to it again. Last week, in our short article on Doubtful Applications, in the latter part of the first paragraph, twelve words were omitted, destroying the sense and meaning of what we said. Here is the sentence with the omitted words in brackets:

"When texts are introduced, because there is something in them that may [refer to the subject, yet no certainty of it, and they may] have an entirely different meaning, the truth suffers by it."

The reader will see how the sense is destroyed by the omission. The week previous, in our article on A Plea for Spiritualism, the following bracketed omission occurred:

"No doubt they are wiser than Paul or Solomon! The latter affirming that, ['the dead know not any thing'; and the former that,] if the dead rise not, then they also who have fallen asleep in Christ are perished.'"

Such are some of the mistakes which occur to annoy the conductor and as well as the writers in our work. Generally, typographical errors are seen to be such by the reader; but errors like those we have noticed are not so easily solved.

In the article of last week, on the first page inside, last column, 36th line from the bottom, instead of "shocked the ages," read eyes. In the same article, next column, 26th line from the top, for "the raising of the living ones," read changing. In S. W. Bishop's article of week before last, on the Two Covenants, the following corrections should be made:

In the second column, fourth paragraph, 22d line of the paragraph, instead of here, read then: in the 31st line, instead of flesh, read desk. In the fifth column, 20th line from the top, instead of found, read poured.

It is impossible but that errors will sometimes occur, even under the superintendence of the best proof-readers; and if all writers understood how difficult it sometimes is to find out careless written words, as they often appear in manuscripts, we think they would pity the Editor, compositor, and proof-reader, all of whom have many puzzles to solve in some communications. We all try, however, to do the best we can.

To S. P. Payne, Barnston, Canada East.—The first of your questions we think not best to agitate in the Herald, as it will draw out a discussion which will be unprofitable, if not endless. If it were settled affirmatively, we see no difficulty in answering the second question, for all the "change of nature" they need is the change from mortality to immortality, which is done by the spirit of God in the resurrection. As to "How we are to understand the text" to which you refer, we suppose it embraces both classes of which you speak.—The book is sent for which you wrote.

Married.—At New Britain, Conn., by Rev. Mr. Goodell, on Tuesday, May 7th, Mr. Nelson H. Ives, of Meriden, Conn., to Miss Addie P., daughter of Eld. W. S. and P. D. Campbell, of New Britain.

Summary of News.

by w. m.

domestic.

The report of the Agricultural Department for April says: "Never has there been so general an expression of encouragment in view of the fine condition of winter wheat since the establishment of the present system for the collection of crop statistics. In more than nine tenths of the returns received, the condition of the crop is reported favorable and promising. From the South the returns are as cheering as from the West. The report states, however, that the loss of cattle from starvation and exposure the past winter has been extraordinary. Beef is not likely to be any cheaper.

A novel feature in the Boston programme of Anniversary Week will be a Free Religious Meeting, on the 30th inst, at which the various radical sects which have existence outside of organized denominations will appear, or will be asked to appear, in the person of their representatives, who give voice to their peculiar ideas; will make confessions, compare notes, inquire how far their faiths proceed from common centers, and run in parallel lines, and consider the practicability and the expediency of forming a loose working fellowship for ends purely moral and spiritual.

After three days debate in the Massachusetts Legislature the Liquor License bill has been appropriately crushed by 161 Nays to 64 Yeas. The principle of prohibition, as embodied in the present safe law, is therefore stronger than ever, and the agents of liquor must accept this decision.

The New-York Convention for revising our State Constitution will meet at Albany on Tuesday, June 4th. Meantime, all discussion as to its probable adjournment to some other place is premature.

Archbishop Purcell of Cincinnati, who has gone to Rome, carried with him, as a gift to the Pope, a beautiful silver model of the yacht Henrietta, her cargo consisting of $50,000 in gold pieces. The gift is to be presented to His Holiness as a memento from the citizens of Cincinnati.

There is certainly some movement on foot by the Fenians, but whether an invasion of Canada en masse, or merely a demonstration on the anniversary of the battle of Ridgeway, it is impossible to determine, as the Fenians at last have learned to keep their secrets.

The government of the United States has offered to sell to the Czar Alexander the famous iron-clad monitor the Miantonomoh, a frigate and two new and very fast iron-clad war cruisers. The proposition has been favorably received by the Emperor and his Cabinet, and is likely to be accepted.

A letter from Texas reports the presence there of Quantrell's roving gang of murderers, who are pursuing their old vocation thence to the Arkansas border. Portions of the State are in a condition of hideous lawlessness.

foreign.

The anniversary of St. Peter's martyrdom will be commemorated at Rome this year, on Saturday, the 29th of June, with extraordinary pomp and ceremony. Five hundred bishops have already signified their intention of attending the solemnities, and it is anticipated that no less than eight hundred prelates of every tongue and nation, and race and color, from all parts of the globe, will be present on this great occasion. A large number of American bishops have this past week sailed from New York on their way to Rome. On the map not a single country can be found which will not send one or more than one bishop to this mighty gathering at the centre of the Christian world.

Some one has published in French and Turkish an extraordinary letter to the Grand Vizier, signed "several patriotic Mussulmans." This pamphlet has been very widely circulated, and has caused no little excitement. It goes by the name of "The letter of the Ulema." It gives a most candid and logical review of the situation. It commences thus: "There can be no more illusion; the Empire is undermined! we are encamped upon a volcano! Let our good old Turks slumber on in confiding fatalism; but you enlightened Ministers of a great Empire, how can you shut your eyes to the fearful evils which are ready to burst upon us." It takes up calmly the question of the relative position of Moslem and Christian, says the Christian element is over-running the Mussulman, and that anything like fair competition between the races is an impossibility.

The Levant steamer brings news from Athens to the 4th. The Government is actively pressing its military preparations. The conscription of this year was intended to increase the effective force of the Greek army by 30,000 men. Seven armor-plated vessels have been ordered in England and America. Large enrollments of seamen for the State have been made among the merchant shipping.

The Tory Government of England deserves credit for urging upon the Governments of Europe a general disarmament. Opposition to offensive wars is making rapid progress throughout Europe.

The Emperor of Russia, the King of Prussia, the Emperor of Austria and the Sultan are all to visit the International Exhibition of Paris. Their visit is likely to be connected with a new attempt to solve the Eastern question, which, after the recent solution of the Luxemburg difficulty by the London Conference, is said to have assumed a more serious aspect.

The Danish Cabinet informs the great Powers that Prussia disregards the obligations of the Schleswig treaty of 1866. Paris journals complain that Prussia is strengthening the fortifications of Rastadt.

By Royal proclamation the British Provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, Nova Scotia, and New-Brunswick have been declared united under one Government, as the Dominion of Canada, and from the Pacific Coast we have information that the whole of British America is to be included in the confederation.

The intelligence from the interior of Mexico, dated the 15th of May, is to the effect that Queretaro was taken by assault that day, and Maximilian, Mejia, Castello and Miramon were captured. The despatches are signed by Escobedo and Juarez, and are confirmed by various despatches from other authorities. President Juarez, it is said, had sent orders to shoot Maximilian and his generals immediately. The Liberal force which took the town soon afterward started for the capital.

The workmen in the Russian gun factories are employed day and night in converting muzzle-loaders into breech-loaders. The whole of the Russian army will, it is said, be provided with the latter weapon by the end of June at the latest.

The Czar of Russia has received a tender from the United States goverment to sell the monitor Miantonomoh, an iron-clad frigate, and two fast war crusiers for his service, and was disposed to accept it.

Since the adjustment of the Luxemburg difficulty in London the Eastern question has assumed more importance. It is said that an effort will be made to settle it by diplomatic negotiation.

"Carniverous animals," said a collegian to the Rev. S. S——, "are always provided with claws and talons to seize their prey; hoofed animals are invariably graminiverous. Is it, therefore, consistent with the analogies of nature to describe the devil when he goes about seeking whom he may devour, as having a cloven foot?" "Yes," replied the divine, "for we are assured on scriptural authority that all flesh is grass."

Breath—air received into the lungs by many young men of fashion for the important purpose of smoking a cigar and whistling a tune.

"The Theology of the Bible."

Geo. W. Young has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or, who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. Halsted, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. Olmsted, Hartford, Conn.

Meetings in Brooklyn, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "Sawyer's Piano forte Rooms." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

Article I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Chris alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

Jacob Grim, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. Leet, Springfield, Mass., Vice President.
Rufus Wendell, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
Leonard C. Thorne, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

Advertisements.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
terms—net cash.
No. 58 White Street,
(few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
William H. Thorne, Leonard C. Thorne, John W. Brooks, George K. Carroll, Cornelius Sullivan.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
Office Hours, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 Chambers St.,
NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(Room 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live Again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity: by Geo. Storrs Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letter to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

Man's Nature and Destiny; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

The Atonement, by Geo. Storrs, and The Gospel Hope, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

—Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, New York.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our Catalogue our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance Bible vs. Tradition, bound, to $1: in paper cover, to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the Herald of Life, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

CONTRAST.

This life is not a cloudless day,
A summer all the year,
Where all the sights are beautiful,
And all the sounds are cheer.

No, there's a night to every day,
A winter in each year,
While every joy of earth is mixed,
With sorrow, care, and fear.

But "looking unto Jesus,"
When earth is dark as night,
He scatters gloomy clouds away,
And cheers my heart with light.

Yes "looking unto Jesus."
He takes my sins away,
And gives me hope of future life,
In one eternal day.

That life will be a glorious day,
"A summer all the year,
"Where all the sights are beautiful,
"And all the sounds are cheer."

Where roses grow without a thorn,
And treasures are secure,
Where, love is everlasting,
And friendship always pure,

O! glorious hope of future life!
Beyond the reach of pain,
All glory to the Lamb of God!
Who died, but lives again.

Mrs. J. R. Castle.

Hinesburg, Vt.

Children's Department.

AN UGLY COMPANION.

Nobody can say that Impatience makes little show, or keeps himself in the background. Nobody ever accuses him of speaking softly. Don't he know how to slam the doors? And can anybody fling things about with more success than Impatience, when he has a mind? And as to seeing the best side—he hardly leaves a best side to see. Impatience can bring a cloud over everything, and generally gets hold of the thorns instead of the roses. Indeed his bushes rarely have roses at all, for he picks the green buds rather than wait for them to open, and eats all his fruit half ripe. Impatience has two tempers; in the one he is angry with every thing to-day, in the other he wants everything that belongs to-morrow, and can't wait.

He has a strange way, too, of misnaming things. It is "cruel" to make Grace learn her lessons, instead of playing all day—it is "cross" not to give her cake between breakfast and dinner; and a rainy Saturday is always "provoking" He tells her "to-morrow" is "an age" off; he makes her think to-day is not worth the having.

Impatience always gives selfish counsel. How can Grace finish her doll's dress, if she has to play with the baby, or run up stairs to get her sister's thimble? And when she has sharpened her pencil for herself, of course she does not want to lend it—just to have the point worn off again. And then the dinner bell must ring just when she is in the midst of an interesting book—and it is so tiresome to run all the way up stairs to brush her hair before she goes to the table! But if dinner were delayed a little too long, no interesting book can keep Impatience quiet then. What he likes is anything but what he has; what he wants is anything but what he can get.

ARTLESS SIMPLICITY.

One of the sweetest incidents which we have noticed for many a day—and one which shows the effect of early training, assisted by a simple and undefiled imagination, has just fallen under our observation. It is thus related:

A lady visited New York city, and saw one day on the sidewalk a ragged, cold and hungry little girl, gazing wishfully at some of the cakes in a shop window. She stopped, and taking the little one by the hand, led her into the store. Though she was aware that bread might be better for the cold child than cake, yet desiring to gratify the shivering and forlorn one, she bought and gave her the cake she wanted. She then took her to another place, where she procured her a shawl and other articles of comfort. The grateful little creature looked the benevolent lady up full in the face, and, with artless simplicity, said,

"Are you God's wife?"

Did the most eloquent ever employ words to better advantage?

THE BLIND BOY.

I read not long since of a gentleman being stopped in the street by a stranger, who asked him, "Sir, did you ever thank God for your reason?" "I don't know that I ever did," the gentleman replied. "Do it quickly, then," said the stranger, "for I have lost mine." Did our young readers ever thank God for their eyesight? If not, the following story will remind them of their duty.

I once knew a little boy who took the small pox, and when he grew better, it was found that it had shut up both of his eyes. He had a little sister Annie, twelve years old, who used to find ways to make him happy, and would often take long walks with him. One day they sat down to rest at the foot of a tree.

"Annie," said James, "what a pleasant day this is; the air feels soft and warm to my face. I hear the water running over the smooth stones, and the birds singing over our heads, and the pretty ducks in the pond. How I wish I could see them again!" Then he thought how sad it would be to be always blind, and began to cry.

"Don't cry, James," said his sister; "maybe you will see yet. There was George Scott, you know, had the small pox and was blind for weeks; but he got well, and now he sees as well as anybody. Besides, you know God will do right about it, as mother says; and if he leaves you to be blind, will make you happy some other way."

But poor James kept on crying, with his head bent upon his hands, and his elbows on his knees. The flood of tears pressed their way between his eyelids, which had stuck together, and when he lifted up his head he cried out, "Oh, Annie, I can see! There are the hills, and the clear blue sky, and the ducks in the pond! Oh, how glad I am!"

Annie was as joyful as he, and they hurried home to tell the good news. At night, when the father prayed in the family, and thanked God for restoring sight to James, he wept for joy.

How little do children know of the blessing of sight. If they had lost it awhile, like James, they would never forget to thank God for eyesight.

THE CUP OF JUDGMENT POURED OUT.

I read with great interest in the Press of this city of the 10th inst., some extracts from the Opinione Nationale of April 14th, in which the great idea is developed that there seems to be an influence at work which, in spite of the wishes of those most interested in the preservation of the peace of the world, is urging them onward, as if by an irresistible fatality, into a war as bloody as it will be unavoidable. "The Nationale affirms," says the Press, "that it cannot remember, in the history of modern Europe, a more strange and more menacing situation than the present; that one would almost be inclined to say that some outward and fatal force had substituted itself for the will of mankind, and was pushing them on in spite of themselves, along a downward slope on which they cannot stop short, and at the end of which war awaited them—fatal, irresistible, and inevitable." The above remarks of the Press give the leading points in the article, which is rather too long for publication.

Whatever view may be entertained by the Opinione Nationale, if indeed it has any, as to the nature of this "outward, fatal force" which is thus urging nations forward into an unwilling conflict with one another, the prophetic page has not left us without light on the subject. The direct agency inflaming the passions of men, preparing them for, and urging them to the conflict, is doubtless due to satanic influence; but the whole matter is under the control and by the permission of Him who uses the wrath, and passions, and violence of men to work out his own purposes of righteous judgment upon the wicked, not only in their individual capacity, but also in their collective condition as nations. In Jeremiah xxv. this truth is made very evident. The prophet in this chapter is directed to take the wine cup of the fury of the Lord, and to cause all the nations to whom it should be sent to drink it, who, in drinking it, would be moved, and be mad because of the sword that he would send among them. In obedience to the divine command he took the cup and made all the nations drink to whom the Lord had sent him, beginning at Jerusalem; "And all the kings of the north, far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth; and the king of Sheshach shall drink after them. Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of Hosts, the God of Israel, Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I shall send among you. And it shall be if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, "Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Ye shall certainly drink. For lo, I begin to bring evil on the city which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? Ye shall not be unpunished for I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts." "A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations; he will plead with all flesh; he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord."

In this chapter we are taught that the Lord has a controversy with the nations, and that all are to suffer severe judgments on account of their wickedness. They will be compelled to drink of the cup, whether willing or unwilling. That cup has been in process of being poured out ever since Jerusalem drank its bitter draught of indignation, and in our own day, and only lately, we ourselves were made to drink deeply of it. As the writer to the Nationale says, when speaking of the present condition of Europe, it seems as though we also were forced into war, by an outward, fatal, irresistible influence. What fury seemed to animate those who engaged in the great rebellion that convulsed our land! What a demoniac spirit appeared to possess those who sought to keep up an institution which the Almighty designed through it to abolish! Peace could not be preserved between the two sections in spite of all the compromises made to secure it—the cup had to be drunk—the nation to be punished for its sins, of which slavery was the most dark and revolting; and through a baptism of blood the land was to be purified, and forever freed from the foul incubus by which it had so long been oppressed and polluted.

During our struggle other nations, France and England in particular, sympathized with and aided the cause of oppression, and thus placed themselves in active opposition to the will of the Almighty; and for this, as well as other sins in the past, they must drink deeply of the cup of the fury of the Lord's indignation. France has been compelled to leave Mexico after losing many men, expending much treasure, and marring her national glory. Austria also, which operated with France in her Mexican scheme, has not only been compelled to ask the interference of our government to screen one of her princes from suffering retributive justice at the hands of the outraged nation on whom she had sought to impose him as an Emperor, but has met with overwhelming disaster at the hands of Prussia. England is restless, and her masses are clamoring for rights which if denied them may end in revolution—and if war should occur between Prussia and France—an event for the present postponed, but to all appearance only for a short period—with all her anxiety to preserve a neutral position she can hardly hope to do so. A war between two such important powers as those first mentioned would be likely to bring into the conflict other and inferior powers; while Russia, with her eye ever fixed on Constantinople, waits but the favorable moment to push forward her legions and seize the prize so long and so ardently coveted. This conflict may be delayed for a short season, but as the writer in the Opinione Nationale says, there is a strange and unaccountable force which is developing among nations an angry feeling that must end to all appearances in a collision which will shake the old world to its centre, and carry death and wide spread destruction in its path of error and desolation. It will be the cup of God's fury poured out—the cup of his indignation—the nations must drink it.

John Fondey, M. D.

Philadelphia, May 14, 1867.

CRITICISM ON A FUNERAL SERMON.

BY DR. G. G. PUTNEY.

Howells, N. Y. March 17, 1867.

Elder Bebee: Dear Sir:—I listened with much satisfaction to your discourse of the 13th inst., from Hos. xiii. 14. For bringing out so clearly the great cardinal truth of the scriptures—that Christ is "the resurrection and the life;" that He will redeem His people from death, releasing them from the power of the grave; which release can be effected by no other than Him; and that eternal life through Jesus Christ by a resurrection, or translation, constitutes the one only hope of the gospel, prefigured in the one only sign given of the Son of Man, that of the prophet Jonah, and guaranted by the triumphant resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead—accept my sincere thanks. In the light of this discourse as well as in that of the entire scriptures, permit me to enquire, what becomes of the additional hopes so prevalently entertained and confidently talked about, of inherent immortality; going to heaven at the moment of death, &c? Do not the scriptures positively affirm that immortality, as an attribute, belongs only to God? 1 Tim. vi. 16. "Who only hath immortality, &c? If God only has it, how can it be that every human soul is possessed of it?

Again, Do not the scriptures affirm that Jesus Christ "brought immortality to light through the gospel?" If man possesses an immortal nature, per se, derived from his Adamic progenitor, how can it distinctively be said to have been brought to light through the gospel? Did Jesus Christ simply bring to light one of the attributes of man's Adamic nature? Nay, is it not true, as Christ himself affirms, "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him?" But I am told, that the "wrath of God," is everlasting life in conscious suffering. Not so the apostle, Paul declares "The wages of sin is death." And what is "the wages of sin" but the penalty of the law, which is the full measure of "the wrath of God?" God does not declare a penalty for sin expressive of, but a part of His indignation, or wrath. He says "The soul that sinneth it shall die"—"Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Life in suffering, then, cannot be the full measure of "the wrath of God." This cannot be expressed by any thing short of the penalty of the law, which is, not life in any state, but, "death." Christ declares concerning the believer, that He "will raise him up at the last day." From whence will He raise him? Hos. xiii. 14. "I will redeem them from death." It is from "death" then, that Christ will raise the believer up. Allowing the theory of the soul's inherent immortality to be true, should he not rather have said, that He would call him down at the last day? Unless, indeed, the "him" is to be construed as referring merely to the body. But if man is dead, and his soul naturally immortal, this latter constitutes, by far, the more important part of the "him," and we may not apply the personal pronoun to designate the less important part. Besides, Christ was not talking about a part of a man, but of man himself, as a single personality. He promised to raise "him" up that "believeth." The body, separately considered, is not the believing part, surely.

David says, Ps. xlix. 15, "But God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave." How can a thing be redeemed from a power which it is not under? If David's soul was never to be brought into the grave, how was it be redeemed from the dominion thereof? Continues David—"For He shall receive me." Whom does the "me" personate? A part of David, or the whole of him? Evidently, David was speaking of himself as an individual: not as a duality. When, then, was David's soul to be redeemed from the power of the grave? I reply, when the man David will be; viz., at the resurrection. But I am anticipating. I may be told again, that, immortality, in a scriptural sense, signifies not merely interminable existence, but, this conjoined with holiness; and, consequently, happiness. But what is gained by this theological construction of the word? Admit it true. Does the Bible reveal an immortality different from this? If so, where is the chapter and verse? I conclude that immortality—and, I have information of but one kind—belongs, as the scriptures distinctly say, to God only, as a natural attribute. That, to man, it is, distinctly, the gift of God through Jesus Christ, (not through Adam;) that the Spirit, or begetting power of this immortality, is the Holy Ghost; the renewing of which, constitutes, in the believer, his heirship to God, and is an earnest of the inheritance of which he will come in possession at the resurrection by virtue of this Spirit, which, in this life, dwells in him—but is in no sense a part of him: ("know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you!") in accordance with the positive declaration that, "if the Spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, He that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by His spirit that dwelleth in you."

Such, dear sir, is, as I believe, the immortality of the Bible; and such is the manner in which I conceive it to be brought to light through the gospel. And, permit me to add, it is the only immortality which I believe to be brought to light, either through the gospel or any other revelation of God. Now, briefly, concerning the hope, entertained by so many christians, of going to heaven at the moment of death. Is this a good hope? A hope, to be good, I conceive, must be founded upon some promise of the gospel; for it is from the gospel, alone, that the christian derives his hopes. Where, I enquire, in all the gospel, is there such a promise as this? As already stated, Christ promised that He would raise up the believer at the last day—not at the day of his death. Nay, he must first "pass through the valley of the shadow of death"—and he will not get out of that valley until he is helped out of it "at the last day." Christ, in answer to a direct inquiry, told his apostles that they should have a certain reward—"Ye shall sit upon twelve thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel." But when? At their death? Nothing of this kind. "When the Son of man shall sit in the throne of His glory, ye shall sit upon twelve thrones," &c,

But when is the Son of man to sit in the throne of his glory? "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory." And concerning this time it is said, 1 Thes. iv. 16, et seq., "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." On, this is the time, when, not the apostles only, but, all the saints shall have their reward—shall enter into their inheritance. The time when "the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away."

The great apostle to the Gentiles, to whom was committed the work of making known among them "what is the riches of the glory of this mystery," declares that "the Lord Jesus Christ shall judge the quick and the dead at His appearing and His kingdom." Will believers receive their reward, or any portion thereof, before they are adjudged worthy of it? "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you," &c. He will not tell them to inherit the kingdom they have previously been in possession of.

Again, says the apostle, in prospect of his near approach to death, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Laid up for you, Paul? Why, were you not expecting to come into immediate possession of it? Why talk about its being laid up for you? Surely a thing laid up, is a thing kept in reserve. Continues the apostle, "which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day." What day, Paul; of your death? "And not to me only, but unto all them also, that love his appearing." Why Paul! Do you really mean what you say, that this crown of righteousness is laid up for you until the day of the appearing of the Lord Jesus, and that at that day you expect to receive it?

Modern theologians tell us that all christians go to heaven at death, and come into possession of their crown at that time; and, if christians, generally, are thus favored, why not you, Paul, who were not only a christian but a christian apostle and martyr? Surely you are as antiquated respecting the hope of the gospel, as your contemporary Peter; who says: "God hath begotten us (christians) again unto a lively hope of the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead, to an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto the salvation ready to be revealed in the last time." Why did not Peter say, ready to be revealed at death?

Again, John—"Beloved, now are we the sons of God; and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when He shall appear, we shall be like Him; for we shall see Him as He is." Why did not John tell us that we should see him and be like him at death? Because, forsooth, John well understood, as well as both Peter and Paul, that, ere the christian receives his crown, death must be swallowed up in victory. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption; and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then"—and, be assured, not till then—"shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." Then, indeed, (at the resurrection,) shall the christian receive his crown—a crown of righteousness—a crown of life—a crown of rejoicing that will enable him triumphantly to shout, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" For then—the "day of" his "redemption" (until which he is only sealed with the Holy Spirit, Eph. i. 13, 14,) having arrived, he will achieve the victory over death, and obtain his crown as victor, through the Lord Jesus Christ. Then, my dear Sir, will be fulfilled, literally, the prophetic declaration, made the motto for your discourse, alluded to, "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues: O grave, I will be thy destruction; repentance shall be hid from mine eyes."

Until then, the christian, if dead, must rest from his labors; must sleep in Jesus: when He who is his life shall appear, then—and not before—shall he appear with Him in glory. Until then he must be content to have his citizenship, or enrollment, "in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto himself." Pardon me, dear Sir, for the liberty I have thus taken, in trespassing upon your time, and believe me, in the sincere pursuit for truth, yours, respectfully, and in the bonds of christian affection.

SUGGESTIVE.

Among the varieties in the last number of our grand good paper, there is an item from the Israelite, the organ of the Hebrews, published in Cincinnati, which says "they disavow any expectation of a personal Messiah, declaring that 'Israel is the Messiah to the nations. We know nothing of the pagan man-worship.'"

For centuries the Jews have been insulted by christendom persistently offering them a religion without body or parts, or rhyme or reason, or whys or wherefores, in doctrines without foundations, irrational and without promise or hope. A religion, up to this day, ignoring every thing that goes to make up a Jew; and is contrary to their education from Abraham down to this day. The life of the Jews' religion was the spirit of the gospel itself. Paul says it was preached to Abraham, and to Israel in the wilderness. It was the promise of eternal life, and an incorruptible kingdom, and inheritance on earth, under the whole heavens. This same apostle says "Our twelve tribes, instantly serving God day and night, hope to come" to the "promise." They were, by education and profession, in complete sympathy with Paul. He believed (now a christian) precisely what the ancient saints professed. No more nor less.

In Hebrews xi. we have a narrative of faith. It is the gospel faith. This pure gospel was corrupted by the Romanist under the name of christian. The same has had power and prestige, in the past, even for a dark, dismal period of 1260 years. But the judgment has set; and they have taken away his dominion, and will continue to consume it, until "there will be none so poor as to do it reverence," and it would degrade a common hangman to bury so worthless a carcass. Next the protestants have lent a hand (and keep at it) to keep our gospel corrupted. Alas! they reverse its whole force and meaning: have retained as a sweet morsel the very worst features of papacy.

The Romanists began their apostacy by compromising our holy religion to accommodate it to the heathen prejudice, until there was none of it left. The heathen deified their heroes, the Romanists canonized their saints. The heathen had a passion for many gods; they worshipped all they ever heard of, and imagined more. Hence the altar, in Paul's experience, "inscribed to the unknown God." The christian religion, (such as it was) being enforced upon all people by imperial authority, was a sure guarantee of its perfect corruption; opening the flood-gates of Origenian fables upon the world, when the church (so called) became the "abomination that maketh desolate." The Pantheon, the temple of the idols, was consecrated to the service of the new religion, idols and all. Being converted, they were appropriated. "The thunder is taken from Jupiter and the key of Peter given instead. Venus is converted into, and christened the Madonna."

To this day, the saints are worshipped on their set days (it is nothing less than worship) according to the calendar. And then that the unnamed saints may have no temptation to jealousy, and the worshippers be not deficient in their attention, they have instituted "All Saints' day." This is protestant idolatry, as well as Roman.

Jesus said, "A little while, and ye shall not see me: and again a little while, and ye shall see me, because I go to the Father." This the disciples could not understand. To help them in the matter, He says further, "You shall weep and lament, but the world shall rejoice; and ye shall be sorrowful, but your sorrow shall be turned into joy." They are also helped to a bit of chronology. It relates to the time of going to the Father. This is the point in the discourse. A little while after this, and the full time of the church will come, when she shall have fulness of joy, "and no man," can take it from her. As the woman whose time is come is in pain, but as soon as she is delivered of the child, she remembereth no more the anguish, for joy that a man is born into the world.

The parting that took place at the ascension, was not at all painful. Luke says, "And they worshipped him, and returned to Jerusalem with great joy, and were continually in the temple praising God. Amen!

"In a little while ye shall not see me; and again, a little while and ye shall see me." Now the whole period of our Lord's absence is a long while. "After a long time the nobleman returned."

There is a process and progress in the second advent of our Lord. There cannot be a blank of more than 1800 years in which no steps are taken in this greatest of all events. Look at the book of Revelation. A complete programme until you reach the announcement, "Behold I make all things new." There shall be no more death; "And the tabernacle of God is with men." There is a "Time of the end." Some say, "The beginning of the end." In this period the judgment sits, and the "dominion of the Beast is taken away," as well as the "little horn." Here ends the 1260 years, agreeing wonderfully with the history of events. At this time we have the sublime session of the court of the "Ancient of days." See Dan. vii. 9, in the order of time. One like the Son of Man comes with the clouds of heaven, ... to the Ancient of days—the "Judge of all"—and there is given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, etc. This I believe, is the time referred to, a little while after which the joy of the church shall be full.

We are in the times of restitution of all things. Truth is first in order. We have a second edition of John the Baptist's mission, "In the spirit and power of Elias" to us: turning the hearts of the fathers to the children; and the children to the fathers. The prophetic books are opened. They represent prophets, seers and saints, in general. "Though dead, they yet speak" How many living men have for the last twenty-five years spoken for the prophets? When I was a pastor, I noticed in several pulpits Bibles with the Old Testament as good as new; and the New quite worn out with use and pounding. In two instances I soon displaced the old books by new ones. In about the year 1839 or '40, Rev. Joseph Wolf published what was called a proclamation to the clergy to study the prophets. The lamented Henry Jones—and there was no purer spirit—made it his special work, on the great anniversary occasions, to exhort preachers to study the prophets. The fathers have their way of speaking to, and "turning to the children," "and the children to the fathers." Saith the Lord, let it be done, "lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."

You are doing what you can to turn the "children to the fathers;" and it is not a little. It is our proper work at this time. The people of these dark times are turning every other way, as the rule is. If they persist, the big curse will come. O, if they will turn, God will let the world (this age) die easy.

"Little children, keep yourselves from idols." John v. 21. The reader will look at the fifth verse of this chapter.

B. Matthias.

Books, Pamphlets, and Tracts can be had at the Editor's residence; of Geo. W. Young, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St. New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 27 Park Row, Room 40.

Our Israelitish Origin.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. Wilson, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy or their services.

The Postage on the Herald of Life, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All Letters relating to the Herald of Life, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
New York."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

All names of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 175. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 5, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 33.

THE HERALD OF LIF

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

HERESY.

[Outlines of a sermon preached in the Congregational church, Paterson, N. J., Jan. 6, 1867, by GEO. B. DAY, formerly of the Methodist E. Church.]

TEXT.—"But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all the things which are written in the law and the prophets." Acts xxxiv. 15.

Before Felix Paul makes this frank avowal. It required in him no slight courage to admit his heresy. He was born a Jew, educated a Pharisee, and had for years endorsed the common religious faith of his countrymen. Many motives combined to induce him to retain his old views, and to avow no others. The courage of the man is manifest when we have carefully noted the circumstances of his defence before the governor. His accusers were the ablest and most pious representatives of the Old Testament faith. They adored the scriptures of Moses and the prophets. They had studied them with life-long care, and expounded them weekly to their friends and brethren. Scarcely a man of thought in Judea would have ventured to bring their interpretation of the sacred writings into question.

Yet this solitary outcast proclaims in their presence and that of a Roman dignitary that his faith and worship as judged by them is heresy.

Was he not presumptuous thus to differ from the learned, pious, and venerable men of his country?

Is there even a possibility that they could be all wrong, and he alone right? Is not truth to be judged as such by the numbers, ability, learning, age and moral character of its teachers?

Then down with Paul, and up with the Pharisees! One man's voice, on religious faith, ought not even to be listened to against the belief and piety of a church and nation. The courage of the apostle, in the light of human judgment, was hardihood, his frank avowal of heresy was shamelessness, and his persistency that he knew what a world of pious and learned men were ignorant of, was—madness.

Let us weigh this hardy admission. "After the way they call heresy so worship I."

Heresy may assume two principal forms.

1. The holding of some scripture truth in a mode vastly different from the established interpretation.

2. The belief of some principles outside of revelation contradicted by orthodoxy, which if admitted, would materially change the meaning of revelation, as popularly understood and taught.

The heresy of the apostle comprehended both these forms. He is careful to clear himself of infidelity. He believed all things written in the law and the prophets, but believed them differently from his accusers. He looked at the scriptures in another light. He put a different meaning on the words of inspiration.

The scope, value and application of the law; the things signified by the prophets were not the same with him and the Pharisees.

He believed beside many facts which were obnoxious to the dominant faith. Certain things about one Jesus, his character, his destiny, his mission, his resurrection, which Paul believed, told hard upon the pious Jews, if they should happen to prove true. And if true, the learned men who had come to Cesarea could not but perceive that a fatal blow was struck at their theology.

When therefore we consider how tenaciously a body of men hold to their religious faith, with what difficulty they admit the possibility of being in error, how valuable they consider that faith in effecting salvation, what sanctions age, learning and numbers give it, our wonder ceases that the council of the Jews attempted to put down this daring man, or even conspired for his death that the church might have peace.

This is not a solitary instance. It is the history of all time. To assert a different view of the scriptures from that denominated orthodoxy, must meet in the nature of things a result more or less similar everywhere. But because it is common it ought not to be without its lessons.

How strongly Paul must have believed to dare so much. This avowal of heresy made him an outcast and an object of reproach to all his countrymen.

A blasphemer, an impostor, a maniac—these and other kindred epithets met him wherever he encountered those to whose faith he was supposed to be recreant.

Nothing but implicit confidence in his doctrines would enable him to brave all this. Remember, when you read of denounced heretics, that they must have been of strong faith or their hearts would have been crushed at once. All martyrs were heretics in their day. Do them, then, this justice, to believe that they were sincere, and earnestly believed the doctrines for which they were condemned.

Consider, also, what examination and research they must have given in order to reach such strong convictions antagonistic to the popular faith.

We believe for the most part what has been instilled into us from our youth by those who are personally interested in making us believe as they do. I do not question that we believe strongly enough to help put down others that believe differently, but it admits of doubt whether we would believe what we profess if the world did not believe it, and was intent on putting us down because of our faith. A faith that endures persecution has been reached only by direct revelation from God as in the case of Paul, or by the deepest study of the word of God.

If our sympathies to-day are with Paul in his defence, learn this—that the truth is not with bodies of educated and pious men. We admit that we have more confidence in the few scores of disciples of Christ, than in the whole Jewish church. But have we reflected upon this decision? If we pronounce Paul right, then we decide that the church of that age was all in error, and if so, then in every age all the great churches have been in error.

Truth has only been found with the few. From Abraham to Christ—from Christ to Luther—from Luther to Wesley—but few according to our own admissions have seen and believed the will of God. Do we belong to that few? or are we disciples of the grand establishments who have secured the wealth, the power and control of the world under the professed sanction of the Almighty?

Whenever churches have acquired power they assume to a greater or less degree that they are divinely established. Their ministers claim equally with prophets and apostles to be men of God. They assume that they are favorites of heaven. They establish a faith, and pronounce judgment on all doctrines with a force equal to the weight of their body. They declare all that differs from their standards to be heresy. Now all this cannot be helped. We should be content that it is so. God permitted it in Paul's time—he permits it now. We should learn to be charitable toward those vast powers that rule and sway the faith of the world. We should be tolerant, if need be, of intolerance.

But the truth of the prophets and the lowly Christ is not likely to be found amidst the pomp and glare of institutions that grasp the wealth and wield the power of the world.

Let them have their reward. If we turn from their teachings with lowly and honest minds to find what is the will of God concerning us, let me warn you that what you thus obtain from Christ and the prophets will be denominated heresy.

If we can rise to a proper appreciation of Paul's position before his enemies, we shall see the force of his teachings and those of his Master. Both taught that truth would not and could not be received by any associations that held the sway of society. Their faith must be heresy, because it could not be received by the world. Therefore, Paul at the beginning accepted whatsoever odium and evil consequence might ensue. To one in his position there is nothing odious or fearful in this charge of heresy. It only amounts to this: that I, Paul, believe in that hidden truth which the world is not to know, until it is divinely forced upon the general understanding.

He will not admit that there is a trace of infidelity in his sentiments. He was right, in his own estimation, and the Pharisees were wrong. He does not however retort the charge of heresy upon them, because it would mean nothing. The tacit and implied conclusion in his avowal of heresy, is all the charge he makes against them. "I believe in what you are pleased to call error." "Then," they might reply, "we are all in the wrong." "As you please," would have been the calm response, "I cannot help your inference."

It is questionable whether the position of an earnest inquirer after divine truth should reach farther than this. A single man like Paul could only convince others of the truth of his faith from the scriptures themselves. No man could believe who laid stress upon the numbers, wisdom or character of those who believed with him. None would assent who judged of truth by the results which followed its advocacy in this world. We can scarcely avoid the conclusion, therefore, that no man believes the truth who dares not believe heresy.

When we are impressed deeply with the conviction of human blindness which the scriptures insist upon, with the inability of human reason to discover or corroborate what God declares can only come by his revelation, and above all, with the unwelcome character of that revelation to us in our present state, we shall be ready to admit that the truth of God is not bodied in the popular faith, and cannot in the nature of things be generally believed. But more than this; we shall involve ourselves in the fate of Paul's accusers if we do not admit that we are ourselves fallible, full of errors, and too much the representatives of general beliefs, and if we do not hold ourselves open to a conviction of what is not generally taught, and which cannot have the sanction of any human institution.

THE DOCTRINE OF GENERAL JUDGMENT.

BY ELD. W. S. CAMPBELL.

It is supposed that the phrase "the judgment" and "the day of judgment" must refer to the general, or assize judgment, which people have fancied must transpire at the end of the world or age, and which they had concluded beforehand should exist; which conclusion is shown to have obtained its color, if not its elemental character, from the doctrine of the soul's natural immortality. It is only on the ground that the soul is immortal that there is any show of reason for such a belief; and only by admitting beforehand that the man cannot die, and that the punishment of the wicked is future torment, do men see a reasonableness in the application of scripture that way. Many have been accustomed to have that view forced upon them, and because our fathers taught it, in imitation of the papal church, against which the church has protested. We have to be told how God must do; and this being after the ideas of justice and righteousness which men have, the scriptures are simply made to conform to the position which human reason has taken.

We shall leave the Lord himself to tell what he thinks it best to do, by hearing him state what he will do.

A little common sense, with the admission of certain principles which cannot be denied, will help us to see things in a harmonious, scriptural light. 2 Pet. ii. 3. "Whose judgment now of a long time lingereth not." We cannot understand this as presenting judgment in any other sense than punishment. Punishment may be determined and seem to linger because it is not executed speedily. It is to those who harden themselves in sin, while this delay lasts, that the word declares their punishment does not linger; or, as the Douay renders it, leaseth not; i. e., is not remitted. The Lord Jesus says, that whosoever shall be angry with his brother without a cause, i. e., shall hate him, shall be in danger of the judgment. The particular penalty appointed, and which being determined by the officers of the law, was certain and sure, viz., stoning. But it may be asked, Would he deserve death? Very slight offences, it would seem to us, were punishable by the death penalty under the law. And St. John says, that, "He that hateth his brother is a murderer." He would be stoned to death, at once, if we were a murderer. He is in danger of it (under the law) if he is angry—without a cause—with his brother.

In the same sense, judgment is used in the 4th verse. The class that sinned and were cast down into the chains of darkness, or hell, reserved unto judgment, i. e., to punishment; for the punishment of the wicked is everlasting; not everlasting torment, but an everlasting condition.

There is reserved for the condemned a future punishment. It is to the condemned "wrath to come." I do not believe in the fable of literal angels after the style of Milton's Paradise Lost; or that God made a class of beings angels, and that they, by sin, made themselves personal devils. But whatever these beings were, (the term angel means messenger) there is no escape for them from the punishment which is the judgment of God. The 4th verse—"For if God spared not the angels," &c.; 9th verse, "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust to the day of judgment to be punished."

All that comes between, in these verses, is explanatory, and of course shows how the thing is to be done, and when the "day of judgment" will transpire.

How did he deliver Noah? How did he secure the justification and escape of Lot?" In either case by the judgment (punishment) upon the ungodly, or unjust. Now, when the good men escaped the wicked were left to perish under the judgment specially ordained for that class of sinners, and according to the law under which they were placed. The day in which this was inflicted was the "day of judgment" to them. So then, the day of punishment, to any class of sinners, is the time of the punishment appointed for that dispensation, or is made the point of the exhibition of the Divine wrath. In both these cases, it was so; and these examples explain how it will be with the unjust. There is not the least support given to the notion of an orthodox hell and judgment; but there is as much for the one as for the other; and if one had the old Catholic notion of spirits, chained in the hell of the dark ages, we might see some good evidence of the trial of people after they had been chained in prison, as a punishment; for it was in consequence of sin, (and therefore a punishment) that angels were put in there; or that the ungodly were destroyed by the flood. The advocates of this general judgment theory have the credit of taking a theory invented in the dark ages, to frighten men to the submission to the church which was called the correction of heretics; and which has only survived the time of deliverance because of the admission of the immortality of the soul.

The old fable of purgatory underlies the doctrine of the orthodox "general judgment;" but without purgation in any possible case; and, therefore, worse than Catholic; for they are reserved to judgment, simply to be punished, after they shall be judged; but they suffer a state of loss now which is punishment, else they would not be in it; and which, by special ordination of the Almighty, is made a positive condition for them. Who cares, then, for the reasoning of men who shall tell us what God ought to do, in the administration of justice? We have his own statement of the fate of those who will be classed ungodly; and we shall not yield it for the foolish remains of the papal dogmas which still find a lodgment in Protestant theology. Is it not a fact, that judgment has closed the dispensations that have past? In speaking of them, the "day of judgment" would be the time of their judgment; i.e., punishment. It should be noticed that the Apostle speaks of them as "natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed"—and that they shall "utterly perish in their own corruption."

"Brute beasts" dying, and "utterly perishing in their own corruption!" What hope or prospect is there of a resurrection of such? and what need of a judicial procedure in the case that they may be judged fit to be destroyed, or perish in their own corruption? It would be very singular if these, that are "as natural brute beasts," should be preserved to the judgment instead of "utterly perishing," and in corruption, too. They begin to rot by the time they are buried; they become a part of the ground, or the tree that grows over the grave. To reserve them to such a judgment, as some expositors teach, would be to bring them into a corruption, not their own, and in which they do not perish; for the righteous, some of the exquisite expounders tell us, are in the same condition—mortality. Now this is all contrary to scripture. The word distinctly states that those who are reserved unto judgment, are like natural brute beasts, and will utterly perish in their own corruption. This is the way the judgment is executed, unto which they are reserved, or kept. It must be a state produced by the being who secures the resurrection (the "mortal resurrection") which is a condition of corruption, and so should be Christ's corruption; for it is Christ's resurrection. Will they utterly perish after they shall have been brought into a state of which He is the author, when they did not cease to exist while in their own corrupt, mortal state?

To reserve them "unto the day of judgment," after the Catholic notion, is to preserve those, through the corruption of death, who are as natural brute beasts. Great effect! The resurrection power is great on "beasts;" is it not?

ABRAHAM'S FAITH AND PIETY.

In a clear, wintry night when planets, constellations, and all the orbs of heaven are sparkling through the frosty air, we see how, as Paul says, "One star differeth from another star in glory." But though some are larger and much more luminous than others, which, now caught, now lost, seem but points of light, not a few appear equally brilliant. Of these rivals that are flaming and wheeling in different quarters of the firmament, it were hard to say which is pre-eminent—the biggest, brightest gem in the dusky crown of night. This difficulty is one we do not meet in opening the Bible at the eleventh chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Hebrews. With examples of faith, extending all the way down from the remote days of Abel to those last times when the saints of God were stoned and sawn asunder, tempted and slain with the sword, it presents a bright and glorious spectacle. We gaze on that firmament, if I may so speak, which shines above the Church through the long dark night of time; and which, as the night wears on, grows more and more resplendent with those whom God is calling to shine as the stars for ever and ever. History contains no catalogue of equally illustrious names. It relates no such famous deeds as stand recorded in that grand chapter. But, though these stars of the church resemble those of the material heavens in this, that one differeth from another in glory, they differ in this, on the other hand, that for the power, grandeur, and, in whatever aspect indeed it be regarded, for the greatness of his faith, the severity of his trial, and the brilliancy of his triumphs, Abraham shines pre-eminent. He has no equal, no rival. To change the figure, he holds such pre-eminence among these grand exemplars of trust in God and faith in his unfailing word, as does the centre mountain among the group above whose rocky pinnacles and snow-clad summits it rears its imperial dome.

Compare Abraham with some, or with any of the worthies whose names are embalmed in that chapter. Take Moses. Who am I that I should go unto Pharaoh? he said. With the rod in his hand that he had already seen changed into a living serpent, and that was hereafter to change rivers into blood and the bed of ocean into dry land, Moses shrank from the dangerous task; he hesitated, conjuring up difficulties and urging objections till the Divine anger was kindled against him. Take Gideon. Oh, my Lord, wherewith shall I save Israel? he cries. Behold my family is poor in Manasseh, and I am the least in my father's house. And saying so, there he stands on the threshing floor, nor leaves it for a nobler sphere till miracles strengthen and sustain his faith—till a bowlful of water is wrung from the fleece around which all the ground lay dry; and on another morning, the fleece lies dry on meadows sparkling with dew, by bushes hung thick with diamonds. And to mention but one other, though not the least of the worthies enrolled in that chapter, take David. See how he staggers beneath his load! Look at him repairing for safety and shelter to the Philistines, as if God had ever given his enemies occasion for the taunt, Where is now thy God? Yet, trusting them rather than Him who had delivered him from the paw of lion, and the paw of the bear, and the hand of the giant champion whom he encountered with no other weapon than sling and pebble, he flies to the country of the Philistines, and throws himself into their arms—distrusting God and crying I shall now perish one day by the hand of Saul!

Look now at Abraham's faith! It stood the test of much severer trials. He is called to leave his country and his kindred—called to go he knew not where; called to be he knew not what. Nor does he hesitate. He instantly responds; repairs to Canaan; and lives and dies in the confident belief that it shall belong to him and his. Yet he found no place there to rest the sole of his foot—his weary foot—but was tossed about during a long lifetime here and there, like a sea-weed which is floated hither and thither on the wandering billows, cast on the shore by this tide and swept away by that. Looking not at the things which are seen, but the things which are not seen, the life of all believers is more or less one of faith. But of Abraham and his whole life in the land of Canaan, of every journey he undertook, every march he made, and every footprint he left on its own soil or on its sands, it might be literally as well as figuratively said, it was true of him in respect of this world as well as of the next, as it never was of any other man, "He walked by faith and not by sight."

This faith culminates on Moriah—the mount where, laying Isaac on the altar, it endures its greatest trial, and achieves its greatest triumph. It furnishes the only key to the questions that rise unbidden as we read the story—a fond and doting father, how could Abraham undertake the dreadful task? How was he able to contemplate embruing his hands in the blood of his son? How did his reason withstand the shock! How did his heart not break? How had he nerve to disclose the dreadful truth to Isaac, to kiss him, to bind his naked limbs, to draw the knife from its sheath, and raise his arm for the blow? How did not the cords of life snap under the strain, and Abraham, spared the horrid sacrifice, fall dead on the altar—a pitiful sight, a father clasping within his lifeless arms the beloved form of his son? It is by the power of faith he stands there, the knife glittering in his hand, his arm raised to strike—the conqueror of nature. The blow shall make him childless, yet he believes that he shall be the father of a mighty nation; that when the flames have consumed the loved form at his side, Isaac shall rise from their ashes; and that after this bloody tragedy the greatest act of worship, with Isaac restored to his arms, as they climbed, they shall descend the mount together. Who can help exclaiming, O, Abraham, great is thy faith!

"By faith," says St. Paul, "Abraham, when he was tried, offered up Isaac, and he that had received the promises offered up his only begotten son, of whom it was said, In Isaac shall thy seed be blessed—accounting that God was able to raise him up even from the dead." It is thus he explains the scene on that mysterious and awful mount, where, in the victim unbound and a divinely provided substitute bleeding in his room, Abraham saw Christ's day afar off, and was glad. Thus the apostle, magnifying the power of faith, and showing how to him who believeth all things are possible, teaches us to cry, Lord help mine unbelief! increase my faith! It is certain that in respect of this crowning grace, Abraham offers us the grandest model, presents an all but perfect exemplar. In Paul's catalogue he shines the star of greatest magnitude; and with a change of sex, to him we may accord this palm, this highest praise, "Many daughters have done virtuously, but thou excellest them all!"

Yet the patriarch had his failings—as who has not?—and they are written to warn "him who thinketh he standeth, to take heed lest he fall." If thou hast run with the footmen and they have wearied thee, how, asks the prophet, canst thou contend with horsemen? Yet, strange to say, though Abraham contended successfully in the race with horsemen, distancing them all, he was outstripped by footmen. He trusted God to restore the life of his son, yet did not trust him to protect the honor of his wife. Telling a lie about Sarah, he failed in the very grace for which he was most distinguished. Should not these things teach us to watch and pray that we enter not into temptation; and never under any circumstances to forget the warning "Be not high-minded, but fear?" When Nehemiah, bold as a lion, said, "Shall such a man as I flee?" how much more might we have expected Abraham to say, "Shall such a man as I lie?" His faith failed him. This great and venerable patriarch stands convicted of equivocation. And who that sees him vainly trying to gloss over his shame, can help exclaiming, Lord, what is man? Surely the best and worst of men have but one refuge—the blood and righteousness of Jesus.

Another practical and equally important remark we may draw from Abraham's history, ere he leaves the stage. Paul explains the patriarch's pre-eminent triumph by his pre-eminent faith. But what explains it? What fed the faith wherein his great strength lay? Challenging comparison with any, and excelling all, in that grace, we may justly apply to him the glowing terms and bold figures of the prophet, "He was a cedar in Lebanon, with high stature and fair branches, and shadowing shroud—the cedars of God could not hide him—the fir-trees were not like his boughs, and the chestnut trees were not like his branches, nor was any tree in the garden of God like unto him for beauty—his root," he adds, explaining how this cedar towered above the loftiest trees, giant monarch of the forest, "his root was by the great waters." And what that root found in streams which, fed by the snows and seaming the sides of Lebanon, hottest summers never dried and coldest winters never froze, the unequalled faith of Abraham found in close and constant communion with God. Like Enoch he walked with God. Each important transaction of life was entered on in a pious spirit, and hallowed by religious exercises. His tent was a moving temple. His household was a pilgrim church. Wherever he rested, whether by the venerable oak of Mamre, or on the olive slopes of Hebron, or on the lofty, forest-crowned ridge of Bethel, an altar rose; and his prayers went up with its smoke to heaven. Such daily, intimate and loving communion did this grand saint maintain with heaven, that God calls him "his friend;" and honoring his faith with a higher than any earthly title, the church has crowned him "Father of the Faithful." He lived on terms of fellowship with God such as had not been seen since the days of Eden. Voices addressed him from the skies; angels paid visits to his tent; and visions of celestial glory hallowed his lowly couch and mingled with his nightly dreams. He was a man of prayer, and therefore he was a man of power. Setting us an example that we should follow his steps,—thus, to revert to language borrowed from the stateliest of Lebanon's cedar, thus was he "fair in his greatness and in the length of his branches, for his root was by the great waters."—Sunday Magazine.

MILLENARIANISM.

THE TESTIMONY OF AN OPPONENT.

It seems the opposers of the personal reign of Christ on earth and of the pre-millennium advent, are becoming alarmed at the rapid spread of this glorious truth. A writer in England has come out against it in three volumes of 400 pages each, counting it a "colossal system of error;" and among his reasons for undertaking his mighty work, is the fact that it is making such tremendous progress in England. That which alarms him is a source of joy to the lovers of the blessed truth of Christ's personal coming and reign on the earth, and that at no distant day. In the work of this new opponent we find the following statements of the cause of his alarm. He says:

"It so happens that a very large number of my most revered private friends, both among the clergy and laity, are as firm believers in the doctrine of a personal reign of Christ on earth, with his saints, as they are in any other doctrine contained in the scriptures. I could name numbers among contemporary Millenarians for whom, as the result of personal intimacy with them, I not only entertain the most profound esteem, but would, in other respects, willingly and humbly sit at their feet. They are alike eminent for the greatness of their talents—for their deep and sustained spirituality of mind—for their habitually close walk with God—for their exemplary conduct in the society and sight of their fellow men, and for their devotedness to the cause of Christ and of souls. It is, indeed, to the fact that so many of my greatest christian friends, equally remarkable for their gifts and graces, believe in the personal reign of Christ on earth, and in the other Millenarian notions which cluster around the personal reign as the great central doctrine—that my attention has been called to the subject, and that I have been led to engage in its investigation."—Pref., vol 1.

"Though not sympathizing with those who hold Millenarian notions, I readily bear my testimony here, as I have done in my preface, to the great extent to which that class of views are now adopted. This is especially the case as regards the church of England. Millenarians exist among the Independents, the Baptists, and the Presbyterians, but only to a very limited extent in either of these denominations, or in all of them put together, as compared with the progress it has made in the church of England. But when we come to speak of the Plymouth Brethren, Millenarianism prevails to a far greater extent among them than in the national Establishment. In fact, among the Brethren it is all but universal. Millenarianism has made great progress during the present century, and is, at this moment, making greater than at any former period...... Millenarianism is spreading rapidly in nearly all parts of the country at the time at which I write,..... And as Millenarianism is spreading rapidly, so it will continue to spread, unless those who take a different view of the question are more active than they hitherto have been in confronting it in the field of scripture conflict." Vol. 1, pp 84, 85, 86, 114.

"It must afford some satisfaction to Millenarians, to find that all the Jews who embrace the religion of Jesus do become zealous supporters of the theory of our Lord's personal reign on earth.

"The interval of nearly twelve months which has elapsed since the publication of my first volume, has only served to convince me more than ever, that Millenarianism is spreading in all quarters with great and growing rapidity. I hear much surprise expressed at this...... In the early part of the century it was hardly known. A very few believed in the personal reign of Christ...... My own surprise at the fact of this rapid growth of what I regard as the Millennial delusion, is not so great as that of many other christians with whom I meet." Vol. 3. Pref., 10–13.

"Millennarians are most z alous, active, and unwearied in the propagation of their principles. There is a society, called the Prophecy Investigating Society, which for many years has been in active operation with that view. It consists of fifty members, all members of the Church of England, and also clergymen, with the exception of eight or nine laymen. The clerical members of this society are, in the majority of cases, men of eminence in the religious world; while the laymen are, in every instance, men of acknowledged piety and high social position....... Among the vice-presidents are the Bishop of Cashel, the Bishop of Ripon, Admiral Vernon Harcourt, the Hon. A. Kinnaird, M. P., and Captain John Trotter...... One result of the labors of this society has been the publication of a series of volumes, consisting exclusively of sermons on prophetic subjects, in connection with Millenarianism. All of these discourses have been first delivered to one or more congregations; and, between the publicity given to the Millenarian views of the preachers—most of them men of eminence—in conjunction with the publication of the sermons afterward, these views have become extensively known, and, no counteracting agencies being in operation, they are adopted by many of those to whom they are addressed." Vol 1, pp. 114–117.

"In Ireland, as well as in Great Britain, Millenarianism has lately made considerable progress, and is still continuing to do so. A few years since a series of lectures was delivered in Dublin on the leading principles which constitute the Millenarian creed; and these lectures have since been published in a cheap form, and been extensively circulated. They were delivered by some of the ablest and most zealous advocates in Ireland of the personal reign of Christ." Vol. 1, p. 122.

"But, perhaps, the progress of Millenarianism during the last half century could not be more strikingly shown than by a reference to the number of books which, within the last twenty-five or thirty years, have been written in its advocacy, and in its defence from authors by whom it has been attacked. It would not be easy to specify the titles of such publications, or, even to name their authors.

"With regard to Millenarian periodical literature, there is much more than might have been expected.

"Foremost in the list of periodicals specially devoted to the advocacy of Millenarian principles and the extension of Millenarian views, is the Quarterly Journal of Prophecy. It has now reached its fiftieth number. It displays an intimate acquaintaince with prophetic subjects generally, and advocates the principles which it was established to promote with great ability. It is under the editorial management of Rev. Dr. Bonar, of Kelso. But, though conducted by a minister of the Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland, the majority of its contributors are clergymen of the Church of England.

"A new monthly Millenarian periodical, entitled the Rainbow, is under the editorial auspices of Rev. Dr. Leask, lately of Ware, Hertfordshire, but now of Islington. It has a number of able and zealous contributors, thoroughly conversant with the Millenarian question"......... The conclusion:

"As Millenarianism is making such rapid progress among all evangelical denominations, I would put the question to those who view the subject in the same light as myself, Whether they think they are acting in accordance with the dictates of duty in not adopting measures to arrest its progress?"

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, JUNE 5, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"Yahveh."

When a person puts forth a claim to the discovery of a Bible truth which others were thought not to know, uninformed people are led to the conclusion that the imaginary discoverer is a "wonderful man;" especially when this man affirms that the thing was never "made known but twice; once by Moses, and never since until it was made known" by himself. Such a claim has of late been set up in respect to the "Memorial name, YAHVEH." Now, the person who makes this claim cannot be ignorant of the fact, nor have foegotten it, unless his mind has been overturned in one of its faculties, that "ALEXANDER MAC WHORTER, of Yale University," published a work of nearly 200 pages on this very subject, entitled, YAHVEH CHRIST, or the Memorial NAME," as long ago as 1857.

MAC WHORTER, speaking of the term YAHVEH, on page 23, says:

"With respect to this exegesis of the term 'Yahveh,' so far as the interests of criticism are concerned, all scholars are now agreed. Gesenius and Ewald on the side of philologists; Hengstenberg, Tholuck, Lutz, &c., on the side of theologians, are united for once. They all agree in giving it the form YAHVEH, and the future tense, as its literal rendering." ...."God himself originally set forth the meaning of this great prophetic name in the plainest terms, Ex. iii. 14. First by prophecy: 'I WILL BE WHO I WILL BE.' Next by the statement: 'I WHO WILL BE' hath sent you. Finally, by giving as his memorial name, YAHVEH,—'HE WHO WILL BE.'"

It is unnecessary that we should make further extracts from the work to show the mistaken position of the recent claimant to the credit of a wonderful discovery: he is but a mere copyist. The work of Mac Whorter has been in our library these ten years, and we read it before the claimant referred to was born into theology; and always found it an interesting work, even though we might not agree with all the conclusions. If credit is due to any one, more than another, for light on the memorial name, YAHVEH, in these days, it is due to Mac Whorter. Let this fact not be overlooked. His work was published by "GOULD & LINCOLN, Boston, Mass., 1857."

"Monomania."

Some persons seem not to understand the meaning of this term, and because the individual affected with it is not absolutely insane, in all his faculties, and is generally of a sane mind, they see no propriety in suggesting insanity in any degree. "Monomania" is a "Derangement of a single faculty of the mind, or with regard to a particular subject, the other faculties being in regular exercise." Such is WEBSTER's definition of the term; and such is the truth. If the monomania is on a particular subject, the person will converse on all others just as rational as ever; and because he does so, his admirers think he is wronged to call him "monomania;" when, in fact, the unprejudiced mind can no more fail to see that the person is so than he could fail to see the cloud that obscures the sun at noonday. We have been personally acquainted with more than one of these monomaniacs during the period of our ministry. One was the case of a Methodist Minister, some forty years ago. He was the "ALMIGHTY," and men must believe it in order to be saved. In our conversation with him on any other topic, he was as rational as any man. In this city, twenty-three years ago, another preacher got the idea, first, that he was "Elijah the Prophet," and soon after, that he was "that prophet like unto Moses," etc; and as for quoting and explaining Scripture we never saw his equal; it seemed as if he had it "all at his tongue's end;" and numbers were deluded by this appearance of a "wonderful man," as they counted him to be; yes, deluded to their ruin, spiritually and temporally.

Do some ask, "Why not meet the person and test his claims?" Being satisfied that he is monomania, we would act like one ourself to dispute with him. There is no amount of argument that can make an impression on such a person; and as to those who have been brought under his influence, to accept his testimony, they cannot be reached by argument, unless by some means they can be detached entirely from intercourse with him. So long as they continue to visit and receive visits from him, or attend on his ministry, if he is a preacher, so long they will be holden by him, and they cannot escape: it is like any other mesmeric influence to which a person has yielded himself, or parleys with: to stand doubting, is to be carried captive; nothing but an immediate and determined stand can save those who find themselves drawing towards the acceptance of the monomaniac's claims. No controversy with the person, himself, will probably be of the slightest use, in saving others from the snare.

In this matter we know whereof we speak; we have not spoken at random. If others are not satisfied we cannot help it; but they must not ask us to hold a controversy, orally or by writing, with one of whose monomaniaism we have not the slightest doubt. We hope we are now understood. It is not our intention to refer to this subject again, and trust there will be no necessity for us to do so.

Questions by James H. Jacobs.

1. Can any person "obtain that world, and a resurrection from the dead" who will not have been judged previous to obtaining it?

2. Can any "obtain that world and resurrection from the dead" who will not be a "child of God, being a child of the resurrection?"

3. Can any person be "counted worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead" who will not be judged worthy of it previous to obtaining it?

4. Can the Judge give his decision on those who are worthy to obtain that world and a resurrection from the dead, without, at the same time, deciding the destiny of the rest of the dead?

Freetown, N. Y., 1867.

To all these questions, no other answer can be given by an impartial and unbiased mind, but that of an emphatic No. Any contrary response would be to confound truth and falsehood, and turn the scriptures of truth into "cunningly devised fables." Life from the dead is a gift of God's grace; bestowed on those "who are accounted worthy," through and by Jesus Christ, who is the "resurrection and the Life." To talk of this gift being forced on men, to whom it would be the greatest curse, whether for a temporary or eternal period, to our mind, is the grandest absurdity. This is the will of Him that sent me, that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40. To talk of Jesus, the LIFE-GIVER, raising all others also from the dead, for any purpose, temporary or eternal, destroys the force and meaning of this text, and hundreds of others. But we cannot expect even all sincere christians to see this at once. They must have time to get their eyes annointed by the great Physician; and then, perhaps, at first they will only "see men as trees walking;" so powerful are pre-conceived notions and the prejudices of early teachings. Let us, therefore, labor patiently till the scales shall fall from their eyes. The light of life from the dead, only for the righteous, has been too powerful for their weak eyes; but they will, ere long, hail it as the grand sunbeams of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Labor in New Fields.

II. CANAJOHARIE, N. Y.

This is a considerable village in Montgomery County, on the line of the New York Central Railroad, fifty-seven miles west of Albany. It was the place of my residence from May 27, 1850, to March 16, 1857; during which period of almost seven years I held a position in the office of the Montgomery County Mutual Insurance Company. In February, 1851, my wife and myself became established in the belief of Immortality through Christ alone; and about five years later I embraced the precious truth of no future life out of Christ, and began to take part in its advocacy through the pages of the BIBLE EXAMINER. During the time I resided in Canajoharie, my doctrinal position, as might be supposed, became tolerably well understood by the community—perfectly so, especially, by the successive Methodist pastors of the village, with whom I was uniformly on intimate terms, and with one of whom, Rev. S. Meredith, now a Presiding Elder and residing at Saratoga Springs, I was incessantly in theological conflict during his two years in the place.

Through years after I commenced to preach, my Methodist friends in Canajoharie spoke to me repeatedly on the subject of my preaching in the place, saying that their church would be open to me for that purpose. But the way for complying with their oft-repeated request seemed not to open. Last summer, however, I found it convenient to send them an appointment. Accordingly I wrote to my brother-in-law on the subject, he being a leading and official member of the M. E. church of the place. A portion of my letter, dated July 31, 1866, was as follows:

"As you are well aware, there has been considerable said to me, first and last, by my Methodist friends in Canajoharie, about my preaching in your church. Heretofore, the convenient opportunity for me to offer to comply with the suggestion has not seemed to come round. But I write this to say, that if it is desired, and Providence permitting, I am willing to preach for you on Sunday evening, August 12th. In making this proposal, however, I wish to have two things perfectly understood: 1. If I preach in Canajoharie—where I am known by the whole community, and where it is known that I hold some doctrinal views not in accordance with the prevailing belief—I must be left entirely free in respect to the subject upon which I shall speak. Christ is my Master, and to him alone in this matter will I be responsible. The probability is, that, if I preach in your church I shall present views which the people are not accustomed to hear. At any rate, I am not willing to be deprived of my liberty in this respect. I am thus explicit, in order that you may all exactly understand with what feelings I name the matter of occupying your pulpit for one service. The liberty I ask for myself I always freely extend to any who preach for me. A time-serving policy I abhor. 2. I am not willing to preach in your pulpit unless the arrangement has the cordial assent of your Pastor and leading brethren. You must not act in the matter to please me. Do what you believe God will approve, and I shall be perfectly satisfied. I would not write you on this subject but for the fact that some of you have so often mentioned the matter of my preaching in Canajoharie. You are at liberty to make whatever use you see fit of this letter. I would like to have you read it to ———, as he has so frequently mentioned the matter of my preaching in 'your church." Etc.

On receiving my letter, my brother-in-law laid the matter before several leading members of the church, who expressed themselves entirely pleased with my proposal. But he subsequently, as it was fitting that he should do, sought the concurrence of his pastor; and at this point the programme crumbled in pieces in almost no time at all. Said pastor (who had recently come in the place) listened to the reading of my letter until that portion was reached which said, "Christ is my Master, and to him alone in this matter will I be responsible;" whereupon the decision was promptly announced, that I could not occupy his pulpit. He said that he was resposible to the Conference for the sentiments he allowed to be taught from his pulpit; and he further stated that I might in one discourse do an amount of mischief which he could not undo in six months. And so forth.

Arriving at Albany, I found a letter advising me of the above result, and also informing me of the feelings it had awakened in the community. It was proposed, if I desired it, to try to secure the use of the Lutheran church. I went to Canajoharie, and, with almost no difficulty at all, the Lutheran church was obtained. Sunday evening came, and with it a densely crowded house. The pastor of the church was on hand and offered the opening prayer.

The sermon was devoted to an exposition of 1 Thess. iv. 13–18, and much liberty was enjoyed in unfolding the subject. This was the first public presentation of the life view that was ever given in Canajoharie; and it awakened much interest in the question.

During the week following the late Brooklyn Debate, I visited Canajoharie; and after a brief conference with a few persons, I decided to preach there on the afternoon and evening of Sunday May 6th. Sayles's Hall—a large and well-seated one—was at once engaged; and a lot of large handbills was seasonably distributed throughout the village and vicinity. On the posters it was stated that the "Subjects of Discourse" would be, "The mortality of Man—the Unconsciousness of the Dead—and the final extinction of the Wicked;"—and that "the whole" was "to be considered in the light of the Holy Scriptures."

The attendance on Sunday afternoon was large; but in the evening the hall was crowded—there being probably not less than five hundred persons present. The afternoon subject was the nature of man, and of the Edenic death penalty. The evening discourse was devoted to a direct consideration of bible testimony relating to the state of the dead.

The afternoon sermon was listened to by Rev. Geo. W. Henry, an estimable and singularly gifted blind preacher of the Free Methodist church (formerly of the M. E. C.) After pondering over the discourse until breakfast time on Monday morning, he was free to confess that he was unable to pick any flaw in it.

In my next I shall speak of Fort Plain.

R. W.

Fort Plain to be Revisited.

On Sunday afternoon, June 9, I shall commence, in the Universalist Church in Fort Plain, N. Y., a short course of sermons, (probably four in number) in review of Rev. Dr. Hawley's reply of May 14, to my discourse, on the resurrection of the dead, preached in that place on the evening of May 8th; and in reply also to two sermons in support of the immortality of the soul, that were preached by Dr. H. on the morning and evening of May 19th. The occasion is anticipated with much interest, and a seasonable account of how matters progress may be looked for in the paper. Dr. Hawley has taken up the cudgel unbidden, and said some very hard things of the views he opposes; but it is morally certain that he has got himself into water so deep that he cannot touch bottom. This I gather from the reports that reach me. It would, however, be, very undignified for him now to retire from the conflict without at least trying to hold his ground—unless he sees his mistake and manfully confesses it. "We shall see what we shall see.

R. W.

NEW TRACTS.—We have received several new tracts from Eld. R. V. Lyon, of Suspension Bridge, N. Y. One is entitled "Looking for Jesus, or the Time of his Coming;" another is "The Gospel of God is the Great Motive Power to Lead Men to worship Him," which includes also "What Condition is Man between Death and the Resurrection, and where is He?" Another is "The Gathering and Conversion of Israel, or Israel the Head of the Nations in the Age to Come, and not the Tail." The first and last are of that speculative class of which the world is almost deluged; but Elder Lyon writes in a good spirit, and eschews all personalities, and so makes his writings very readables. He regards the year 1867 as the one in which all the periods are filled up, bringing in a new age, and his arguments are given in the first named. He believes the literal Jews, known as such in the world, are to be returned to the Holy Land and there by witnessing the visible tokens of Christ's majesty, are to be converted, and then become the great controlling power in the new age. Those who sicken and die on the way or get shipwrecked and lost will be very unfortunate—as with them it is the difference of eternal destruction and eternal exaltation.

W. M.

Judgment: Resurrection.

Did God enter into judgment with the people that lived before the flood? He did, and declared that their way was evil, and only evil. Did he pronounce sentence upon them? He did: "I will destroy (blot out) man from the earth." Did he execute the judgment written? He did. Will God raise up that people to life and enter into judgment with them again? What for? is God a man that he should err? Did not the judge of all the earth do right? Was not that judgment according to truth, and final? It was. They are gone forever.

Begotten of God by the word of his power:
How then shall we be born in that blissful hour?
Begotten by incorruptible seed,
To a life CORRUPTIBLE! logic indeed!
Begotten of God; in corruption were sown,
But raised up immortal by power from the throne.
A mortal resurrection! that monstrous thing!
Such a bantling was sired by the Crisis' ring,
Brought forth for the purpose their hope to secure;
An ungodly harvest of all the impure!
A harvest of brambles, of wheat and of tares,
Christ Jesus, the righteous, no sample of theirs.
The first fruit was holy, the lump must be too,
The handful of wheat was a sample for you.

W. H. HANFORD.

New York.

The Value of Truth.

BY LUCRETIA B. LAMB.

Pilate said to Jesus, What is truth? How little he regarded the answer to his inquiry, is seen in his subsequent conduct. How little he imagined that truth stood before him in all the sublimity of power, wisdom and love—a culprit. Some idea that he was an innocent man possessed him, and hence his efforts to release him, and his vain endeavor to cleanse himself from guilt by washing his hands when he relinquished the power vested in him as a Roman Governor, and suffered the most heinous crime to be perpetrated that ever disgraced the pages of history; little dreaming that that condemned malefactor would one day judge the world in righteousness, and that in him dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.

Do we not find similar instances of blindness and folly in these later times of boasted light and knowledge, in this nineteenth century? An inquirer, seeking for Bible truth, is often directed to Barnes' Notes, or Clarke's Commentary. Sabbath school teachers who have grown gray in the christian service, carry to their classes from sabbath to sabbath these Notes, feeling unable without them to direct the inquirers: and when the obvious meaning of the word clashes with these Notes, it must be warped, or has a hidden meaning, a spiritual interpretation.

How much, by so doing, are we in advance of Pilate, who inquired, What is truth? yet did not wait for a reply? We seek for it, but go to a blind source, where there is no inspiration of God. How many satisfy themselves and palm off upon inquirers the imaginings of a mere man, who, guided by tradition and vain philosophy, has warped the scriptures to suit a preconceived theory; and what is worse, many stop investigation with the absurd idea that it matters little what we believe, if we but do right.

Jesus did not so regard it. He said to Pilate, "I came to bear witness to the truth:" something surely of vast importance that required a messenger from the highest court in the universe. Also, in his last memorable prayer for his own—"Sanctify them through thy truth." The apostle Paul requires the christian soldier to gird his loins with truth: and the fountain from whence we are to draw is found in God's word; "thy word is truth," said Jesus; and his estimate of it is seen in his command to the prophet, saying, "Let him that hath my word speak my word: for what is the chaff to the wheat," saith the LORD? It surely cannot be of small moment what we believe, if the one is wheat and the other chaff; or rather, Is not belief in truth the basis of right action, and the foundation of the superstructure that is to be erected with shoutings of "grace, grace unto it?"

There is such a thing as truth, unchangable as its Author; a deathless principle, however much dispised, obscured, and neglected, which is to the believer like pearls amid rubbish; they still shine and will continue to shine; and ere long will be seen in living letters of fire, and all read their import. There will then be no careless readers; none who make the inquiry and turn away, or satisfy their minds with the speculations of past ages. The attention will be fixed. Some countenances gathering blackness while others will be radiant with peace and joy.

With these views, christian friends, we can well afford to bear reproach, and meet the look of scorn. With truth for our helmet we are invincible. Let us then perseveringly dig for it, and dig deep. It will repay our efforts. Let us drink at the pure fountain of God's word, so satisfying that all thirst is directed into the channel of thirsting for righteousness.

The consciousness of possessing the truth, even in this life, is a complete quietus to all anxieties for the present and future—a well-spring of life, sparkling with the saccharina of immortality and eternal life. Jesus, its exponent, invested with all power in heaven and in earth; ere long to be crowned amid the enraptured gaze of admiring multitudes, King of kings and Lord of lords.

St. Paul Minn.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. Samuel L. Walter.

HORNSBY, ILLS., May 27, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—After an absence of about two months, I am at home again, in health, as good as ever I enjoyed, only a little hoarse from cold. My family, and the friends here and elsewhere are enjoying good health.

The season here is a month late; is cold and rainy. The farmers say, they have too much rain. The wheat looks well, and bids fair for a plentiful harvest. The peach, and other fruit trees, show signs of abundance of fruit. Corn planting is not quite through with.

I have been to Jersey Co., preached at Grafton in the Methodist church to a good audience; also, at White school house and Shilo. The word of life was heard with attention. I spoke once from, "Why will ye die?" I tried to show that the question in the text was, Why will ye remain under the power of death, in that decomposition and corruption which takes place in consequence of the death that has passed on all men, &c., but is the result of our own action, and not God's will? To which a Baptist Minister took exception, as I learned. He was out to all our meetings at White school-house. He has consciousness in death, without immortality; a resurrection of all, good and bad, and a liability to fall after we obtain immortality, but not subject to death. This is the way I understood him in a conversation with him. I found an other Br., an Adventist, of the same faith about the falling in that world to come, of the raised, and conscious existence in death, and heaven right down here, and living spirits all around us. I was well plied with questions for twelve hours. I showed him "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE:" he was out with that, because the Author said, that Pharisees did not believe that "all the dead, Gentiles and all," would be resurrected. I should like if you would let us know where Dr. Clarke says, "It was the opinion of the Jews themselves, that their fathers, who perished in the wilderness, should never have a resurrection?" He does not give his authority. I want it to stop the mouths of the men who try by their tradition, to overthrow the truth of God. [You will find it in the Doctor's Notes on John vi.—EDITOR.]

In the Apocrypha—2 Maccabees vii. 14, it is said, "It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God to be raised up again," &c.... "thou shalt have no resurrection to life."

I had quite a good hearing at Jersey Landing, or Elsah. I preached there several times; but the Orthodox do all they can to prevent the people from hearing; but they come because we are not such bad men as they thought, and do not condemn the Bible, but hold fast to it as the rule of faith, and to be looked into, and "taken heed unto as a light that shineth in a dark place, till the day dawn and the day star arise."

At Lebanon I found the few in full faith of life only through Christ, and when the LIFE-GIVER comes; "that the just by faith shall live again" At Hickory Grove the christians have had the waters troubled, and about half a hundred have stepped in, according to their order of things. I hope that they may all be taught of the Lord, and may be baptized by one Spirit into one body. They profess to have no other faith than the Bible, and have agreed to let any Br. Preacher, who may chance to be there, whatever his views may be, preach, and receive only Bible truth. Under such a declaration of faith, I was invited to preach. Before a large congregation, as I rose to give out my text, one of the Elders whispered in my ear, you must not preach about the non-resurrection of the wicked. It seems as though they thought God could not govern men without a lake of fire to burn them in. One of them said, he got out with a Br. Bartlett because he did not believe in eternal punishment; because he did not believe in fire and brimstone. I gave them the characteristics of the church of God, and that Love was the true badge of membership; add they that did not live up to the royal law, they were not members of Christ's body. I preached at Tarapin Ridge. We can't get a place in Lebanon to hold meeting. I told them we must have a meeting, if it was in some of their houses. I was invited by the leader in the colored Methodist church to preach for them, as I had before; but when he gave out the appointment the white folks cried "Mad-dog; materialist; he don't believe the wicked will rise," &c.; and the Elder said, "He can't preach in our church." So I was shut out again. I believe that all things work together for good.

At Hickory Grove, on the 19th inst, I found the Bro., who is the active man, a local minister, among the christians. The brethren dare not invite me to preach; so he invited me into the desk, and asked me to open the meeting. I did so. He then told them, as there were so few present, on account of the rain, we would have a sociable. There were between 30 and 40 present. He spake from 2 Tim. iv. 1; the charge to "preach the word?" occupied about 15 minutes. As he could not get any of them to talk, he then asked me, if I had any thing to say. I rose and said, the reason why Paul changed Timothy, was, "that all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instructions in righteousness; that the man of God may be perfect, thorougly furnished unto all good works." Hence, "I charge thee, therefore," &c., from the facts above stated. How the fact that God gave "all scripture" is overlooked by the masses; and they overlook the fact that they are "profitable for doctrine," &c., "that the man of God may be perfect," &c. Many out here can only see perfection, in a perfect immersion in water; and to teach an immersion by the Spirit, as the essental baptism, is an "error;" consequently, a misrepresentation; hence blasphemy; and all this from not obeying Paul's charge.

The fact, that the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine, &c, was another reason why the word should be preached. They love fables more than the word of God. It appeared as though the Lord gave the Bro. the text, and sent me to apply it; which I did. I believe the Lord directed me. I hope good will be done. The act of the Elder was condemed by the people. They ask, Who gave him authority not to let me preach!

Yesterday I preached here: had a good time, and had the minister of the old Baptists to hear. I invited him to close, which he did, after his peculiar style, spiritualizing all the scriptures, except baptism—that was literal water.

I have sold five volumes of "The Theology of the Bible." I showed it to a young man that has been brought up a Methodist, but attends our meeting. He looked over it, and said, I'll have one; so he took the last one I had. I wish they were in the hands of all the ministers. I think their immortal soul, found in Gen. ii. 7, would be part and parcel of the souls "of reptiles," and everything else just as immortal as man, and would see that they wanted a Life-giver to save them from death. I hope to sell more. I shall go south again before I go north. There are a plenty of places where we can get a good hearing: and in these days, when it seems that gain is godliness, there are but few that help. Yet, praise the Lord, I have bread given, and water sure. Amen.

From H. Rockwell.

Feeding Hills, Mass., May 25, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—If I am beside myself in relation to the doctrine of the resurrection, much learning hath not made me mad. If I am in error, it can never be removed by unkind and unchristian language. I have had a religious experience of over 53 years, 51 of which have been in the ministry, yet I have to confess that I have been profoundly ignorant in regard to many very important and interesting truths; yet God in his mercy was patient with me. I suppose the reason of His long forbearance was, the time for the wonderful development of dispensational truth, which had been hid in God ever since the world began, had not fully come, but is now being made known to the church. I believe the precious Bible contains precious truths that I do not yet understand, and should not, even if I were qualified to preside over all the Camp-meetings in the world, or bear the honor of being a Bishop in the church.

Our blessed Saviour did not teach us to pray, "Give us this day bread enough to last us to the end of our life." No, thank his dear name, it is, "Give us this day our daily bread." How good the Lord is. He wants his children to have fresh bread every day. He does not want them to gather so much today as to have it become worm eaten. He calls us to "Search the Scriptures," and saith, "In them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." Why say to us, "search"? I used to think and preach that the whole human race had eternal life in the Scriptures—poor, unconverted sinners, and all: that the eternal life of the righteous consisted in an immortal soul that went to heaven at death—that death was "the gate to endless joy;" and suprising to say, we all "dread to enter there." The sinner, I taught, had an immortal soul and could not die; hence, had eternal life, but must live in awful torments eternally.

I had read, indeed, "The wages of sin is death;" but I had read some other things that not only eminent Elders, but some of our modern Adventists had so shrouded in mystery that I did not understand them. I used to say, "death" was "a death that never dies." So ignorant was I, and should never have known my mistake if I had not searched the Scriptures. But I have been told, recently, by a so-called "brother," that I am "a donkey" and "a wooden head." Will he please tell me if such creatures can be mesmerized? or whether the Bible gives any information that such are to be raised up from the dead? If I am "a donkey," or "wooden head," it will be a sufficient excuse for all my errors, and a good reason for a non-resurrection. My heart is pained by such unchristian language, and I get no relief by asking it of them.

Brethren and Sisters, let us watch and pray that we do not get into satan's sifter. O, that we may be able to strengthen one another—may we have light in the Lord, and walk as children of light. We are living in a solemn time; our adversary goeth about seeking whom to devour. May the good Shepherd shield his flock. The devil is marshalling his forces for his last campaign. He would give a higher bounty for one Adventist than for a regiment of any other class of men. I dreamed a few nights since he had opened a recruiting office, in Boston, and run up his flag with the motto, "Thy kingdom never to come." The same old flag run up in Eden, on the tree by which poor mother Eve was ruined. May the Lord help us to escape, and keep ourselves in the way of life and peace.

I wish to repeat a Bible question, and let that book answer it. "Some man will say, How are the dead raised up? and with what body do they come?" The answer does not say that "donkeys and wooden heads" will be raised up. For the great apostle to talk in that way would seem to be out of character, especially as he "was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel." How could he, with his christian experience, commence an answer to a question, on which the hope of the entire church depends, in any other than in a plain and logical manner? In this manner he gives the order of the resurrection—the answer to the heart-cheering question, "How are the dead raised up?" and it is, "This corruptible shall put on incurruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality." This I believe is the only Bible way in which the sting of death can be effectually removed so that dead men can live again, or be made alive from death. If this includes the whole race of Adam, then I do not see much beauty, glory, or mercy, in keeping the way of the tree of life guarded by cherubim and a flaming sword, lest man should eat thereof and live forever an immortal sinner: that is, if all are to live again from the dead, and live forever, as some maintain, the exclusion from the tree of life was really of no avail.

Note by the Editor.—Our friend Rockwell is a new correspondent, and some of his expressions may need an explanation. If we understand him, in speaking of "donkies and wooden heads," he has reference to the words of the father of the "mortal resurrection" doctrine; which doctrine was invented by a very refined (!) personage, calling himself an "Advent Preacher," to oppose the view that, "The righteous only will live again from the dead." But charging us with such stupidity, only manifests a lack of argument and shows him wholly unfit for the calling he has assumed.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

Otto, Fulton Co., Ills., May 23, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—I write by way of appeal to the preaching brethren for help, as we have learned the fact that Br. Campbell's health, together with other circumstances, renders it impossible for him to come out here this summer to travel with the tent, which is truly a disappointment to us and the brethren in general; for they all want to hear him. But we must bear the disappointment and count it all for the best. We find, to our great joy and satisfaction that our labor has not been in vain in old Fulton Co.; as it has not in other fields of labor; and now it only remains for the preaching brethren to say who will come and join us in this important field. Let us hear soon, for the King's business requires haste. Time is short; and what is done must be done quickly in order to save souls from death. Who will come? Say, who? and respond to me at this place. By so doing you will confer a favor on the old one-armed preacher.

From Helen Robertson.

Alexandria, Va., May 30, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—Yours, with the money order enclosed, is received. Thank you for it, and thank our dear heavenly Father for his goodness. I have been intending to write you for some time, but the spring has been so trying that imperative duty has been about all we could attend to. We long for the day when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality. Then neither Southern nor Northern climes will have any debilitating effects upon us.

During the winter our association schools were in three or four different parts of the city; but lately we had a large school house built, and now we have eight schools in one large building. There is a separate room for each school. At first it seemed a little confusing; but we get along nicely now. Our schools still continue large and interesting, and many of the scholars have improved rapidly.

About the religious interest, I hardly know what to say. This is an extraordinary excitable people, and feeling among them is easily produced, but that soon passes off with little result. My great aim has been to teach them something solid and abiding. I read the scriptures to them daily, and try to impress the precious lessons upon their mind. This has been with decided effect; for I can see a marked difference on many of them. They also listen with good attention, and seem pleased with the idea that they can read the Bible for themselves. My great desire is that I may see some of the fruit of my labors in the everlasting kingdom. Next month, June, finishes up our school year, and then the teachers expect to return North.

I thank my dear Advent friends who have supplied my board money. Also, those who have sent their donations, both in money and clothing, for the poor. Br. E. A. Poole sent a second ten dollars for the poor. I don't remember whether I acknowledged it before or not through the Herald of Life. I have tried to be faithful to my trust, and may our Father reward the donors.

Eternal life never seemed more precious than now; nor more worth giving up all for. Our light afflictions, which are but for a moment, work for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Who would not choose rather to suffer afflictions with the people of God than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, seeing that these very afflictions purify and fit us for an eternal home in the kingdom? Brethren and Sisters, let us be faithful to the death, and we will soon get the crown of life. One day in the new earth will repay for all. What will immortality and an eternal residence do? The Lord help us to occupy patiently till he come.

Enclosed find two dollars for a new subscriber.

From G. B. Stacy.

Amelia Ct. House, Va., May, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—As a continued reader of the Bible Examiner and the Herald of Life, I have always given you great credit for candor and fairness, notwithstanding I have differed with you in one of your principle deductions from the great truth which you have so vigorously and efficiently advocated, "No Life out of the Christ, or Life only in the Christ, more properly speaking. This position I first publicly advocated in the Gospel Banner, published in Nottingham, England, in 1850.

In 1842 myself and the nephew of the great Thos. Scott, the Commentator, then residing in Lincoln, England, commenced the investigation of the grand proposition, What does God confer upon the repentant sinner at his conversion? The conclusion arrived at was "Life." Namely: The Lord our Righteousness is made "The Life;" and when we are converted, He becomes "Our Life"—"The Christ our Life." Since then I have firmly defended the glorious doctrine of "Life in the Christ," and only "in the Christ." So far I believe we are agreed. But when you, and your friends, deduce from this grand and glorious truth the conclusion, that there is no resurrection for any that are not in the Christ, I am compelled to tell you, that your conclusion is not in your premises; and insist, that you prove, that the resurrection is the media through which God imparts life to the subjects thereof.

2. Your position necessitates the conclusion that the decease, or demise, of the sons of Adam involves their perfect death, or extinction of organized being. I claim the proof of this.

As the affirmants, you are bound to demonstrate these two positions; and when you have done this, I shall have other propositions resultant therefrom to present for your consideration.

Now as nothing but truth is valuable, or worthy of reception, or can be of any service to us in this life or that to come, I expect you to meet these questions fairly for the truth's sake, and await patiently the result, trusting the Herald of Life will ever be the media for the candid and honest investigation of any, every, and all scriptural truths.

I am yours, faithfully and truly.

Note by the Editor:—If Br. Stacy expects us to put to silence all those who oppose our views, in all the objections they may raise, he expects us to do what he himself, or any other mere man, never did nor never can do. If "the resurrection is" not "the media through which God imparts" a future "life to the subjects thereof," then let our friend tell us, if he is a believer in a future life without a resurrection; or, if he believes a future life is produced in any other way than by the Spirit of God quickening our mortal bodies to immortality, "at the last day."

Wm. Johnson, Milford, Me., writes:—I cannot do without the Herald of Life; every week it appears as one of my best friends. It travels through much opposition in these parts, yet its rays of light have fallen on some dark minds, and caused them to be interested about the truth as it is in Jesus.

Joseph K. Marshall, North Chester, Mass., sends $5, and writes:—I feel thankful that I have it in my power to make this remittance for the Herald of Life. We feel that it is doing a great good in the gospel message of life through faith in the Life-giver, Jesus Christ. May God bless those interested in this glorious work. Our whole influence shall be exerted to further the gospel of life in Christ. Yours, "looking for the blessed hope."

O. O. Rogers, Bethel, Vt., writes:—I have received a letter from my brother in Minnesota. He feels a deep interest in the Herald of Life, and feels that it is all the preaching he gets that is any good to him; and that he desires not to lose the once despised paper, but now the loved and longed for. I would that the Lord would hasten the day when we shall all appear before him in love and eternal bloom; where joy and peace will forever reign, with Christ our head. Halleluia to the Lamb of God. Yours, in hope of eternal life when the Life-giver comes.

E. A. Poole, Lincklaen, N. Y., writes:—I thank you for the pamphlets sent me in answer to my first communication, and also for the Herald of Life. I have read them with much interest, and I trust with profit. I thank you also for your notice of "The Theology of the Bible," by Hon. O. S. Halsted, by which means I have been enabled to procure the work. It is a mine of wealth to the searcher after truth.

Note by the Editor.—We "thank" you for the help you send to the cause. We have sent you all the works you desired; but Life only in Christ was delayed for several days, as we were out of the work, but now have a supply.

An Object of Charity.

Br. Storrs:—I would that the Spirit of God migh move my pen so as to meet the eye and touch the heart of every steward of the Lord, that the Lord's money may so be dispensed that he may be glorified, and suffering saints be made to bless the fountain of all good.

Br. John Craig has been, and is now, a faithful promulgator of that which, to his mind, is truth. His past losses and crosses have been almost without number. At the present time, laboring by day and watching by night have sorely taxed his health and strength. He sees his wife dying by inches, under the eating of two cancers, the groans of the sufferer, three children to be clothed and fed, help to assist take care of the sick, many little articles of taste or medicine, $300 to be paid on house, a doctor's bill, fuel to be obtained, and all without money! Is the body one? If one member suffers do not all the members suffer with it? Is it true, as ye have done it to one of the least of the children of God, our Saviour says, it is done to Him?

Br. Craig needs money now. Lord, help the stewards of thy rich treasures to see thy will toward thy suffering now; and that stewardship and ownership are not the same; let them see that the body (the church) is one. Br Craig needs help, and is it not the duty of the children of God to see that his wants are supplied?

James Crawford.

Roxbury, Mass.

Note by the Editor.—We presume Br. Crawford's statement of Br. Craig's affliction and destitution is correct; and we hope means may be provided for his relief without delay. His address is, "Eld. John Craig, Westford, Mass." Let each of those who can aid him, do so, direct, in the safest way possible. Br. Crawford will receive and apply any money sent by those in his vicinity.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

FOREIGN.

The most intense interest is felt not only in our own country, but throughout Europe in regard to Maximilian, now that his empire has collapsed. At a meeting in New York a distinguished Mexican official made the following statement in answer to some questions about the probable fate of Maximilian.

A great deal of sympathy has been expressed with regard to Maximilian, and a great deal of indignation has been aroused in this country by the report of his execution. The true position of affairs in Mexico for the past few years is not very generally understood. It should be remembered that about two years ago a price was set upon the head of Juarez, and that the imperialists openly violated the laws of civilized warfare. They gave authority to any imperialist soldier above the rank of corporal to shoot down all captured liberals, even though they might have attained the rank of general. In consequence of this proclamation no less than twelve thousand Mexicans have been butchered. Two of the most patriotic liberal generals, men of good family, of great wealth, and of deservedly high popularity—Ortega and Solazar—have been murdered. The Mexican people now demand some retaliation for these horrible cruelties, and Juarez, even if he wishes to do so, cannot withstand the will of the people. Maximilian has sent large sums of money to Europe from Mexico, and if he is liberated he will be able to live for the remainder of his life in luxury and splendor on the treasure of which he has plundered the Mexican people. The Mexican people now argue in this way: Here comes a filibuster, the son of an emperor, the brother of another emperor, to overturn our own American form of government and found a monarchy. If we do not execute this man now that we have captured him, if we do not punish him, but allow him to go home unharmed, somebody else will come. These princes will say, "If we win we shall have a good thing, and if we lose we can retire to Europe and console ourselves by spending the money which we can rob from these people."

The late disorders in Burmah, and the anarchy which still prevails there, threaten to produce a famine. Rice is said to be enormously dear.

The Paris correspondent of the London Daily News transmits an extraordinary rumor from the French capital to the effect that a high military officer is in the Fort of Vincennes, under arrest, accused of treasonable practices, and in particular of having betrayed to Prussia the French plan of a campaign in case of a war.

Reliable intelligence from Crete announces that Omar Pacha has been thrice repulsed in a great attack made on the insurgent at Sphakia.

The Turkish government has prepared for promulgating the following reforms:

The reorganization of the financial system.

The creation of a new council of state.

A reform of the military schools; the change of all provinces into villas; the granting to foreigners the right of land tenure.

A singular tidal phenomena had been witnessed in Maui, Sandwich Islands, the water rising three feet eight times at intervals of fifteen minutes.

News from Spain still presents the station under anything but a satisfactory aspect. Measures of rigor and arrests of the suspected continue and the language of the president of the council in the senate shows that the government itself is not at ease with regard to the maintenance of order. Marshall Narvaez has been compelled to admit that at the present moment the Queen's throne has nothing to support it but the army.

In Florence King Victor Emanuel received a deputation from the Chamber of Deputies to congratulate him on the marriage of the Prince Amadeus, and to express their gratitude for his renunciation of four millions of his civil list. The king in his reply adverted to the present condition of Italy and Europe, and said that he had welcomed with pleasure the Treaty of London, in which he was happy that Italy had participated, adding:—"Nevertheless, we must form no illusions. Other complications may arise from at present unforseen events. We shall be fortunate if, in this period of peace, we succeed in reorganizing the finances. The conditions of improvement are only courage and perseverance.

Revolutions and war are chronic in all Central and South America. Mosquera has proclaimed himself Dictator of New Granada, dissolved the Congress, arrested many of the opposition members, declared null and void all the laws passed during the session, formed Bogota into a Federal District, with one of his adherents as governor, and sent a circular to the various states calling for a re-election of Congressmen.

The long-expected conference of the foreign ministers with the government of Japan has taken place at Osaca, and is reported to have had entirely satisfactory results. The ports of Yeddo, Osaca, and Negato will be opened on the 1st of January next. The Japanese are in favor of progress.

John Stuart Mill on the 20th of May made a powerful speech in the House of Commons in favor of female suffrage.

The Liberals in England have gained another important victory in the House of Commons, an amendment depriving all boroughs having less than 10,000 inhabitants of the right of sending a representative, having been carried by the large majority of 127. The abolition of the "rotten boroughs" will be a fatal blow at the influence of the Tories upon the elections.

The Czar of Russia, accompanied by two of his sons, arrived in Paris June 1, from Berlin. Napoleon received the emperor in brilliant style and the people were quite enthusiastic. The flags of the two empires were united in the Tuilleries. The King of Prussia is expected immediately and the Sultan of Turkey, King of Italy, Emperor of Austria, Viceroy of Egypt, and other rulers soon afterwards.

The cable news reports of June 2d indicate that important results have already ensued from the royal Congress in Paris. Russia and Prussia having, during the visit of the Czar to Berlin, agreed to pursue an identical line of policy on the Eastern question, we find that the Sultan of Turkey consents to submit the affaris of Crete to a commission of the European powers. Russia has granted a general amnesty to the Poles engaged in the late insurrection.

Books, Pamphlets, and Tracts can be had at the Editor's residence; of Geo. W. Young, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 37 Park Row, Room 40.

Meetings in Brooklyn, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock. Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "Sawyer's Piano-forte Rooms." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—David J. Ellsworth, Sandford Hart, Geo. W. Gompf, Alsop S. Sexton, William Chapin.

Two Dollars each from—J. G. Heath, Juline French, (G. B. Stacy, there was no money in your letter,) Jeremiah B. Lamb, John Salman.

Various Sums.

William A. Orcutt, $3; Thomas W. Wright, $3; Thomas Apthorp, $3; E. A. Poole, $2.75; Joseph K. Marshall, $5.

Book and Tract Fund.

"A friend," Lincklean, N. Y.	$5 00

Freedmen's Mission.

For Helen Robertson.

Eunice Turner, North Woburn, Mass.,	$1 00
Thos. M. Redhead, Brooklyn, N. Y.	5 00
T. R. Crocker " "	5 00
Dr. Joseph Trever, Lockport, N. Y.	5 00
Eliza Apthorp, Oakfield "	2 00
B. D. Wolcott, Eatontown, N. J.	1 50
"A friend," Lincklean, N. Y.	5 00

Mr. Griswold, Dubuque, Iowa, for tracts sent him, we have received $3.30.

Advertisements.

Meadville Theological School.

THE NEXT TERM begins September 2d, 1867. The Faculty of instruction consists of four resident and four non-resident Professors, and a Tutor. The object is to educate young men for the Christian Ministry. Beneficiary aid is given to indigent students. The tuition, use of library, and text books are free to all. The school was founded by the Unitarian and Christian denominations, but is open to all who believe in the divine origin of Christianity. The library consists of nine thousand five hundred volumes. Application may be made to Rev. A. A. Livermore, President of the Board of Instruction, Meadville, Pa.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE,
LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS,
GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
Office Hours, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK.

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 Chambers St.,
NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(Room 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they ros in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity: by Geo. Storrs Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letter to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

Man's Nature and Destiny; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

The Atonement, by Geo. Storrs, and The Gospel Hope, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, New York.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our Catalogue our work on "Man's Destiny," being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance Bible vs. Tradition, bound, to $1: in paper cover, to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the Herald of Life, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are here by revoked.

Poetry.

THE "BLESSED JESUS."

Now glory to the Lord on high,
His glory we will sing;
And glory to the Son, his Christ,
Who life to us will bring—
His tidings glad, the Gospel hope
As told to man on earth,
When erst there came to Adam's race,
A new and wondrous birth.
The star of ages past and dim,
The promised seed, had come,
Messiah, Prince, in lowly garb,
For him, no roof or home.
With holy mien, with sorrow's care,
No tears did he withhold,
But called his sheep from far and near,
To come within the fold.
To him the Father gave them all,
Not one will he forsake,
And who is weary, worn or faint,
Into his arms will take.
Nor bruised reed will break, but will
In mercy seek the heart,
And on the child of wayward sin
His kindly glances dart.
And though with scoff and scorn assailed,
His mild and gentle ways
No wrong of men could overcome,
As e'en for them he prays
The Father's pardon might descend.
"They know not what they do."
The heirs of flesh cannot, with sight
Discern the good and true.
His blood they seek, on them the curse
Invoke with maddened hate,
Nor aught restrain that malice taught
Of cruel wrong. Their fate
Was self-imposed—a type of sin
That earns its doom. The cross
Received th' expiring groan; to us,
A gain; to them, a loss.
On him the grasp of Death no hold
Retained—its bonds were burst.
Of those who die in him, the pledge
Of life—of fruits the first.
Then quickly turn, ye slaves of sin,
And heed the Master's call,
But 'scape the curse of sin, for Death
Did come with Adam's fall.
The storms of wrath on earth impend,
And anger fierce, delays
'Till he will come, whose right it is
To scourge who him betrays
Of sons of men. With trumpet sound
And loud acclaim of song,
Will angel host, upborne on air,
The joyful notes prolong,
When comes the Prince of might and life,
In love to seek his own,
For seed which springs to life on earth
Is seed which he has sown.
Then Jesus greets the meek and just
With joy and token sure,
For life in him was promised them
That to the end endure.
Empowered and crowned, then sits a King,
And rules with iron sway
Unfaithful men that use despite,
Or scorn th' appointed way.
Now draweth nigh the glorious age
For Christ the King to reign,
'Till time's appointed end shall come,
And tyrant Death is slain.

L. T.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

Children's Department.

LETTERS TO CHILDREN.—No. 3.

Dear Children:—I presume you all know what intemperance means; but perhaps you have not thought what an awful crime it is, nor what a fearful amount of misery it causes in the world. Intemperance means excess in eating and drinking, and many other things. Thus: tobacco chewing might be called intemperance. You know the Bible tells us to be temperate in all things. You should ask your parents and teachers what this means; for children should learn to be temperate while young. What we most commonly mean by intemperance is, to drink intoxicating liquors as a beverage. That is, those liquors that make people drunk and act foolish. Yes, and many persons when drunk will fight and murder, and do many other wicked things. My father had a neighbor, when I was a little boy, who would often get drunk; and then he was very ugly. Once he tried to shoot one of my brothers, but fortunately the gun would not go off. At another time he tried to stab one of my brothers, but was foiled in his attempt; and all just because he was drunk. He used to cruelly whip his own children when drunk, and they had to run to their neighbors and hide to save their lives. All drunkards are not so ugly as this man was; but they will spend their money for strong drink and let their wives and children suffer for want of food and clothing. And even those who do not get drunk, but like to have their dram, will hang around grog shops, curse and swear, play cards, gamble, or spend their time in foolish things, which God hates, and which the Bible bids us not to do. I think I hear all my little readers say, O I'll never be a drunkard! I hope you never will. But still I desire to put you on your guard. Strange as it may appear to you, people that keep tasting and drinking strong drink get to liking it after a while, and then it is hard for them to let it alone. I once knew a man who died of "delirium tremens," that said while on his death bed he knew strong drink was the cause of his death; but his love for it was so great that he presumed if he got well he would go to drinking again. People generally acquire a love for strong drink by commencing to drink beer, or some other drink not so strong as whiskey. Then they are led on step by step by other dram drinkers, until they get to liking the strongest kind of drinks. Now, if some friend of yours should ask you to drink a little beer, would you have the courage to say, No? If you should find it hard to refuse to drink the first time, and conclude to drink just this once to please your friend, you would find it harder to refuse the second time, and still harder yet the third time. Now suppose, after you had drunken with your friend a number of times at his house, or in private, he should ask you to go into some saloon and take a drink of beer. Could you refuse? You would possibly reason in your own mind thus: What more harm to drink beer in a saloon than at home? and of course you go, but resolve to drink but a little. Your friend treats all round, and then all lounge round and laugh and talk nonsense, if nothing worse, until another dram drinker comes in and treats; your friend drinks, and a glass is set for you, and you are asked to "Come and take a drink." Then if you should beg off a little, you would be assailed by all in something like this way: "Come and take a drink, it don't cost you anything;" another says, "Come, John, come along and take a drink, it won't hurt you." You of course will have to own that it will not, for you have drunk but a little while before; and so to stop their entreaty you drink again and again. You are now fairly initiated. And you will find it hard to break off now, for all your cronies are expecting you will drink with them; and you will fear to displease them lest they might laugh at you, and call you a reformed drunkard, or big booby.

Now, dear children, I presume you will perceive what I have learned by close observation for many years, that it is the easiest to refuse the first time. And by continuing to refuse, it ceases to be any trouble to refuse, and your friends cease to ask you to drink. And the consequence is, you save pocket money, and many hours to read good books, and store up useful knowledge, which would otherwise have been spent in grog shops with bad company, where you would be learning to gamble and swear and many other bad habits, and possibly learning to be a drunkard. O how many young readers of the HERALD, yes, and older ones too, are resolved to be teetotalers? I know that those who thus resolve will never regret it. When I was about seven years old, my brothers and sister living at home, thought it would be fine fun to get me drunk. By coaxing, hiring, and sweetening the whiskey, they accomplished their purpose. Soon after this our family physician came round getting people to sign the temperance pledge. This was the first time I had learned to know what temperance meant. I signed the pledge, although my brothers tried to laugh me out of it by calling me "little reformed drunkard;" but I had mother on my side, and therefore cared but little for their talk. I have no doubt that one act has saved me a deal of trouble, and kept me out of a great deal of bad company; yes, and saved me many dimes too. Somehow, when I grew up to be a man, young men that drank did not like my company because I would not treat and drink with them. But still I was never troubled with their importunities much; for if some stranger asked me to drink, there were generally plenty by to say: "O don't ask him, he never drinks." Such language never made me feel ashamed: I rather felt proud to think I was so well known. I have endeavored to be a living witness for the cause of temperance, and consider it a part of my religion. O who would not be a temperance man?

UNCLE LAFE.

Iowa.

DEMONOLOGY, OR DEVILISM.

EXPLANATION TO POLLY G. PITTS, BY SAMUEL MASON.

Dear Sister:—As the scriptures, in speaking of evil men and their actions, use the terms serpent, devil, and satan, and of frequent occurrence, it is important that we understand these terms, and the true doctrines of the devil. In the Hebrew, Greek, and Latin languages, these words properly signify calumniator, detractor, false-accuser. Demons, from daimones, or daimonion, has the same meaning, and is so translated in 1 Tim. iii. 11. "Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers." i.e., not demons, or devils. Also 2 Tim. iii. 3, "Without natural affection, truce-breakers, false-accusers, makebates, slanderers," or devils. Titus ii. 3, &c. Let the definition of those words be kept in mind, as they are essential to our understanding the subject.

It is in accordance with orthodoxy to give personality to these terms: and hence to maintain the doctrine of a separate, created, personal being, called the devil. It is asserted, also, that this devil was once a high seraph in heaven; that he rebelled against the government of God and was cast down to hell; a place somewhere prepared to confine and torment him, with others that had united with him in the same conspiracy. Whatever particular aggravations his crime might have been, it is certain it amounted to high treason against his Lord and Governor, who was also his Maker! But when this rebellion took place, and how far distant his place of confinement is from this world, and how at the same time he has the liberty to walk up and down this earth, when thus confined, and how can he be seemingly everywhere present at the same time, are questions upon which this theory can afford us no light.

Heaven is represented in the scriptures as the residence and throne of God; and the angels in the highest state of created intelligence, holiness, and happiness, ministering to God, and doing his pleasure, and if we say heaven has been polluted by sin, that these holy beings are capable of rebellion, and have once conspired against God, we ought to have the plainest and the most direct testimony from inspiration to sustain us in such sentiments, or they should be abandoned as the most vile, extravagant, and dishonoring errors that can disgrace the christian faith.

We will examine some of those passages that are supposed to teach the origin of the devil, and his fall from heaven. First: 2 Pet. ii. 4. "For if God spared not the angels that sinned, but cast them down to hell, and delivered them into chains of darkness to be reserved unto the judgment," &c. Jude 6, "And the angels that kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, he hath reserved in everlasting chains, under darkness." Here it is asserted that these angels sinned; that they fell from their first estate; but not an intimation that they were high seraphs around the throne of God in heaven, and that they fell from such a state. We would say that the term angel is frequently applied to men, in the scripture, and is generally translated messenger; as aggelos, aggelo, signifies to tell, to declare a message. The three men that came to Abraham, as mentioned in Gen. xviii. and the two that came to Lot, mentioned in next chap., were angels, or messengers; men sent by God to deliver a particular message. Those were not celestial beings—angels, or messengers from heaven—but were holy men that had come from a distance, and needed to have their feet washed, and to rest, and to eat and drink. No heavenly messenger ever appeared unto man to be administered to after this manner. When the angel of the Lord has been sent to this earth, as in the case of David, Zacharias, Joseph and Mary, and John, he has appeared clothed in such light, power, and divinity, that those holy servants were filled with reverential awe and fear.

Rev. i. 20, the ministers of the seven churches are called angels. Luke vii. 24, "And when the messengers (here translated from the word angelo) of John," &c. Also Luke ix, 52, "And sent messengers, or angels, before his face," &c. The Bible gives no account of any angels that sinned and fell from their first estate, but Adam and Eve; and from their being mentioned in connection with the fall and destruction of the old world, and Sodom and Gomorrah, and, like them, reserved in death or chains of darkness till the judgment day, it is plain that they are meant, and no others. God gave to them an estate—the dominion of the whole earth—every thing was very good and adapted to promote their highest happiness and spiritual enjoyment. They were innocent as the angels in heaven; and as such in harmony and communion with God. But they kept not their first estate. They transgressed, and fell under the sentence and condemnation of death, and are reserved in these chains of darkness. Death and the grave have always been considered as a state of darkness, as in Job x. 21, 22, "Before I go whence I shall not return, even to a land of darkness, and shadow of death; a land of darkness as darkness itself, and the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness." Psa. cxliii. 3. "He has made me to dwell in darkness, as those that have been long dead." The words used by Peter and Jude to signify the state of the fallen angels, is tartarus dark, darkness; and can have no other meaning than death and the grave. Therefore, if they were angels from heaven, they died, and were reserved in this state; consequently, they are not now in a conscious state or doing any evil.

[To be concluded.]

THE SEVEN-FOLD LIGHT OF THE HEALING DAY.

"Moreover, the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun; and the light of the sun shall be seven-fold as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people and healeth the stroke of their wound."—Isaiah xxx. 26.

There are several senses in which this light of the healing day may be viewed. It may be taken both literally and figuratively. Taken in its literal sense, we are here taught that, at the period in the future, to which this text looks forward, there will be a restoration to the material creation of the long-lost brightness and beauty that originally adorned it.

None can doubt but that the paradise in which our first parents were placed was more beautiful than any part of our earth now is. There were balmier airs, and softer skies, and sweeter flowers, and richer fruits than have ever since been found on earth. The roses that bloomed in Eden had no thorns upon them. The fruits that ripened there had no worm at the core. The sun did not smite by day, neither the moon by night. The trail of the serpent had passed over nothing. Everything was perfect there. Sin marred the beauty and dimmed the brightness of that happy state. But Jesus is to bring about "the restitution of all things." This text contemplates the time when this shall be done. Seven is the Scripture number to denote perfection. The seven-fold light of the sun and moon then denotes the perfection of beauty with which they will then shine. There is much of loveliness lingering through creation now, even amidst the ruins of the fall. These are but shadows of what shall be when Jesus makes all things new. Earth will be a restored paradise then, and the perfection of beauty which pardise presented will invest the whole material creation in that day. It is, as it was, gazing on the predicted brightness of that scene that Isaiah bursts forth in rapturous strains, addressing himself to the earthly Jerusalem, which will then be the centre of earth's glory: "Arise, shine, for thy light is come and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee! The sun shall no more be they light by day, neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee; but the Lord shall be thine everlasting light, and thy God thy glory."

Such, we take to be the meaning of this part of prophecy in its literal sense. It predicts the restoration to our world of the long-lost beauty and glory of its original creation.

But there is a figurative as well as a literal sense in which it may be taken. Light denotes purity. Seven-fold light denotes perfect purity. This will be a feature of the world's condition in the millennial state to which this text looks forward. Then "the wickedness of the wicked will be brought to an end." Then "the people will be all righteous." Then "holiness to the Lord will be written upon the bells of the horses," and "in every place incense shall be offered unto the Lord and a pure offering from the rising of the sun even unto the going down of the same." And where purity, like this, everywhere prevails in the earth, the figure will be realized which speaks of the light of the moon being as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun being seven-fold.

But light denotes knowledge as well as purity. And seven-fold light denotes perfect knowledge. This will be another feature of the earth's condition, in the day to which this prediction refers. Then the Lord will destroy the veil of ignorance now spread over all people. Then "the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea." Then it will be no longer necessary for one to say to his neighbor, Know the Lord; for all will know Him from the least unto the greatest. Then we shall know even as we are known. Then the watchmen shall see eye to eye; and all the people shall be taught of the Lord, and great shall be the peace of the people. And when this is realized, it will be true in reference to the perfect knowledge everywhere prevailing, that the light of the moon will be as the light of the sun, and the "light of the sun seven-fold."

But light denotes happiness, this also will be perfect in the earth, in the day when the Lord bindeth up the breach of the people, and healeth their wound. Then violence shall no more be heard in the earth; neither wasting nor destruction within its borders, but joy and gladness shall abound therein, thanksgiving and the voice of melody. Then God will give to the dwellers on the earth "beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness." Then men will rejoice in the Lord, their souls shall be joyful in their God, for He will clothe them with the garments of salvation, and cover them with the robe of righteousness; for as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth, so the Lord will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all nations. And when the earth is seen basking in the beams of this perfect purity, this perfect knowledge, and this perfect happiness, how truly it may be said "the light of the moon is as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun seven-fold."

In conclusion: We see, from this subject, how glorious is the destiny reserved for our earth! God made it to be inhabited He designed it to be, not a vale of tears, a den of lions, a desolate wilderness, a home of sorrow and sadness. He meant it to be the abode of peace, a mount of holiness, the glorious home of a happy and rejoicing people. But it has not been this yet. Has God's purpose then been set aside? By no means. Satan brought sin into the world and interrupted God's purpose. But that interruption will be only temporary. God will not be frustrated in his purpose. His solemn declaration is: "My counsel shall stand." And as we belong to this earth, as it has been our birthplace, our home, our training-school for immortality, it is a matter of great interest to us to know what the destiny of our planet is to be, that its future is, not to be burned up and left a smouldering mass of blackened ruins, but to be purified by fire, and to become the glorious abode of a regenerated and rejoicing race, to be an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations.

This subject further suggests the great interest we should feel in the future advent of our Saviour. All that is bright and blessed in the coming history of our earth is connected with that advent. Satan will roam over the earth till then. The curse will lie heavy upon it till then. Sin and sorrow will darken and deform it till then. The coming in person of the Son of man to our earth is the only thing that will bring these evils to a close. He will come to end the disorder and misery of the world and introduce the glory and blessedness that awaits it. It is this that will make his coming the true Easter, the day of the great rising. Then the dead in Christ will rise and enter on their promised portions.

Then the great day of blessedness, long promised to our earth, will dawn in glory on it. But the brightness of that predicted day will never begin to shine till Jesus comes. Well, then, should we long for his advent! Well may we "hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto us at the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Let us rejoice in the return of every advent season, for, as the years roll on, they hasten on the day when Jesus shall come again, and when he shall come the blessedness of the world will come with him.

"As time departs, salvation comes;
Each moment brings it near;
Then welcome each declining day,
Welcome each closing year.

Not many years their course shall run,
Not many mornings rise,
Ere all its glories stand revealed
To our transported eyes."

Then come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!

How solemn the inquiry which this subject suggests: What is our connection with Christ? His coming draweth nigh! Are we ready for it? Have we given ourselves to him? Are we identified with his cause? If he should come to-night are we prepared to meet him?—Prophetic Times.

THE ISLAND OF CANDIA.

The Island of Crete (Candia,) lies south of the Morea, stretching out into the Ægean Sea, in the direction of Asia Minor, for a distance of nearly one hundred and sixty miles. Its width does not exceed thirty-five miles. It seems as if it might at some time have been connected with the continent, but it has been an island as far back as we have any historic traces of its existence. A rugged mountain range forms the backbone of the island, from which there extend many lateral ridges terminating on the southern coast, in high cliffs and bluffs. On these wild mountains are numberless caves and fastnesses, where a few desperate men might defy an army. Travellers have spoken of the beauty and grandeur of these wilds of Crete, and it is associated in our minds with ancient fable, scripture scenes, and an eventful modern history. This island was the home of the fabled Minotaur, and here was the famous labyrinth in which Minos, the King of Crete, was said to have feasted the monster upon the Athenian youth. The laws of Minos are famous in Greek literature. The chief scriptural interest of the island is derived from the circumstances connected with Paul's voyage to Italy. The vessel in which he sailed was driven round the eastern promontory, to the southward of the island, and took shelter at Fair Havens, near to which was the city of Lasea. In attempting to make the harbor of Phœnice, on the western end of the island, they were met by the storm which drove the vessel out of its course, and finally wrecked it on the island of Malta.

The character of the people as given by the ancients, fully agrees with the quotation by Paul from one of their own poets in his Epistle to Titus. "The Cretans are eternal liars, brutes, slow bellies." They were unfaithful to the last degree, so that Kretq was one of the three K's in the Greek proverb which was used as a caution against deceivers, Kappadokia, Krete, and Kilikia. After the reign of Minos there was a line of chiefs, succeeded by a rude kind of republican government, which continued till the Roman conquest in the year 67, B. C.

In the division of the Roman Empire, the Island of Candia fell to the East, and was held till A. D. 823, when it fell into the hands of the Saracens, who retained its possession until the 10th century, when it fell into the hands of the Genoese. From them, it passed into the hands of the Marquis of Montferrat, who sold it to the Venetians in 1204. The four centuries during which the Venetians retained possession of Candia, were the most prosperous and beneficent in its history. After a war of twenty-four years, including a seige of the capital, that lasted during twenty years, and which was marked with horrible atrocities, the Turks wrested the island from the Venetians, and endeavored to enforce Mohammedanism.

The christians, who belong to the Greek church, have never been content under the Mohammedan rule. Insurrections have been frequent, the greatest of which have occurred in 1821, 1846, 1858, and at the present time. There are in the island eight Greek Bishoprics, that of Gortyna being filled by an Archbishop, and a large proportion of the inhabitants are members of the Greek church. Owing to the neglect and severity of the Turks, the population of the island amounts to little more than 200,000 and commerce is neglected, and the eligible harbors upon the northern coast are filling with sand.

A revolutionary government has again been established in the island, which has issued manifestoes to the christian world, declaring the intention of the people never to give up the contest, till it results in freedom from Mohammedan tyranny. The contest is now raging with a ferocity and determination which makes it evident that this is no petty uprising to be quelled by a display of Turkish power. The Greek population on the continent of Europe are aroused, and the Czar of Russia is not unlikely to throw the weight of his influence into the scale, in favor of the adherents to the national church of Russia, and against the Turk. Such action on the part of Russia may kindle anew the flames of European war.

RITUALISM.

We have no longer any right to speak of our national Protestant church; it is not Protestant; it tolerates barefaced Popery, and swarms with worshippers of the God whom the baker bakes in the oven, and whom they bite with their teeth. Not many streets from the house in which we are assembled, you may have your candles, and your incense, and your copes, and your albs, with all the other pomps and vanities of the detestable idolatry of Rome. That Romanism against which Latimer bore testimony at the stake has been suffered to hold its mummeries, and practice its fantastic tricks, in the name of this nation, until it counts its deluded admirers by tens of thousands. The monster, which stained Smithfield with gore, and made it an ash-heap for the martyrs of God, has come back to you. The old wolf that rent your fathers, and tore their palpitating hearts out of their bosoms, you have suffered to come back into your house, and you are cherishing it, and feeding it with your children's meat. Once again the harlot of Babylon flaunts her finery in our faces almost without rebuke. Do not tell me it is not Popery; it is the self-same Antichrist with which your fathers wrestled—and a man with but half his wits about him may see it to be so; and yet this land bears it, and rejoices in it, and crouches at the foot of a priest once more. Our great ones, our delicate women, and dainty lords, are once again the willing vassals of priestcraft and superstition; and amid all this, if any one speaks out, he is assailed as uncharitable, and abhorred as a troubler in Israel. Is it for nothing that God has favored this land with the Gospel? Must all the light be turned to darkness? Must all the gains of the valiant men of old be lost by the sloth and cowardice of this thoughtless generation? In days of yore, men like Knox and Welch in Scotland, and Hugh Latimer and John Bradford, fought like lions for the truth; and are we to yield like coward curs? Are the men of oak succeeded by the men of willow? The men who cried, "No Popery here!" now sleep within their sepulchres, and their descendants wear the yoke which their fathers scorned. Shall not God visit us for this? I would that a voice of thunder could arouse this slumbering generation!—Spurgeon.

THE LORD first asked (John xxi. 15–17) what he knew, and that not once, but twice and three times, whether Peter loved him; as often does he receive no other answer from Peter than that he was loved by him, and as often does he give no other charge to Peter than that he should feed his sheep. The threefold confession answered to his threefold denial, that his tongue might not be less in the service of love than of fear; and imminent death seems to have drawn forth more from his voice than present life. Be it the duty of love to feed the Lord's flock, as to deny the Shepherd was the indication of fear. Whoever feeds the sheep of Christ with the desire of making them his own and not Christ's proves himself to be a lover of self and not of Christ; or that he is led by a desire of glory, or authority, or lucre, not by the love of obeying, and doing good, and pleasing God. This word of Christ, so often inculcated, keeps watch against those whom the apostle, with weeping, declared to be seeking their own and not the things that are Jesus Christ's.—St. Augustine.

THE PURSE.—A Methodist laborer of Wesley's time—Captain Webb—when any one informed him of the conversion of a rich man, was in the habit of asking, "Is his purse converted?" Without the conversion of his purse the good Captain would give no credit to the conversion of the man. In this he agreed with Dr. Adam Clarke, who used to say he "did not believe in the religion that cost a man nothing." The religion that costs a man nothing is no religion at all; and the being converted, all but the purse, is no conversion at all.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Chris alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a wo-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy for their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage a his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether n business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
New York."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 176. | NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 12, 1867. | VOL. IV.—NO. 34.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

ORIGIN OF THE TERM DEVIL.

[It will be seen by the first of the following communications that "A. G. M." thinks that Judge HALSTED may be mistaken in the matter. This communication we sent to the Judge that he might respond to it, if he pleased. His response has been received and follows A. G. M.'s criticism. Both will be read with interest, and will throw light on the question.—ED.]

"De evil."

I notice in your issue May 22d., the opinion of Mr. Halsted in regard to the derivation of the term devil. He makes it from "de evil." Until he produces good authority for such derivation I must believe he is in error. Until I saw this statement, I supposed that there was no doubt as to its derivation from the Anglo Saxon deofl. In the cognate Continental languages we find duivel, diavel, diufol, difill, tiufal and teufel. These are the words corresponding to the Latin diabolus, and from them there would seem to be no doubt that the word devil has been derived.

Yet Mr. Halsted, without some authority, could not have made the statement to which I allude unless unpardonably careless or wilfully dishonest. I do not mention this because there is much importance in this case, but as relating to the reliability of Mr. H. as a writer. Those who have made etymology the study of their lives have fallen into errors often, and it would be strange if Mr. H. should be an exception. Yet the very first question which the intelligent reader must ask will be, Is this man competent as a linguist to deal with the subject of which he writes? Truth can afford to be generous; and no error, though it favor our side ever so much, should for one moment be tolerated.

A. G. M.

Judge Halsted's Response.

NEWARK, N. J., June 1, 1867.

MY DEAR FRIEND STORRS:—Your note endorsed on a letter to you from A. G. M. was duly received. I am glad to be informed by you that A. G. M. has as little faith in a personal devil as yourself or myself, and by him, at the close of his letter, that he is on "our side."

I do not imagine that any great claim to proficiency to etymology can be based on giving the words used in the Saxon and "the cognate Continental languages," given in A. G. M.'s letter, and to which he thinks the English word devil corresponds. They are all found, and several others, in our unabridged dictionaries, under the word devil. A. G. M. gives some of those words, and says, "These are the words corresponding to the Latin word diabolus, and from them there would seem to be no doubt that the word devil has been derived."

Now if these words, including our word devil, did correspond to the Latin word diabolus, that would not show that there is any etymology in reference to any of them. They would be simply adoptions of the same word fitted to those different languages. The difference between adoption and etymology is obvious. The word etymology itself is an instance of etymology. It is derived from the two Greek words, etumon (the u is often given y in English) and logos. Etumon is defined, "the true derivation of a word from the original root; the true meaning of a word according to its real origin, nature, and use." The adoption of a word is a different thing. We have adopted many words from other languages; in some cases without any change except in pronunciation; as from the French, for example.

A. G. M. says, the word devil, and the corresponding word in the Saxon, &c., given by him, is derived from the Latin diabolus. Now there is no such Latin word as diabolus; and, accordingly, diabolus is not given in Ainsworth's Lat. and Eng. Dict. Diabolus is the Greek diabolos adopted by the Latin. And this Gr. word, diabolos, is the word uniformly used in the Septuagint, the Greek version of the Old Testament, for the Hebrew word stn, written satan in the Douay and English versions.

The words in the Greek of the old Test. for which the Douay and E. V. have devil are, daimon, and daimonion, of which Greek words the Lat. daemon and daemonium are adoptions; and for these words, the Douay and E. V. have devils; see Deut. xxxii. 17, 5, p. 458 of my book; 2 Chron. xi. 15, and Psa. xcvi., 5, p. 460; Psa. cvi. 37, p. 461; Isa. lxv. 11, p. 462; and see the definitions of these Greek words by Donnegan, at foot of p. 462, and p. 463.

A. G. M. calls for authority for the way in which Mr. H. has proposed to make the English devil. Of that in the sequel. I have just given authority that devil is not "derived from the Latin diabolus," but is given for the Greek daimon, daimonion, adopted by the Latin, by its words daemon, daemonium. And I now give A. G. M. authority for what I have already said, namely that the Greek diabolos, Latin diabolus, is the word used for the Hebrew stn, and not for the word devil. Donnegan defines diabolos, "an accuser, a calumniator, in New Test., Satan." And Schrevelius's Lexicon gives, "Diabolos, calumniator, diabolus, satan." And the Hederici Lex. gives "Diabolos, calumniator; diabolus, satan." Such authority may be considered as at least balancing the authority of A. G. M. in saying, "There would seem to be no doubt that the word devil has been derived from the Latin diabolus."

By authority, "Until he [Mr. H.] produces good authority," &c., I understand A. G. M. to mean, the authority of some man. I do not ask the authority of man on a matter in reference to which I have the authority of the original Hebrew. If A. G. M. will read in "The Theology of the Bible," page 454, and following, he will find that the three Lexicographers I have cited are right in saying, that the Greek diabolos, Latin diabolus is the word used for the Hebrew stn; and the Greek of the Old Test. has daimon or daimonion, for which the Latin uses daemon or daemonium, where the Douay and E. V. have devil.

And in the New Test. there are forty-eight places where the Rheims, and E V., give devil for daimon, Lat. daemon; including daimonized. And the Rev. Macknaught truly says, that the Greek of the Old Testament, the Septuagint, is "the book from which nearly all the quotations are adduced in the New Testament:" which shows, that the Septuagint was used by Christ and the Apostles; and when they use in the New Test. a Greek word used in the Greek of the Old Test., they of course use it in the same sense in which it is there used.

The orthodox Noah Webster, in his unabridged Dict., says, devil is frequently used in the New Test. for the word demon, [i.e., the Latin daemon;] but says, it is erroneously used for demon. His sentence is, "In the New Test. the word [devil] is frequently and erroneously used for demon." His word "frequently" does not inform us how often. It is used for daimon, Lat. daemon, 48 times, including the verb daemonized, Lat. having daemonia. As to his word "erroneously," devil, in the orthodox sense of the word, for the Lat. daemon, Gr. daimon, is certainly erroneous. But, Mr. Webster, why do you think devil for daemon erroneous? Do you rely on your own single authority for it? Why not give some reason why you think so? or why not give us the definitions of daimon, Lat., daemon, given by Greek and Latin Lexicographers, that we may have some liberty of opinion as to whether you are right? Was it because you saw that this would take all the lesser devils out of the New Testament? The definitions of daimon would show, that the devils of the New Test. are diseases; sometimes expressed by kakos paschei, badly suffereth, Mat. xvii. 15, p. 474, of my book; and by badly having.... daimonized, Mark i. 32, p. 476. And I do not hesitate to express an opinion, with the same kind of authority used above by Mr. Webster, that no one but an incorrigible bigot, or a pitiable slave to impressions received in childhood, can read p. 454 to 487, in "The Theology of the Bible," and still insist that the Bible teaches orthodoxy's satan, or orthodoxy's devils. I agree with Mr. Webster that devil, in the orthodox sense of the word, for daimon Lat. daemon, would be erroneous. But in the truth, in the Bible there is no such thing as devil in the orthodox sense. Devil and devils in the 48 places of the New Test. mean diseases; it may be that the word is used for very bad diseases. This is the true sense of the Rheims and E. V. devil and devils in the New Test. The ecclesiastics who gave us those two versions give devil, for the Lat. daemon, Gr. daimon, and in the true sense de evil—devil—of evil, thing of evil, the Rheims and E. V. word devil for daemon is not erroneous.

We thus have the authority of the E. V. and of the Rheims, that devil is the proper word for the Lat. daemon, and the authority of Mr. H. added to that of the Rheims and E. V. Mr. H. thinks overbalances the authority of A. G. M. and Mr. Webster.

We have seen that etymology means derivation from the original root. Will A. G. M. tell us from what original root devil is derived? I presume we are to go to the Hebrew, the original—for the original root. The original root for orthodoxy's satan is stn; defined, adversary, enemy; it is sin, the principle of evil; and is sometimes personified. He must be an extraordinary proficient in etymology who can get devil from stn. Our Dictionary makers go no further back for derivations than to the Greek They seem to have had, as Professor Wilson says of the clergy, an aversion to the study of the Hebrew. (See p. 69 of the book.) And A. G. M. goes no further back, for his derivation of devil, than to the Latin.

Will A. G. M. derive devil from the Latin daemon? We are inquiring how to get devil—the letters d e v i l. The original root, the Hebrew word where the Latin daemon first used is shorim (plural of shor) hairies; Levit. xvii. 7; the Douay there gives, devils; and the E. V. gives, devils: the margin there gives he goats. Will A. G. M. get devil from shor? In Psa. xcvi. 5, the Hebrew is alilim, plural of alil, (things) of nought; and the Douay there has, devils And in Psa. cvi. 37, the Hebrew is shdim, (plural of shd) idols; the Douay, and E. V. there have, devils. Will A. G. M. get devil from either of those words?

Now, devil not being the word for diabolus, as already shown, and not to be got from daemon, nor from any original root, I do not see the force of A. G. M.'s objection to Mr. H.'s calling devil a mongrel word. At the point thus reached, what will A. G. M. make of it but a mongrel word? and, it being a mongrel word, what better will he propose than that which Mr. H. has proposed? The letters are to be got from somewhere. A. G. M. is mistaken in supposing that Mr. H. professes to get devil from any etymology, or derivation; and, of course, in supposing that Mr. H. ought to have produced "good authority for such derivation." Mr. H. calls it a mongrel word. What derivation would A. G. M. expect for a mongrel word? Does he think Mr. H. should not have called it a mongrel word, unless he had found that some Dictionary had so called it, and had proposed to make the word as Mr. H. does? In reference to Bible words, the Bible is Mr. H.'s dictionary. Should he have gone to men's dictionaries for the meaning of the Douay, Rheims, and E. V. words, soul, hell, death, &c? Both Webster's and Worcester's dictionaries, among some correct definitions of those words, give the orthodox notions about them. When some gentleman shall have devoted as much time and labor to the original Scriptures and the different versions of them as Mr. H. has, he will be glad to confer with him as to the meaning of a Bible word; not, however, as authority any better than his own.

But again, as to Mr. H.'s proposed way of getting the letters d e v i l. If we take the second definition of etumon, before given, namely, "the true meaning of a word according to its real origin, nature, and use," Mr. H. is content to submit his etymology of devil against A. G. M.'s derivation of it. If A. G. M. will read p. 454 and following, of the book, he will soon find that the principle of evil—sin—is personified in scripture, and called stn—adversary; and that the Gr. diabolos, Lat. diabolus—is used for the Hebrew stn.

I will now give some suppositions of others. Webster, after giving the words from the Saxon, &c., given by A. G. M., but spelling them differently, gives "diaul, diawl, which Owen supposes to be compounded of di, a negative, and awl, light, [i.e., without light], (prince of darkness, says Webster,) an evil spirit, the chief of the fallen angels." So that Owen supposes, that "without light" is the meaning of Satan, orthodoxy's head Devil. Mr. H. supposes that his way of forming the word devil is as good, at least, as Mr. Owen's way. Would A. G. M. say: "Yet Mr. Owen, without some authority, could not have made the statement, unless unpardonably careless or wilfully dishonest?" And is not such language, in reference to Mr. H.'s supposition, rather "careless" language; especially from one of "our side?"

Again, Webster says, "The Irish is diabhail; which, according to O'Brien is composed of dia, deity, and bhal, air, God of the air." How does A. G. M. like that supposition? Again, as to Mr. H's supposition. In 2 Kings i. 2; viii. 9, p. 459, of Theology of the Bible, near the foot, the Hebrew word is hli, defined, "disease, an evil;" [i.e., (a thing) of evil;] the Douay there gives illness. And in 2 Chron. xxxiv. 24, p. 460, the Hebrew is, I will bring roe, evil, upon the inhabitants, [i.e., not all evil, or every evil, but of evil. And in Psa. xxi, 11, p. 460, the Hebrew is, they have turned roe, evil (i.e., of evil, not all evil) &c., and the Ital. there is del (for deil) male, of the evil, that is of evil; the Ital. article is not to be rendered here, because evil is here used in the abstract—the general sense: so that we here have the Italian de, of, and male—evil; and we have only to put the signification of male into English, and we have, the mongrel word, de evil, d'evil, devil. And in John xviii. 23, the Ital. is, del male, of the evil; here, as in Psa. xxi. 11, do not use our article, and give evil, the English of male, and we have, de evil: strike out one e, as is always done where two *e*s thus come together, and we have devil. Mr. H. thinks this comes pretty near his proposed way of making this mongrel word devil. And Webster next defines devil, "Any wicked person;" [i.e., evil person, person of evil;] and, "in ludicrous language, any great evil:" "in ludicrous language" is due to Noah Webster's orthodoxy; strike them out, and we have, for devil, any great evil, i.e., great thing of evil.

And Webster then gives, for devil, "idol, or false God." Is not such a thing a thing of evil?

In Mat. v. 37, the Gr. is, tou ponerou, of the evil, the Gr. article is not to be rendered here; the Rheims, and E. V. are, of evil Math. vii. 17; Greek, fruits ponerou evil; Rheims, and E. V., evil fruits. Are the fruits evil—wicked; or does it mean fruits of evil, productive of evil?

In Mat. viii. 17, the Gr. is nosos, defined, "a disease; an evil; i.e. a thing of evil. Mat. xiii. 38; Gr. the sons, or, children, tou ponerou, of the evil; i.e., of evil, the Greek article is not to be rendered here, because evil is used in the abstract sense; and the Rheims, and E. V. do not render the Greek article in Mat. v. 37, given before. And in the Italian, and in the French, the article before a noun used in the abstract sense is not to be rendered in English. But in this verse, Mat. xiii. 38, the Rheims, to suit Romanism, renders the Gr. article, and gives, the wicked; and then to make a Romish Devil, adds the word one, making the wicked one; and the E. V. follows the Rheims to make an orthodox Protestant Devil, and gives, the wicked one; whereas the Greek is, simply, sons, or, children, of evil. And in John xvii. 15, page 480, the Gr. is, from tou ponerou, the evil; i.e., of evil, without our article; Rheims, evil, without our article; E. V., the evil; margin, the evil one! I am glad to know that A. G. M. don't agree to make an orthodox devil from this or any other verse in Scripture.

If I had, in "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE," done as the Rheims and E. V. ecclesiastics did, that is, given merely a rendering in English, without giving the Hebrew word of the Old Test. or the Greek word of the New Test., there might have been some fear of carelessness, or perhaps of the two harder words used by A. G. M. I have therefore given the Heb., the Greek, the Lat., and the Ital. words; so that any one who is competent, or may render himself so, may examine for himself, and see whether my renderings are right. But that they who do not feel competent to examine for themselves, may read the book with ease, whenever the original word is introduced (always in our letters) its meaning immediately follows; so that the book may be read as if the original word had not been introduced. The original word for the particular word examined, as soul, &c., becomes at once so familiar, that a frequent repetition of its meaning was not required.

Again, A. G. M. says, "I do not mention this because there is much importance in the case, but as relating to the reliability of Mr. H. as a writer. Those who have made etymology the study of their lives have fallen into errors often, and it would be strange if Mr. H. should be an exception. Yet the very first question which the intelligent reader must ask will be, Is this man competent as a linguist to deal with the subject of which he writes?" Rather cool for one who has gone only to the Latin diabolus to ask (for I presume we must take him as "the intelligent reader") in reference to one who has gone back to the Hebrew. And what etymology have men made the study of their lives, and yet have fallen into error often? Was it etymology back to the Hebrew? Let A. G. M. turn to p. 69, 70, of my book, and read Professor Wilson's remarks. And he says in his Preface to his Hebrew Grammer, "If we pursue etymologies no farther back than to the Greek or Latin, we will soon find that we have not reached the fountain."

A. G. M. has an odd idea of what "a competent linguist" means, in supposing that Mr. H.'s idea how to make the word devil has any thing to do with the idea of his competency as a linguist; just as odd as to think the suppositions of others, before given, have any thing to do with their competency as linguists.

But Aagain, as to Mr. H.'s competency as a linguist, A. G. M. must, in his apparent fight about de evil—devil, have failed to get the idea that the book itself shows, that Mr. H. has gone further back than he, or the ecclesiastics, or the lexicographers, have gone; that is to say, to the fountain, and has given the four languages, the Hebrew, the Greek, the Latin, and the Italian. Will A. G. M.'s apprehension that Mr. H. might not be thought by "the intelligent reader" to be a competent linguist, be further allayed, when Mr. H. informs him, that besides acquiring the Greek, the Latin, and the French, in youth, he acquired the Spanish, and the German, before he undertook the Hebrew. And possibly A. G. M. may have learned, that the more languages one acquires the more easily he acquires another.

I have no knowledge of A. G. M.'s competency as a linguist beyond what his letter shows, yet it is possible he may be in the enjoyment of that, to some, pleasant feeling of self satisfaction, in supposing himself a sufficiently competent linguist to question Mr. H.'s competency as a linguist, notwithstanding the facts above stated.

On the whole, Mr. H. is satisfied, without other authority than his own, that of evil, de evil, d' evil, devil, fits well enough to the second definition of etumon, before given; that is to say, expresses the origin, nature, and use, of the word devil, the principle of evil, perhaps as well as the Saxon diafol; Swed. diefvul; Dan. diaevel, &c., as they are given by Webster. I don't know what de means in those languages; but in the Ital. di, is of; and de, is of; and in the Latin, de, is of; and for aught I know, the Saxon afol, and the Swed. efoul, and the Danish aevel, may mean evil, they sound enough like it; and sound seems to have been A. G. M.'s guide in deriving devil from the Latin diabolus.

Again, the Hebrew for orthodoxy's head-devil, is stn, adversary. We have seen that in the Old Test. the Gr. diabolos, Lat. diabolus, is used for the Heb. stn. We will now show, that these same Gr. and Lat. words are the words used in the New Test. for satan.

In Mat. iv. 11, diabolos, and Lat. diabolus, is used for the Gr., and Lat. satana, in verse 10. In John vi. 70, viii. 44; 1 Tim. iii. 6, 7; 2 Tim. ii. 26, the Gr. word is, diabolos, the Lat., diabolus; and it is plain that in all these verses, satan, adversary, diabolos, accuser, satan, is meant; and that the Rheims, and E. V. word devil is wrongly given in those verses for the Lat. diabolus. The only other place in which, in another search, I have found diabolos, Lat. diabolus, in the New Test., is, Acts x. 38; the Gr. there is, all tous katadunasteuomenous upo tou diabolou, those held in subjection under, or, by the diabolus; the Rheims is, oppressed by the devil; the E. V., oppressed of the devil. A. G. M. may have his choice, whether diabolos in this verse means orthodoxy's satan, head-devil, or means simply, of evil—de evil.

Orthodoxy's satan is called, "prince of darkness." Is darkness literal here, or does it mean, of evil? Satan is also called, "ruler of this world." Does he (to personify sin) rule what is good in it, or only what is evil? a ruler of evil?

After all, I do not see, that A. G. M. had any pressing reason for his attack on Mr. H.'s de evil, d' evil, devil.

THE OLD AND NEW COVENANTS.

BY GEORGE B. DAY.

[Outlines of a sermon preached in the Court House, Paterson, N. J., Jan. 16, 1867. Mr. Day was, a short time since a minister in the Methodist Episcopal Church.]

TEXT.—"Who also hath made us able ministers of the New Testament." 2. Cor. iii. 6.

Paul does not claim to be an executor of the New Will, as was Moses, in part, of the old; but a minister, or one who draws it up under the instruction of the testator. The first natural inquiry is,

HOW A NEW WILL CAME TO BE MADE?

The old was conditional with respect to the heirs. The Jews could inherit only by receiving and believing in Jesus as the rightful heir of the land and executor of the provisions of the Old Testament. "He came unto his own, but his own received him not." He established his claim to the Messiahship by complying with every detail which the old will prescribed for him. He was born in Bethlehem, called out of Egypt, denominated a Nazarene, did not lift up his voice in the streets, made himself meek and lowly, healed the sick, raised the dead, went not in the way of the Gentiles, came to Jerusalem to the Temple, offered himself as the expected King, and pledged the nation of Abraham that he would baptize them with fire, give them eternal life and make them fellow princes with himself. But notwithstanding their piety, obedience to the law, and familiarity with the prophets, they failed to detect in Jesus the man "of whom Moses and the prophets did write."

The fate of the Jews was sealed on the day when Jesus wept over Jerusalem, and made his entry in that city as its king, surrounded with a few disciples, who spread their garments and palm branches in his way, crying, "Zion, behold thy King cometh."

Had the princes and rulers met him with submission, and welcomed him to his throne, he would have raised the believing dead and performed all things promised in the new covenant of the prophets.

They smiled with disdain upon the pitiful procession, and plotted only how they might most easily rid the land of such a foolish pretender. Their rejection of the King made the provisions of the Old Testament abortive. Jesus could not execute, because they would not qualify. The kingdom of heaven, which was then at hand, could not be set up, because they to whom it was promised were not worthy. The advent of Emanuel, to redeem the world was made a seeming failure, not for want of power or willingness on the part of the Redeemer, but because they who were to share in the glory and the work refused all participation in it.

Mark well, brethren, this singular and momentous crisis in God's plans. It does seem as though God was thwarted—as if divine wisdom was not adequate to the divine undertaking. Jesus was a Jewish Messiah. By the terms of the written will, he could only redeem the world through the Abrahamic people. He had no commission to give immortality and divine righteousness to any other than his own nation. In setting up the prophetic kingdom, the old will not allow him to share his glory with the uncircumcised. What shall be done? Was not this awkward contingency foreseen? It was foreseen and the remedy provided. To release himself from the binding obligations of the Old Testament he must DIE. There was no alternative. He was a Jews' Messiah and their Messiah only. The blood of that race filled his veins. His commission allowed him only to do his mighty deeds among the chosen people. The old will could be broken by his death. And by his death it was broken. Rejoice with me that so much of the Old Testament as assured participation in the kingdom of God to the Jew alone, is broken by the death of the executor. Jesus, who foresaw the actual events, came prepared and empowered to break the will by the shedding of his blood. He foresaw also that by his death he would not lose his heirship. He knew that he would rise again, but not a Jewish Messiah—he died a Jew and rose a man. "His kinsmen according to the flesh" were his kinsmen no longer—every drop of their blood fell at the foot of the cross. He can share now his dominion with whom he will. There is a "New Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ." But before we inquire into its provisions another fact demands our thought.

THE CONFIRMATION OF THE COVENANT.

The nation of the Jews rejected the heir and put him to death; thus cutting themselves off as heirs under the will; but a few believed on him, and with them he confirmed the covenant according to the prediction of Daniel. "He gave them power to become" like himself "the sons of God." This power was comprised in the nine gifts of the Holy Spirit as enumerated by St. Paul in the letter to the Corinthians. These were the same powers which Jesus himself received when baptized by the same Spirit in Jordan. They are divine powers—such as all the saints shall have when the kingdom shall be established. They are powers "of the world to come." "The earnest of the inheritance," "the witness of adoption" and were a perfect assurance to those that received them that Jesus was the true Messiah and that they were joint heirs with him of the inheritance. This was, however, only a confirmation, and not a fulfilment of the Old Testament covenant. Jesus did not baptize them with fire, that is, translate them into immortals; nor did he purify them from their carnal natures. He simply gave them for a brief time the office powers of his future kindom, that they might know in part the things God had prepared for them.

The provisions of the New Testament are simple and few. Glance at some of them:

1. The Jews, as soon as the confirmation of the covenant ceased with the elect, were to be cut off from the inheritance. The kingdom must be taken from them and given to another people bringing forth the fruits thereof. But not before the elect, or those who did believe through the word of Jesus and his disciples, should be gathered out.

When the last apostle was dead and the Holy Ghost was withdrawn, this provision went into effect. I doubt much whether since that time there has been a believing Jew on earth. Many perhaps have been converted to the different forms of church faith, but not to the belief that Jesus of Nazareth will set up the prophetic kingdom of God in the land of his fathers, which is the gospel of God.

They fight against the Old and New Testaments who hope to see the Jews converted through the instrumentality of the gentiles. Not till God takes away by miracle power the veil from the eyes of the accursed, will Judah and Israel look with grief on him whom they have pierced. Jesus glorified will stand on Zion in person when the lost tribes shall hail him as deliverer and "Lion of the tribe of Judah."

2. Beside the elect Jews, only believing gentiles shall have a part in the future glory of Jesus Christ. The Jew being disinherited, if saved at all, he can only be saved by becoming a gentile. He must wash away his circumcision by baptism; cut himself off from his nation, and cleanse himself from the great sin of his people, which is the murder of Christ. There is no condition appended to the heirship of the gentile under the new will except that he believe what the Jew would not. There is no law now, and no righteousness, by keeping commandments. Men's sins are not imputed unto them, but unto their natures, and all sinners who hate themselves and mortify the deeds of the flesh, and wait in patient hope, shall be justified and purified and glorified at the next appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. They will then have given unto them the power of the Holy Ghost, and be prepared thereby to rule over the nations of the earth.

Jerusalem and the Holy Land must remain desolate until the last gentile believer is gathered out. The land of promise will remain a desolation until the saints shall take possession of it. Jerusalem will be the home of the infidel until its absent King returns to make it the capital of the world. The New Testament provision for that land extends only so far. As soon as Jesus returns, he will proceed to make valid again the codicils of the old, by making Jerusalem the joy of the whole earth, and establishing his glory on Mount Zion.

Nothing delays the completion of the New Testament but the getting out of a sufficient number of gentile heirs to take the places of the unworthy Jews. We know nothing of prophetic dates, but that time must be near. Though but few in every generation have sought the kingdom of God, there must be even now a number almost equal to the three or four million Jews who refused to have the man Christ Jesus reign over them.

When that number is complete, our possibility of heirship ends. The door will be shut. The new will will be executed to the last provision, and though a brighter day will dawn for the world, if we are not found among the immortal sharers of Jesus' throne, nothing will remain for us but the blackness and darkness and oblivion of the grave.

4. Jesus will return again and establish the long deferred kingdom. He will put his twelve apostles on twelve thrones in the Holy Land; raise the believing dead; endow them with the nine powers or gifts of the Holy Spirit; make Paul the viceroy of the gentiles and take off from all nations the long borne curse. The whole creation groaneth together, being burdened, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body. If you would know more, go back to the prophets of the Old Testament, and whatever they say shall be done, that will Jesus and his saints do according as it is literally written.

Zwingli and Luther.

The biographer of Zwingli thus sums up the chief parallel events of their lives in order to show more distinctly how they approached toward and diverged from each other.

"Zwingli and Luther were born within a few weeks of each other—Luther on Martinmas, 1483, Zwingli on the first of January, 1484. Their parents were pious, upright peasants—Zwingli's affluent and indulgent to their children, Luther's poor and austere. Whilst Zwingli's teacher was distinguished for learning and gentleness of disposition, we only know Luther's master at Mansfield as a savage school tyrant, who flogged his pupil one forenoon fifteen times. Zwingli's parents liberally relieved their son from all the cares of earning his livelihood. Luther had to beg his scanty meal with singing. Both excite admiration by their fine voices. Luther's brings him the means of support from widow Cotta, in Eisenach, while Zwingli's had nearly introduced him to a cloister life. About the year 1502, both became acquainted with the scriptures—Zwingli in Basle, at the foot of Wyttembach; Luther in the library at Erfurt, where he sees a complete Bible for the first time. About the year 1505, Zwingli finds in Leo Jud a friend that remains faithful to him during his whole life, while Luther loses in a terrible manner such an one in his Alexis, which induces him to seek a cloister. From 1506 to 1510, Zwingli, as parson of Glarus, wrestles against the temptations of his life, and combats the corruption of his country, while Luther suffers under inward trials and the malice of the monks. Zwingli by the study of the classics pierces to a deeper acquaintance with the Bible; while Luther, by reading the writings of the Mystics, arrives at the same result. In the year 1510, Luther, in 1513, Zwingli, go to Italy, enthusiastic advocates of the papacy. Both are surprised in the Milanese at finding another ritual for the Mass—the Ambrosian.

"Luther, in his journey, becomes acquainted at Rome with the thorough dissoluteness of the lower classes of the Roman clergy. Zwingli, in his Italian campaigns, has his eyes opened to the total corruption of papal misgovernment. In the year 1517, both found peace of soul through faith in Jesus Christ, and while Zwingli, resolute to proclaim the word of God without respect of human laws and doctrines, attacks the pilgrimages and the adoration of the Virgin, Luther, from the same standing point, attacks the sale of indulgences, and without intending it, shakes the papacy to its foundation."

The two great reformers were more strongly contrasted in death than in life. The fiery Luther died peacefully in his bed at the ripe age of sixty-three; at forty-seven, the gentle Zwingli perished on the battlefield. When the war, which he had tried vainly to prevent, broke out between the Protestant and papal cantons of Switzerland, the pastor accompanied his brethren in the faith, as field preacher, to the conflict. In the midst of the action, while bending down to comfort with the words of life a fallen countryman, a stone struck his helmet with such force that he fell to the ground. On his attempting to rise, a hostile spear gave him a fatal stab. He had fallen near a tree. He was leaning on it; his hands were clasped, his lips moved in prayer, while his eyes were directed heavenward. In this state a party of marauding soldiers found him. "Will you confess? Shall we fetch a priest!" they cry to him. The tongue which had so eloquently combated error was now dumb, but a motion of the head signifies a negative. "Then call upon the mother of God and the blessed saints in your heart," they shout to him. Again he refuses. "Die, then obstinate heretic," said an officer from Unterwalden, and gave him a deadly blow. Nor did the contrast end here. The remains of Luther were borne to the tomb by a funeral procession of extraordinary pomp; the body of Zwingli was quartered by the common hangman, and the ashes mixed with the ashes of a swine, that it might be impossible for his friends and admirers to identify his remains.—Home Journal.

In the intercourse of social life it is by little acts of watchful kindness recurring daily and hourly (and opportunities of doing kindnesses, if sought for, are forever starting up)—it is by words, by tone, by gestures, by looks, that affection is won and preserved. He who neglects these "trifles," (?) yet boasts that whenever a great sacrifice is called for he will be ready to make it, will rarely be loved. The likelihood is he will not make it; and if he does, it will be rather for his own sake than his neighbors.—Anonymous.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, JUNE 12, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"THE ORIGIN OF THE TERM DEVIL."—Our readers cannot fail to be deeply interested by the investigation of this subject on the first page of the HERALD, this week. The Response of Judge HALSTED to our friend, "A. G. M.," is an invaluable communication, and gives us more light on the subject than anything we have ever seen. To shorten the Response as much as possible Judge HALSTED has referred to the pages in his book, "THE THEOLOGY OF THE BIBLE." This is a disadvantage to those who have not that work; and we regret the necessity of leaving out the matter referred to. Those who have the book will readily see the value of the references. We note, also, that "E. V.," used in the Response, stand for "English version."

Prof. C. F. Hudson.

This Brother fell asleep in Jesus, Saturday, May 26, at the house of Dr. R. Willard, Haddonfield, N. J., aged forty-six years. He had been laboring under pulmonary difficulties for a long time; but had managed to keep up till a few months before his death. He was a Presbyterian Minister in the early part of his Theological life; laboring in Illinois, chiefly, we believe. His mind was arrested, through the instrumentality of his father, if we remember right, by the idea that man is not inherently immortal. After a thorough investigation of the subject he became fully satisfied that immortality is a gift, bestowed only on the righteous; and that the wicked will be made to cease forever from a living existence. For several years he spent most of his time in gathering material to establish these facts, and ultimately brought out his work "DEBT AND GRACE;" a work of immense labor and research. He travelled somewhat extensively, conversing mainly with Ministers, and furnishing them with his work. What influence it had on them can only be known by Him who knoweth all hearts. It cannot be doubted, however, that many have been arrested by it so far as to modify their theological views on the question of a future life. He was engaged in getting through the press "The Critical Greek and English Concordance," in Boston, Mass., and had nearly completed it, when his health gave way and he was obliged to seek health by cessation from all labor and change of air. His last resting place was at Dr. Willard's, as above stated, where he received every attention that kind hands and christian hearts could bestow. He rests from his labors and his works do follow him. He sleeps till the voice of Christ shall call him to his final reward.

The Fact of Christ's Second Advent.

That our Lord Jesus Christ will appear again in this world is evident, first, from the fact that He has taught us himself to expect it. See Mark xiii. 26, 27. "And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in the clouds with great power and glory. And then shall he send his angels, and gather together his elect from the four winds, from the uttermost part of the earth to the uttermost part of heaven." Also Luke xxi. 25–27. "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken. And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory."

That these texts do not relate to any appearance of Christ at the destruction of Jerusalem, see 2 Thess. ii. 1. "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him." Evidently the same coming and gathering spoken of by our Lord: but let us proceed. "That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit nor by word nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand." Now, if the apostle referred to the destruction of Jerusalem, "that day" was "at hand" when he wrote this Epistle; but he goes on to say, "Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped: so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God showing himself that he is God." Here the apostle teaches that it was a deception to suppose the day of Christ's coming was at hand [or upon them, as it might be rendered] at that time: and assures them that other great prophetic events must first come to pass before that day; which events did not take place before the destruction of Jerusalem, nor till several hundred years after.

That our Lord Jesus Christ will again appear in our world, and that that appearing is future will be seen by the united testimony of the apostles.

See 1 Cor. i. 7, 8. "So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall also confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." What had the Corinthians to do with our Lord's coming to destroy Jerusalem? If Paul referred to that, we may read the verses as follows: "So that ye come behind in no gift, waiting for the destruction of Jerusalem! that ye may be blameless in the day that Jerusalem shall be destroyed!"

See xi. 26. "For as often as ye eat this bread and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come." Now all christians that celebrate the Lord's Supper, either practice self-deception, or they believe in the coming of Christ as still future. They cannot believe that the coming of Christ here spoken of, was at Jerusalem's destruction, nor at their conversion, or sanctification.

Again, see chap. xv. 23. The apostle, speaking of the resurrection, says: "But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming." Again Phil. iii. 20, 21. "For our conversation is in heaven, from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ." Here the apostle states from whence we look for the Lord Jesus, and what he will do when he appears, viz., "change our vile body." That is not done at death, but at the resurrection; therefore Paul was not preaching Christ's coming at death, as some say. See also Col iii. 4. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." And 1 Thess. iii. 13. "To the end he may establish your hearts unblamable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints." Did Christ ever yet appear with all his saints? If not, then his coming is still future. See 2 Tim. iv. 1. "I charge thee, therefore, before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." Here the apostle distinctly marks the period of Christ's second advent; it is to be at the judgment, and the setting up of his kingdom. Compare this with Rev. xi. 15–18. "And the seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever. And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldst destroy them which destroy the earth." Thus the periods are seen to be the same.

"See 1 Peter i. 4, 5, 7, 13. "To an inheritance incorruptible, and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for you, who are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation, ready to be revealed in the last time.... That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory, at the appearing of Jesus Christ.... Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." See also v. 4 "And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." Now look at Heb. ix. 28. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many, and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation:" or, as the Syriac reads—"for the life of them who expect him."

The second appearing of Christ will be a personal, or real appearing, not spiritual, as some have imagined.

See Acts i. 9–11. "And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." "This same Jesus, shall so come, in like manner," etc. So certain, then, as he really ascended will he really personally come again. Compare this with 1 Thess. iv. 16. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." "The Lord himself," not by his Spirit as some think, but himself, really, personally. See also 2 Thess. i. 7, 8. "And to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." See Titus ii. 13. "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Saviour Jesus Christ." A personal appearing, surely. Again, see 1 John iii. 2. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is."

Surely, no words could more clearly express a real appearing of Christ, and that it is yet future, and if this be not so we may despair of proving any proposition from the Bible.

Inherent Immortality.

This week we renew our talk with the notable "D. D." He quotes the words "to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," and says:

"We shall prove from the word of God that immediately at death the soul of the righteous goes to glory. Nature throughout recognizes the distinction between mind and matter. Death is the separation of the two."

If "nature recognizes the distinction between mind and matter," will this D. D. be kind enough to show us where in nature a created mind is recognized as existing, or making any manifestations separate from matter? If death is the separation of mind and matter, will he show us where in nature there is evidence of the existence and activity of that mind when thus separated? Can he do it without going to the "Spirit Rappers?" But he is strong against them; yet they manifestly are too strong for him: for he gives them their premises: i. e., he admits that mind lives and acts when the man is dead! But as he does not claim this spirit rapping development in his facts in "nature," we are curious to know if he has any others. Let him prove, if he can, that a created mind can live and act separate from all material organization, or separate from matter. But he saith:

"If this [text] was the only declaration in the Bible on this point, it ought forever to set the question at rest. Those who teach the death of the spirit with the body, when they come to this text are, like Samson, shorn of their strength. They know not at what point to raise a fog to obscure its meaning. The Saviour told the thief, in substance, this day thy soul shall be with my soul in paradise, that is, in heaven."

Here is a little "fog," but we think we can see through it. In the first place, it is obvious the D. D. makes "mind—soul—and spirit" synonymous terms; hence, the spirit and soul are the mind, and the mind is the spirit or soul. The spirit, soul, and mind, are only so many different words for thought. Then if the Saviour's promise to the thief was, "in substance, this day thy soul shall be in heaven," it stands thus: "This day thy thought shall be with my thought in heaven:" or "Thy mind shall be with my mind in heaven." But waiving this: by what authority does he give us the "substance" of the Saviour's words? The words themselves are, "This day shalt thou—the person addressed—"be with me,"—the person who speaks—"in paradise." Three days after, and subsequent to his resurrection, Jesus said to Mary, John xx. 17, "Touch me not; for I am not yet ascended to my Father." Hence three days are passed and Jesus had not been to heaven "yet;" therefore the inference from the Saviour's words cannot be true, and that part of his "fog" is dissipated. Jesus' own testimony that he had not "yet ascended" to heaven, cannot be set aside to accommodate our opponent; and any attempt to set it aside—as some do—by saying, "He had not ascended in his body, but his soul had been there," is null and void, from the fact that Jesus declares that he, personally, had "not yet ascended,"—I—the personality—the Jesus who spoke to the thief and said, "with me." The personality is the same in each case—the one before and the other after his resurrection.

There is no difficulty in the text under consideration only what arises from neither of the other evangelists having said anything of the penitence of one of the thieves, and two of them having expressly said that the thieves—plural—reviled Christ upon the cross. Supposing the account of Luke to be a genuine account of the penitence of one malefactor, it is only necessary to understand the thief's prayer to remove all the "fog." What did the thief pray for? "Lord remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Archbishop Whately says, "Into is a mis-translation; it should be in thy kingdom. The meaning is—at thy second coming in triumphant glory. Thus we read in Heb. ix. 28, 'Christ was once offered, &c.... and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time...... unto salvation.'"—Scrip. Rev. on a Future State, p. 324.

Thus, then, the thief prayed that when Jesus—who was now being "offered" on the cross—should come in his glory to take his kingdom, that he would remember him. The answer is plain—"This day"—of which the thief had spoken, viz., when Christ should come in his kingdom, at his return "from heaven" in his glory "thou"—not thy soul merely—but "thou shalt be with me in paradise." Here all is plain and easy to be understood, and the "fog" is all on our opponent's side; for if he insists on the literal day in which the words were spoken he has not only the insurmountable testimony of Christ to overcome, that he had not yet ascended to heaven three days after, but he has also to prove that the thief died that day at all. He was not dead when "the even" of that day came; for it was after that, his legs were broken to hasten his death; and hence unless his soul left his body before he was dead, it did not arrive at paradise till the day after the promise; and if it arrived there then, the promise was unfulfilled in two particulars: 1st. It was not the "to-day" of our D. D.; and 2d, Jesus was not there for more than forty days afterwards. Let the impartial now judge on which side the fog is. It is all light on our side, in our judgment. Whether our D. D. is in the fog, he perhaps can judge better than we. Wishing him a happy deliverance from all fog, we pass this part of the subject.

An Appeal.

TO THE BRETHREN OF NEW YORK AND VICINITY:—Dear Brethren:—Are we doing as much as we ought for the spread of the great and sanctifying truth of Life only in Christ? While considerable effort has been put forth, from time to time, in this city, it is a fact that very little has been done for the surrounding country. The river counties on both sides of the Hudson, from this city to Albany, have received but little if any seed. The soil is good, but it needs a little cultivation. Our preachers generally pass rapidly over many villages and districts, leaving them without the word of life. Brethren advertise to preach in Boston on such a day; then in New York; from thence to Albany, etc. We do not blame those brethren. They send their appointments to those places because there are persons there who are interested in the spread of the truth, and will secure a hall, give notice, etc. But there are hundreds and thousands of places where there is no one to do this work. What is to be done in order to reach those places, sow the seed, and establish a permanent interest? This is the question we propose for the consideration of our brethren. We hope it will be agitated, and some plan adopted that will result in the spread of the truth. If one or two servants of Christ, whose hearts are in the work, could be loaded with tracts and sent to canvass those river counties, visiting from house to house, talking with the people, distributing reading matter, also preaching at schoolhouses or other places, as the Lord might open the way, a rich harvest might be obtained. Some have not the qualification, the time, or disposition to engage in this work. Those who have are destitute of means or faith. What we want is a united, protracted effort; a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together. Might not a tent be procured?

W. H. HANFORD.

New York, June 3, 1867.

Why stand I waiting
  Between hope and fear?
The Lord of the household
  Will shortly appear.

Lord of the harvest,
  Laborers are few:
The grain is all ripened;
  O, what shall I do?

Bound up with the cares
  Of this bitter life,
Encumbered with baggage,
  How enter the strife?

A battle, a crown
  For soldiers to win,
Must strip for the conflict
  And work with a vim.

In zeal, gracious God,
  I'd not forget prayer.
Give me truth and thy love,
  A necklace to wear.

W. H. H.

The Western Cry.

MILTON, Ill., Fulton Co., June 5, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—The people out here are getting tired of being harangued with the old dogma of the immortal soul, never-dying soul, deathless spirit, spirit land, beyond the bounds of time and space, the death that never dies, &c., and now it only remains for us to have good efficient labor here to establish the truth and silence all gainsaying. But that's what's the matter. I seem destined to fight the battles of the Lord alone, single handed. Br. Campbell is wanted out here very much; but we give him up. Now who will come and share with me in the burdens and joys attending on the faithful labors of the gospel of Christ? Will Br. Walter come here? We should hail his advent to this place with acclamations of joy; or any other good preaching brother. The field is broad and white unto the harvest. Don't let me plead any longer for help. As we don't expect all to be preachers, we hope others will not forget our wants, and suffer us to travel under embarrassed circumstances. We want books, more than we get, to supply the community: hope, therefore, the dear brethren will not let the burden rest on a few, but let all help a little, and soon the truth will be scattered all about, and much good will result. Please give notice that there will be a grove meeting near Totton Prairie, seven miles from Lewistown Those wishing to come by railroad to Lewistown can inquire for Bren. Elisha Webster and Horace Loveland, four miles southwest of Cuba, and 16 miles from Taunton. Meeting to commence on Saturday the 22d. inst., and hold over the Sabbath, and longer if called for.

J. LEWIS.

In behalf of the brethren, LOVELAND, WEBSTER, and SIGLER.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—There is some hope that Br. W. H. HANFORD, of this city, may go out and help in the West for awhile. We sincerely hope he may do so; but the friends out there must help themselves by helping those who make sacrifices of home, time, and money too, in their service. Br. Hanford has a wife and children dependent on him for sustenance. Let the West show that they want his services by substantial help. They will find him no drone; but a laborer; and, with the help of the Lord, will show himself equal to the task of presenting the life views in any place. Will our friends East help give him an outfit immediately. If he goes, he should do so without delay. Who will help?

Truth Agitated in Fort Plain, N. Y.

BELOVED EDITOR:—It is Monday morning, June 10th, and your roving correspondent writes to you from his paternal home, which at Frey's Bush, N. Y., two miles from the village of Fort Plain, on the road leading to Cherry Valley. My weary brain protests against my taking up the pen, but I must do it forthwith or be deprived of the privilege of reporting progress in this week's paper. The post office is near my father's house, and the mail will close in about two hours. But besides writing you I must also by this mail send a letter to the loved ones at home.

I left Salem last Thursday afternoon, and preached that evening (by previous appointment) in Springfield. The drift of my discourse was to show what a vast amount of testimony orthodox expositors have unconsciously given in their writings to our views of man's immortality and life only in Christ. The subject grew interesting while I endeavored to enlarge upon it, and the congregation seemed much pleased and comforted.

Our brethren in Springfield are building, on Vernon street, a beautiful and commodious chapel, which they expect now shortly to have ready for use. The enterprise was wholly unknown to me until I reached the place. I expect to have an early opportunity to preach two or three Sundays in the new house after its completion; and it is my fervent hope that the doctrine of life only in Christ may, under judicious presentations, win its way to a wider acceptance among the Advent friends in S. than it at present enjoys. Our dear brother, Randolph E. Ladd, not only holds the life view to be one of the most precious disclosures of divine truth, but he is also sincerely desirous that it may spread among the brethren with whom he is associated. But he does not believe that it is best to press the subject in such a way as to make it the occasion of needless alienation and division. If I rightly understand Br. L's views and feelings on this subject, I must believe that the course he is taking will tend ultimately, under the Lord's blessing, to the most beneficent results as respects the dissemination of the life doctrine. It is manifestly better that it should be embraced by a few who will receive it into faithful, loving hearts, than that a larger number should accept it as a mere intellectual conviction. My earnest hope is that the golden mean may be preserved by brethren in Springfield who have the truth on the life question, so that they on the one hand may seek the things that make for peace, while on the other they may maintain an unswerving loyalty to their doctrinal convictions. I will add here that I understand it to be their intention to have a conference in their "Bethel" as soon as it is finished.

I left Springfield at a little past midnight and arrived in Albany early on Friday morning. At 9 o'clock I left Albany for Fort Plain, reaching the latter place at noon. Four hours of the afternoon were spent in an interview with Rev. Dr. Hawley, at his house, for the purpose of obtaining from him the points made by him when he publicly reviewed so much of my May 8th sermon as conflicted with the generally received teachings of orthodoxy. Br. Hawley treated me with affectionate kindness, and evinced a perfect willingness to state his views upon any matter concerning which I cared to make inquiry. On learning from him that his review of myself was confined to the first of these sermons, I decided that all my reply of a personal character should likewise be embraced in one sermon. His two Sabbath sermons on the immortality of the soul were not in reply to me, though of course my sermon was the occasion of their being preached when they were.

Yesterday afternoon I occupied one hour and forty-eight minutes in my review of the positions of Dr. Hawley on 1 Cor. xv; or, more truthfully, the discourse in which I reviewed the Dr. was 108 minutes long, but a long introduction was devoted to matters not directly related to anything the Dr. had said. So far as I know, the opinion is pretty general among my afternoon hearers that Dr. Hawley's remarkable assumptions were thoroughly demolished. But of this the HERALD OF LIFE can judge when it learns what grounds the Dr. assumed and what was said in reply. I judge that he is not likely to honor me with another p rsona review, though I am of course perfectly willing that he shall act his pleasure in that matter. He has already covered himself from head to foot with Universalist implications by the grounds he has assumed, and if he can better the matter by another attempt to overhaul my arguments, I wish him well in the undertaking.

Last evening I spoke for one hour and ten minutes to a large audience on the nature of man. In my discourse I wholly avoided alluding to Dr. Hawley, except that I ventured once to employ his word "pestiferous" in a connection in which I thought it would make a good impression. Two of my brothers and two cousins came from Albany to hear the preaching. I must close at once. Yours in love.

R. W.

The Proposed Visit to Minnesota.

NOTE TO BR. AARON G. HUDSON.

DEAR BROTHER:—I have fully decided to accept your invitation and take a preaching trip to Lake City. But I am undecided as to the time when I had best undertake it, and I want your mind on the subject. My present preference is to let the trip follow immediately after our approaching annual meeting of the Life and Advent Union; but I am not tenacious on the point if there are good reasons with you why I should come sooner. Of course I do not want to be (indeed I must not be) in the West at the time of the Annual Meeting of our Union. That I presume will take place during Wilbraham camp meeting, which is announced to commence August 19th. I publish this note in the paper in order that other friends in the West may know what is in contemplation. Now, Aaron, talk the matter over with the brethren, and then write me at Salem. And may the Lord direct all to his glory.

Affectionately,

RUFUS WENDELL.

Resolution.

A good resolution is the most fortifying armor that a discreet man can wear. This can defend him against all the unwelcome shuffles that the poor rude world puts on him. Without this, like hot iron, he hisses at every drop that finds him. With this, he can be a servant as well as a lord; and have the same inward pleasantness in the quakes and shakes of fortune, that he carries in her softest smiles.

The world has nothing in it worth a man's serious anger.

In high fortunes resolution is necessary to secure us from the thefts and wiles of prosperity, which steal us away, not only from ourselves, but from virtue, and for the most part, like a long peace, softly deliver us into impoverishing war. In the wane of fortune resolution is likewise necessary, to guard us from the discontents that usually assail the poor, dejected man. For all the world will beat the man whom fortune buffets. And unless by this he can turn off the blows, he shall be sure to feel the greatest burden in his own sad mind. A wise man makes a trouble less by fortitude: but a fool makes it heavier by stooping to it. I would fain bring myself to that pass, that I might not make my happiness depend on another's judgment. But as I would never do anything unworthily; so I would never fear the wind of censure, when it is done. He that steers by a regard to other people's opinions, is ever in danger of wreck. Honesty is a warrant of far more safety than fame. I will never be ashamed of that which bears her seal: as knowing it is only pride's being in fashion, that hath put honest humility out of countenance. As for the crackers and squibs of slanderers, they will die of themselves, if I shall not revive them. The best way to have them forgotten by others, is first to forget them myself. This will keep myself in quiet, and by a noble not-caring, turn the arrow to the intender's bosom; who will ever fret most, when he finds his designs most frustrated. Yet in all these, I will something respect custom, because she is magnified in that world wherein I am one. But when she parts from just reason, I shall rather displease her by parting from her, than do wrong for the sake of her company.

ALPHA.

What is God's Nature?

God's name proclaims his nature, "GOD IS LOVE." Then that is his nature; hence he is the centre and source of everything that is good and glorious. That God's nature is love, is seen in the creation of all things; also, in planting the garden of Eden, and there putting man; and making to grow every tree that was pleasant to the sight, and good for food; also the tree of life and the tree of knowledge of good and evil; and rivers to flow through it, to add to the beauty and grandeur of the scenery, already pleasant to the eye.

We see God's nature is love, in making man to have dominion over the works of his hand. Not to toil and labor; but to dress it and to keep it for ever by freely eating of every tree in the garden, the fruit of only one prohibited. How good! The tree of life he had the right to eat of, and live forever in harmony with his Maker. John says, "And we know and believe the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

We see God's nature is love, in prohibiting the eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, under the death penalty. O, was not the nature of God love, in causing man to lose all consciousness in death? and to become "as though he had not been," if dying in sin, and cease to sin and suffer eternally? His loving nature, says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Man earns death by sin; and that is what he will get. "The wages of sin is death," and no one will have cause, in view of his future destiny, to ask of God:

"Father of mercies, why from silent earth
Didst thou awake and curse me into birth?
Tear me from quiet, ravish me from night,
And make a thankless present of thy light?
Push me into being, a reverse of thee,
And animate a clod with misery?"

God's nature is love. The LIFE GIVER proclaimed, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John saw that God's nature was love when he cried, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." We, who had forfeited all right to his nature, and to life; yet we have been "reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved, or live by his life."

We see the nature of God exhibited by the LIFE-GIVER, who said, "I and my Father are one;" and when he gave the promise, "Because I live, ye shall live also." "I am come that they (my sheep) may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly," when "The tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death," etc. In God's "presence there is fulness of joy; and at his right hand there are pleasures forevermore."

Oh, his loving nature we shall see when he shall wake us up in his likeness: just like himself; immortal, incorruptible, that is, to die no more. No wonder David said, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness," to inherit the new earth, when the LIFE-GIVER shall be king, and all the overcomers shall reign in life by Jesus Christ. O, glory be to God in the highest, that the crowning glory of God is, that his nature and name is love. Amen. Let all the people praise him.

Miscellaneous.

A BEAUTIFUL INCIDENT.—A naval officer being at sea in a dreadful storm, his wife was sitting in the cabin near him, and, filled with alarm for the safety of the vessel, was so surprised at his composure and serenity, that she cried out:

"My dear are you not afraid? How is it possible you can be so calm in such a dreadful storm?"

He rose from his chair, dashed it to the deck, drew his sword, and pointing it to the breast of his wife, exclaimed—

"Are you afraid?"

She instantly answered "No."

"Why?" said the officer.

"Because," rejoined the wife, I know this sword is in the hand of my husband, and he loves me too well to hurt me."

"Then said he, "remember I know in whom I believe, and that he who holds the winds in his fist, and the water in the hollow of his hand, is my Father."

SUBMISSION TO THE INEVITABLE.—Dr. Johnson used to say, that a habit of looking on the best side of every event, is better than a thousand pounds a year. Bishop Hall quaintly remarks, "For every bad there might be a worse; and when a man breaks his leg, let him be thankful it was not his neck." When Fenelon's library was once on fire, "God be praised!" he exclaimed, "that it is not the dwelling of same poor man!" It has been beautifully said, that the wild bird, yet untamed, and unaccustomed to confinement, beats itself almost to death against the wires of its cage, while the tame prisoner quietly acquiesces, and relieves its solitude by a song. An apt illustration of the soothing influences of submission.

THE WISEST MEN THE MOST FORBEARING.—In order to love mankind, expect but little from them: in order to view their faults without bitterness, we must accustom ourselves to pardon them, and to perceive that indulgence is a justice which frail humanity has a right to demand from wisdom. Now, nothing tends more to dispose us to indulgence, to close our hearts against hatred, to open them to the principles of a humane and soft mortality, than a profound knowledge of the human heart. Accordingly, the wisest men have always been the most indulgent.

HAVE SOMETHING TO DO AND DO IT.—The secret of all success in life, of all greatness, nay, of all happiness, is to live for a purpose. There are many persons always busy, who yet have no great purpose in view. They fritter away their energies on a hundred things never accomplishing any thing, because not giving their undivided attention to any one thing. They are like butterflies, that flit from spot to spot, never gaining wealth; while the ant, who strictly keeps to a certain circuit around her hole, gradually lays up stores for winter comfort.

SAVE! SAVE! SAVE!—What is there a man cannot save and improve? By curbing appetite and restraining passion, by observing prudence and maintaining regularity, he may save his health, as constant fountains of energy and happiness, to sustain and cherish him under every labor and every hardship. He may save a fortune by industry and denying himself needless indulgence, and he may find a pure enjoyment in devoting it to noble uses. One of the hours each day wasted on trifles or indulgence, saved or daily devoted to improvement, is enough to make an ignorant man wise in ten years—to provide the luxury of intelligence to a mind torpid from lack of thought—to brighten up and strengthen faculties perishing with rust—to make life a fruitful field, and death a harvest of glorious deeds.

When men grow virtuous in their old age they are merely making a sacrifice to God of the devil's leavings.—Dean Swift.

Who is wise? He that is teachable. Who is mighty? He that conquers himself. Who is rich? He that is contented. Who is honored? He that honoreth others.

Letters and Extracts.

From W. R. Warner.

BOSTON, MASS., June 1, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I wish to get a copy of a work noticed in your last paper, "Frobisher's work on the cultivation of the voice and action." What is the price? how can I get it? Your paper comes regularly, and we prize it, and feel glad to see it advancing in interest, battling for the truth. I am glad of the recent stand its principal writers have taken against a "Mortal Resurrection." How any one who knows or reads the Bible can believe in a mortal resurrection I cannot conceive. A correct view of the resurrection seems to be at the foundation of all truth in regard to a future state. Why should the wicked be raised? They are condemned already, and shall UTTERLY PERISH in their own corruption.

It is not convenient or desirable to differ in opinion from those we love; but I have never been able to find the evidence in the Bible that the righteous remain unconscious for ages upon ages in the grave. I have been referred to the "WATCH TOWER," which I did read carefully and prayerfully, years ago, but failed to find the evidence that satisfies my mind on the subject; probably all the passages there that speak of the unconscious dead refer to the wicked dead. They are, without doubt, silent forever. Though I was taught to believe differently, which troubled me very much, I prayed God would show me the truth, and commenced reading his word. I had not read three chapters when the whole destiny of the wicked was shown me in two words, Math. iii. 12: "He will BURN UP the chaff." This was a punishment that I never thought of; though I had read it many times before. The Bible is filled with the same doctrine. Psalm lxxiii. 19, "How are they brought into desolation as in a moment; they are utterly consumed with terrors." Psalm cxlvi. 4. "In that very day his thoughts perish."

The day they perish is the very day of their death. That day is the end of this world with them. Matt. xiii. 40, 43, "Then (at that time), shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Luke xx. 27. "Now that the dead are raised." It is clear to me that those righteous spoken of here were alive when this was spoken. Why should not all the righteous who have since lived enjoy the society of those who were then alive? We read after the resurrection of Christ "many bodies of the saints which slept arose." Luke xxvii. 52. "He is the resurrection and the life." John xvii. 24. Jesus' prayer was that his people might be with him—where I am. Why should they remain in the ground when he himself remained there only three days. Paul wished to be present with the Lord. The wicked are said to be brought into desolation as in a moment! They are utterly consumed with terrors. Psa. lxxiii. 19. As smoke is driven away, so they will be driven away: as wax melteth before the fire so the wicked will perish at the presence of God. Psa. lxviii. 2. What could be stronger proof that they perish at their death? But of the righteous, Jesus has promised to raise up those that believe on him at the last day, John iv. 40. What is the last day, but the last day of life, when time ceases? No part of eternity can be called the last day. "If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." John vi. 51. Now, if the christian remains in the state of death for ages, he does not live forever. Is it not plain? "If a man keep my saying he shall never see death." John viii. 51. The Jews understood him to say the righteous should never taste of death. How can we believe that the righteous remain in a state of death?

Think of it, my friends; for this is a GLOOMY doctrine, only intended for the wicked; but the gospel brings glad tidings to men. Jesus will deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time subject to bondage. Heb. ii. 15. Note: their bondage ends with life-time. These are only a few of many texts.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—If our brother has not been convinced by reading the "Watch Tower carefully and prayerfully," it would seem to be folly in us to make a further attempt to open his eyes to the fact that "the last day" is not at the time of the christian's "death." Our Lord himself was three days under the dominion of death; but believers are exempt even from that, according to Br. W., for they do not die at all; hence they cannot have any resurrection; for it is the dead that are to be raised; and the apostle tells us when Jesus' "last day" is; not at the death of the believer, but "at the last trump." If that has not yet sounded then the righteous dead are still "asleep," and will sleep till "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God;" then "the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we who are alive and remain". ... "shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" .... "and caught up together with them [the raised dead] to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Compare 1 Corth. xv. with 1 Thess. iv. Morever, "Christ the first fruits [of the resurrection] afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."

As to our view being a "gloomy doctrine," we think it is just the reverse. To sleep soundly and dreamlessly, through twelve hours, when worn down with care and labor, is not a gloomy prospect, but a desirable one; and a thousand years, in God's estimate, or a thousand "ages," are nothing in the great and unending future of the saints. Nothing is lost by them in resting quietly in the grave till all the family of God are fully prepared to enter on their inheritance together; there is no going before nor following after, in this family of God; they are all "caught up together," "at the last trump."

From E. D. Hutchinson.

CORINNA CENTRE, Me., June 3, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Please send me a few more tracts for distribution. We can sometimes do a great deal of good with a little, in the way of enlightening the youth and sinners. The old sects have no ears to hear. But I can say, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

I feel to thank the Lord for the light which I have received from his word. Although I never was a member of any nominal church, yet I feel and realize that I was snatched as a brand from the burning, while rolling sin as a sweet morsel under my tongue, wandering out of the way of understanding, and should have remained in the congregation of the dead, had I gone down there before I saw the light of God's word. But God, in his mercy, was pleased to let the scales drop from my eyes.

When the unconscious state of the dead was presented to my mind, I thought it could not be sustained; but by prayerful study and examination of God's word, I became convinced it was so. Then a question arose in my mind, will they always remain in that state, and there be no hereafter? No; I have read somewhere, said I, of the resurrection of the dead, both of just and unjust; consequently, all will be raised to life. I so understood it for a long time, and thought it was truth. Still it did not look just right; it seemed too much like the torment theory. G. W. Brown preached the first sermon on the non-resurrection of the wicked that I ever heard. Well, I found a great many passages of Scripture to go against that, to my mind. But some two or three months after this, while at work, this scripture came to my mind: "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." I thought a minute, and then said, Suppose that Spirit don't dwell in you, can you be raised up? Here was something I had not thought of before. It is the Spirit or germ of life in Christ that shall bring believers up in the last day. Do the wicked have it? No. All other passages have been cleared up to my mind since that time. And to-day, Brother, I can say with you, and all of like precious faith, I am a believer in "Life only through Christ," and have ben for the last four years. My prayer is, that we may all so live in this world, that, when the LIFE-GIVER comes to raise the dead, we may all be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead; for such are children of God, and will die no more forever.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

MILTON, Fulton Co., Ill., May 29, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I write not because I think my articles are worth a place in the dear HERALD OF LIFE, but because, first, the cause demands it; for we find that our Brethren and Sisters throughout the West and elsewhere want to hear from us, and have no other means but the paper; therefore we report ourself oftener than we otherwise would; and if it does them as much good to hear from the poor old one-armed preacher as it does us to hear from them we are more than paid for our labor; for, truly, it is like water to a thirsty soul when we get hold of the little two winged angel and read the heart cheering epistles from the dear ones that are sighing for home. Just here allow me to say that, if Br. W. S. Campbell knew the deep anxiety the people have out here for him to return, we think he could not rest satisfied until he came; and, we say, the cause demands it. May the Lord direct. In the second place, we write sending three subscribers. Here let me say, once more that we fear many don't make the effort to obtain subscribers that they should. Brethren, wake up. The time is short; what is done must be done quickly. Every thing speaks the coming of the Lord soon. We that are not in the dark can see what is coming; for events cast their shadows before. We are having wars, earthquakes, inundations unprecedented; and now the famine begins to stare us in the face. O let us be ready.

We are having interesting times out here. Last first day, at 11 A. M., we preached on "What is man?" which troubled the waters, not a little, among the immortal soul believers; so much so, that the professors of religion threatened to egg us; but, in nothing terrified, we took for a foundation, in the evening, "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" which undermined the stronghold about the wicked dead ever seeing life, or appearing anywhere. Glory to God, the truth took hold of some minds that will tell in the future. Amen.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The country continues rapidly to settle down to its normal condition under the reconstruction measures of the last Congress. One curious fact is observed in this pacification, and that is the generals and statesmen who periled everything to overthrow their national government, are the warmest advocates of the reconstruction policy, negro suffrage and all while newspaper editors and others who did the "big" talk during the rebellion, are as noisy as ever in urging their nonsense.

The accounts of the crops in every section of the country continue to be of the most flattering kind.

FOREIGN.

No sooner do hopes of peace and tranquillity begin to prevail in Europe, than some untoward event occurs to destroy them. Last week, while Napoleon and the Czar of Russia were riding in a carriage in Paris, a Pole fired two shots at the latter, but without hurting him. The deed was incited by political passion. This is about the fourth attempt on the lives of sovereigns and statesmen during the past year.

Nothing is yet known positively about the fate of Maximilian. The capture of Queretaro is entirely confirmed. The city was betrayed into the hands of Escobedo on the 15th of May, and Maximilian and all his officers, four hundred and fifty in number, were captured. Only one of the most noted among the imperialists was shot—the famous Mendez—who has figured in many of the most desperate acts of horror which have made the Mexican annals famous. A court-martial has been ordered for the trial of Maximilian. The fallen Emperor has issued a farewell address to his "countrymen," in which he sharply charges Napoleon with being the cause of his misfortunes and failure in Mexico, and closes with a few words of solemn warning to all "ambitious and incautious princes."

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND TRACTS can be had at the Editor's residence; of GEO. W. YOUNG, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 37 Park Row, Room 40.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO FORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

Various Sums.

Daniel Parsons sends $5 from Mrs. Gall, to be applied; Alexander Dalzell, $2; Charles H. Reed, John E. Jones, Mrs. Barbary Morse, Mrs. M. C. Harriman, $1 each.

Book and Tract Fund.

Prof. J. F. Huber	$5 00

Freedmen's Mission.

For Helen Robertson.

Prof. Jacob F. Huber, Middletown, Conn	$5 00
J. Hamilton, Fredonia, N. Y	1 00
"Hope," Westville, Conn	1 00

Advertisements.

Meadville Theological School.

THE NEXT TERM begins September 2d, 1867. The Faculty of instruction consists of four resident and four non-resident Professors, and a Tutor. The object is to educate young men for the Christian Ministry. Beneficiary aid is given to indigent students. The tuition, use of library, and text books are free to all. The school was founded by the Unitarian and Christian denominations, but is open to all who believe in the divine origin of Christianity. The library consists of nine thousand five hundred volumes. Application may be made to Rev. A. A. Livermore, President of the Board of Instruction, Meadville, Pa.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE,
LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS,
GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
OFFICE HOURS, From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. NEW YORK

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 CHAMBERS ST., NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(ROOM 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: In which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover, to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are here by revoked.

judge that he is not likely to honor me with another p rson a review, though I am of course perfectly willing that he shall act his pleasure in that matter. He has already covered himself from head to foot with Universalist implications by the grounds he has assumed, and if he can better the matter by another attempt to overhaul my arguments, I wish him well in the undertaking.

Last evening I spoke for one hour and ten minutes to a large audience on the nature of man. In my discourse I wholly avoided alluding to Dr. Hawley, except that I ventured once to employ his word "pestiferous" in a connection in which I thought it would make a good impression. Two of my brothers and two cousins came from Albany to hear the preaching. I must close at once. Yours in love.

R. W.

The Proposed Visit to Minnesota.

NOTE TO BR. AARON G. HUDSON.

DEAR BROTHER:—I have fully decided to accept your invitation and take a preaching trip to Lake City. But I am undecided as to the time when I had best undertake it, and I want your mind on the subject. My present preference is to let the trip follow immediately after our approaching annual meeting of the Life and Advent Union; but I am not tenacious on the point if there are good reasons with you why I should come sooner. Of course I do not want to be (indeed I must not be) in the West at the time of the Annual Meeting of our Union. That I presume will take place during Wilbraham camp meeting, which is announced to commence August 19th. I publish this note in the paper in order that other friends in the West may know what is in contemplation. Now, Aaron, talk the matter over with the brethren, and then write me at Salem. And may the Lord direct all to his glory.

Affectionately,

RUFUS WENDELL.

Resolution.

A good resolution is the most fortifying armor that a discreet man can wear. This can defend him against all the unwelcome shuffles that the poor rude world puts on him. Without this, like hot iron, he hisses at every drop that finds him. With this, he can be a servant as well as a lord; and have the same inward pleasantness in the quakes and shakes of fortune, that he carries in her softest smiles.

The world has nothing in it worth a man's serious anger.

In high fortunes resolution is necessary to secure us from the thefts and wiles of prosperity, which steal us away, not only from ourselves, but from virtue, and for the most part, like a long peace, softly deliver us into impoverishing war. In the wane of fortune resolution is likewise necessary, to guard us from the discontents that usually assail the poor, dejected man. For all the world will beat the man whom fortune buffets. And unless by this he can turn off the blows, he shall be sure to feel the greatest burden in his own sad mind. A wise man makes a trouble less by fortitude: but a fool makes it heavier by stooping to it. I would fain bring myself to that pass, that I might not make my happiness depend on another's judgment. But as I would never do anything unworthily; so I would never fear the wind of censure, when it is done. He that steers by a regard to other people's opinions, is ever in danger of wreck. Honesty is a warrant of far more safety than fame. I will never be ashamed of that which bears her seal: as knowing it is only pride's being in fashion, that hath put honest humility out of countenance. As for the crackers and squibs of slanderers, they will die of themselves, if I shall not revive them. The best way to have them forgotten by others, is first to forget them myself. This will keep myself in quiet, and by a noble not-caring, turn the arrow to the intender's bosom; who will ever fret most, when he finds his designs most frustrated. Yet in all these, I will something respect custom, because she is magnified in that world wherein I am one. But when she parts from just reason, I shall rather displease her by parting from her, than do wrong for the sake of her company.

ALPHA.

What is God's Nature?

God's name proclaims his nature, "GOD IS LOVE." Then that is his nature; hence he is the centre and source of everything that is good and glorious. That God's nature is love, is seen in the creation of all things; also, in planting the garden of Eden, and there putting man; and making to grow every tree that was pleasant to the sight, and good for food; also the tree of life and the tree of knowledge of good and evil; and rivers to flow through it, to add to the beauty and grandeur of the scenery, already pleasant to the eye.

We see God's nature is love, in making man to have dominion over the works of his hand. Not to toil and labor; but to dress it and to keep it for ever by freely eating of every tree in the garden, the fruit of only one prohibited. How good! The tree of life he had the right to eat of, and live forever in harmony with his Maker. John says, "And we know and believe the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him."

We see God's nature is love, in prohibiting the eating of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, under the death penalty. O, was not the nature of God love, in causing man to lose all consciousness in death? and to become "as though he had not been," if dying in sin, and cease to sin and suffer eternally? His loving nature, says, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Man earns death by sin; and that is what he will get. "The wages of sin is death," and no one will have cause, in view of his future destiny, to ask of God:

"Father of mercies, why from silent earth
Didst thou awake and curse me into birth?
Tear me from quiet, ravish me from night,
And make a thankless present of thy light?
Push me into being, a reverse of thee,
And animate a clod with misery?"

God's nature is love. The LIFE GIVER proclaimed, "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John saw that God's nature was love when he cried, "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." We, who had forfeited all right to his nature, and to life; yet we have been "reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved, or live by his life."

We see the nature of God exhibited by the LIFE-GIVER, who said, "I and my Father are one;" and when he gave the promise, "Because I live, ye shall live also." "I am come that they (my sheep) may have life, and that they may have it more abundantly," when "The tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them and be their God: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death," etc. In God's "presence there is fulness of joy; and at his right hand there are pleasures forevermore."

Oh, his loving nature we shall see when he shall wake us up in his likeness: just like himself; immortal, incorruptible, that is, to die no more. No wonder David said, "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness," to inherit the new earth, when the LIFE-GIVER shall be king, and all the overcomers shall reign in life by Jesus Christ. O, glory be to God in the highest, that the crowning glory of God is, that his nature and name is love. Amen. Let all the people praise him.

Miscellaneous.

A BEAUTIFUL INCIDENT.—A naval officer being at sea in a dreadful storm, his wife was sitting in the cabin near him, and, filled with alarm for the safety of the vessel, was so surprised at his composure and serenity, that she cried out:

"My dear are you not afraid? How is it possible you can be so calm in such a dreadful storm?"

He rose from his chair, dashed it to the deck, drew his sword, and pointing it to the breast of his wife, exclaimed—

"Are you afraid?"

She instantly answered "No."

"Why?" said the officer.

"Because," rejoined the wife, I know this sword is in the hand of my husband, and he loves me too well to hurt me."

"Then said he, "remember I know in whom I believe, and that he who holds the winds in his fist, and the water in the hollow of his hand, is my Father."

SUBMISSION TO THE INEVITABLE.—Dr. Johnson used to say, that a habit of looking on the best side of every event, is better than a thousand pounds a year. Bishop Hall quaintly remarks, "For every bad there might be a worse; and when a man breaks his leg, let him be thankful it was not his neck." When Fenelon's library was once on fire, "God be praised!" he exclaimed, "that it is not the dwelling of same poor man!" It has been beautifully said, that the wild bird, yet untamed, and unaccustomed to confinement, beats itself almost to death against the wires of its cage, while the tame prisoner quietly acquiesces, and relieves its solitude by a song. An apt illustration of the soothing influences of submission.

THE WISEST MEN THE MOST FORBEARING.—In order to love mankind, expect but little from them: in order to view their faults without bitterness, we must accustom ourselves to pardon them, and to perceive that indulgence is a justice which frail humanity has a right to demand from wisdom. Now, nothing tends more to dispose us to indulgence, to close our hearts against hatred, to open them to the principles of a humane and soft mortality, than a profound knowledge of the human heart. Accordingly, the wisest men have always been the most indulgent.

HAVE SOMETHING TO DO AND DO IT.—The secret of all success in life, of all greatness, nay, of all happiness, is to live for a purpose. There are many persons always busy, who yet have no great purpose in view. They fritter away their energies on a hundred things never accomplishing any thing, because not giving their undivided attention to any one thing. They are like butterflies, that flit from spot to spot, never gaining wealth; while the ant, who strictly keeps to a certain circuit around her hole, gradually lays up stores for winter comfort.

SAVE! SAVE! SAVE!—What is there a man cannot save and improve? By curbing appetite and restraining passion, by observing prudence and maintaining regularity, he may save his health, as constant fountains of energy and happiness, to sustain and cherish him under every labor and every hardship. He may save a fortune by industry and denying himself needless indulgence, and he may find a pure enjoyment in devoting it to noble uses. One of the hours each day wasted on trifles or indulgence, saved or daily devoted to improvement, is enough to make an ignorant man wise in ten years—to provide the luxury of intelligence to a mind torpid from lack of thought—to brighten up and strengthen faculties perishing with rust—to make life a fruitful field, and death a harvest of glorious deeds.

When men grow virtuous in their old age they are merely making a sacrifice to God of the devil's leavings.—Dean Swift.

Who is wise? He that is teachable. Who is mighty? He that conquers himself. Who is rich? He that is contented. Who is honored? He that honoreth others.

Letters and Extracts.

From W. R. Warner.

BOSTON, MASS., June 1, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I wish to get a copy of a work noticed in your last paper, "Frobisher's work on the cultivation of the voice and action." What is the price? how can I get it? Your paper comes regularly, and we prize it, and feel glad to see it advancing in interest, battling for the truth. I am glad of the recent stand its principal writers have taken against a "Mortal Resurrection." How any one who knows or reads the Bible can believe in a mortal resurrection I cannot conceive. A correct view of the resurrection seems to be at the foundation of all truth in regard to a future state. Why should the wicked be raised? They are condemned already, and shall UTTERLY PERISH in their own corruption.

It is not convenient or desirable to differ in opinion from those we love; but I have never been able to find the evidence in the Bible that the righteous remain unconscious for ages upon ages in the grave. I have been referred to the "WATCH TOWER," which I did read carefully and prayerfully, years ago, but failed to find the evidence that satisfies my mind on the subject; probably all the passages there that speak of the unconscious dead refer to the wicked dead. They are, without doubt, silent forever. Though I was taught to believe differently, which troubled me very much, I prayed God would show me the truth, and commenced reading his word. I had not read three chapters when the whole destiny of the wicked was shown me in two words, Math. iii. 12: "He will BURN UP the chaff." This was a punishment that I never thought of; though I had read it many times before. The Bible is filled with the same doctrine. Psalm lxxiii. 19, "How are they brought into desolation as in a moment; they are utterly consumed with terrors." Psalm cxlvi. 4. "In that very day his thoughts perish."

The day they perish is the very day of their death. That day is the end of this world with them. Matt. xiii. 40, 43, "Then (at that time), shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Luke xx. 27. "Now that the dead are raised." It is clear to me that those righteous spoken of here were alive when this was spoken. Why should not all the righteous who have since lived enjoy the society of those who were then alive? We read after the resurrection of Christ "many bodies of the saints which slept arose." Luke xxvii. 52. "He is the resurrection and the life." John xvii. 24. Jesus' prayer was that his people might be with him—where I am. Why should they remain in the ground when he himself remained there only three days. Paul wished to be present with the Lord. The wicked are said to be brought into desolation as in a moment! They are utterly consumed with terrors. Psa. lxxiii. 19. As smoke is driven away, so they will be driven away: as wax melteth before the fire so the wicked will perish at the presence of God. Psa. lxviii. 2. What could be stronger proof that they perish at their death? But of the righteous, Jesus has promised to raise up those that believe on him at the last day, John iv. 40. What is the last day, but the last day of life, when time ceases? No part of eternity can be called the last day. "If any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." John vi. 51. Now, if the christian remains in the state of death for ages, he does not live forever. Is it not plain? "If a man keep my saying he shall never see death." John viii. 51. The Jews understood him to say the righteous should never taste of death. How can we believe that the righteous remain in a state of death?

Think of it, my friends; for this is a GLOOMY doctrine, only intended for the wicked; but the gospel brings glad tidings to men. Jesus will deliver them who through fear of death were all their life time subject to bondage. Heb. ii. 15. Note: their bondage ends with lifetime. These are only a few of many texts.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—If our brother has not been convinced by reading the "Watch Tower carefully and prayerfully," it would seem to be folly in us to make a further attempt to open his eyes to the fact that "the last day" is not at the time of the christian's "death." Our Lord himself was three days under the dominion of death; but believers are exempt even from that, according to Br. W., for they do not die at all; hence they cannot have any resurrection; for it is the dead that are to be raised; and the apostle tells us when Jesus' "last day" is; not at the death of the believer, but "at the last trump." If that has not yet sounded then the righteous dead are still "asleep," and will sleep till "the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, and with the voice of the archangel and the trump of God;" then "the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we who are alive and remain". . . . "shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye" . . . . "and caught up together with them [the raised dead] to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Compare 1 Corth. xv. with 1 Thess. iv. Morever, "Christ the first fruits [of the resurrection] afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."

As to our view being a "gloomy doctrine," we think it is just the reverse. To sleep soundly and dreamlessly, through twelve hours, when worn down with care and labor, is not a gloomy prospect, but a desirable one; and a thousand years, in God's estimate, or a thousand "ages," are nothing in the great and unending future of the saints. Nothing is lost by them in resting quietly in the grave till all the family of God are fully prepared to enter on their inheritance together: there is no going before nor following after, in this family of God; they are all "caught up together," "at the last trump."

From E. D. Hutchinson.

CORINNA CENTRE, Me., June 3, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Please send me a few more tracts for distribution. We can sometimes do a great deal of good with a little, in the way of enlightening the youth and sinners. The old sects have no ears to hear. But I can say, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

I feel to thank the Lord for the light which I have received from his word. Although I never was a member of any nominal church, yet I feel and realize that I was snatched as a brand from the burning, while rolling sin as a sweet morsel under my tongue, wandering out of the way of understanding, and should have remained in the congregation of the dead, had I gone down there before I saw the light of God's word. But God, in his mercy, was pleased to let the scales drop from my eyes.

When the unconscious state of the dead was presented to my mind, I thought it could not be sustained; but by prayerful study and examination of God's word, I became convinced it was so. Then a question arose in my mind, will they always remain in that state, and there be no hereafter? No; I have read somewhere, said I, of the resurrection of the dead, both of just and unjust; consequently, all will be raised to life. I so understood it for a long time, and thought it was truth. Still it did not look just right; it seemed too much like the torment theory. G. W. Brown preached the first sermon on the non-resurrection of the wicked that I ever heard. Well, I found a great many passages of Scripture to go against that, to my mind. But some two or three months after this, while at work, this scripture came to my mind: "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." I thought a minute, and then said, Suppose that Spirit don't dwell in you, can you be raised up? Here was something I had not thought of before. It is the Spirit or germ of life in Christ that shall bring believers up in the last day. Do the wicked have it? No. All other passages have been cleared up to my mind since that time. And to-day, Brother, I can say with you, and all of like precious faith, I am a believer in "Life only through Christ," and have ben for the last four years. My prayer is, that we may all so live in this world, that, when the LIFE-GIVER comes to raise the dead, we may all be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead; for such are children of God, and will die no more forever.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

MILTON, Fulton Co., Ill., May 29, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I write not because I think my articles are worth a place in the dear HERALD OF LIFE, but because, first, the cause demands it; for we find that our Brethren and Sisters throughout the West and elsewhere want to hear from us, and have no other means but the paper; therefore we report ourself oftener than we otherwise would; and if it does them as much good to hear from the poor old one-armed preacher as it does us to hear from them we are more than paid for our labor; for, truly, it is like water to a thirsty soul when we get hold of the little two winged angel and read the heart cheering epistles from the dear ones that are sighing for home. Just here allow me to say that, if Br. W. S. Campbell knew the deep anxiety the people have out here for him to return, we think he could not rest satisfied until he came; and, we say, the cause demands it. May the Lord direct. In the second place, we write sending three subscribers. Here let me say, once more that we fear many don't make the effort to obtain subscribers that they should. Brethren, wake up. The time is short; what is done must be done quickly. Every thing speaks the coming of the Lord soon. We that are not in the dark can see what is coming; for events cast their shadows before. We are having wars, earthquakes, inundations unprecedented; and now the famine begins to stare us in the face. O let us be ready.

We are having interesting times out here. Last first day, at 11 A. M., we preached on "What is man?" which troubled the waters, not a little, among the immortal soul believers; so much so, that the professors of religion threatened to egg us; but, in nothing terrified, we took for a foundation, in the evening, "If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" which undermined the stronghold about the wicked dead ever seeing life, or appearing anywhere. Glory to God, the truth took hold of some minds that will tell in the future. Amen.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The country continues rapidly to settle down to its normal condition under the reconstruction measures of the last Congress. One curious fact is observed in this pacification, and that is the generals and statesmen who periled everything to overthrow their national government, are the warmest advocates of the reconstruction policy, negro suffrage and all while newspaper editors and others who did the "big" talk during the rebellion, are as noisy as ever in urging their nonsense.

The accounts of the crops in every section of the country continue to be of the most flattering kind.

FOREIGN.

No sooner do hopes of peace and tranquility begin to prevail in Europe, than some untoward event occurs to destroy them. Last week, while Napoleon and the Czar of Russia were riding in a carriage in Paris, a Pole fired two shots at the latter, but without hurting him. The deed was incited by political passion. This is about the fourth attempt on the lives of sovereigns and statesmen during the past year.

Nothing is yet known positively about the fate of Maximilian. The capture of Queretaro is entirely confirmed. The city was betrayed into the hands of Escobedo on the 15th of May, and Maximilian and all his officers, four hundred and fifty in number, were captured. Only one of the most noted among the imperialists was shot—the famous Mendez—who has figured in many of the most desperate acts of horror which have made the Mexican annals famous. A court-martial has been ordered for the trial of Maximilian. The fallen Emperor has issued a farewell address to his "countrymen," in which he sharply charges Napoleon with being the cause of his misfortunes and failure in Mexico, and closes with a few words of solemn warning to all "ambitious and incautious princes."

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND TRACTS can be had at the Editor's residence; of GEO. W. YOUNG, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 37 Park Row, Room 40.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO FORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

Various Sums.

Daniel Parsons sends $5 from Mrs. Gall, to be applied; Alexander Dalzell, $2; Charles H. Reed, John E. Jones, Mrs. Barbary Morse, Mrs. M. C. Harriman, $1 each.

Book and Tract Fund.

Prof. J. F. Huber.................... $5 00

Freedmen's Mission.

For Helen Robertson.

Prof. Jacob F. Huber, Middletown, Conn.................... $5 00
J. Hamilton, Fredonia, N. Y.......... 1 00
"Hope," Westville, Conn.......... 1 00

Advertisements.

Meadville Theological School.

THE NEXT TERM begins September 2d, 1867. The Faculty of instruction consists of four resident and four non-resident Professors, and a Tutor. The object is to educate young men for the Christian Ministry. Beneficiary aid is given to indigent students. The tuition, use of library, and text books are free to all. The school was founded by the Unitarian and Christian denominations, but is open to all who believe in the divine origin of Christianity. The library consists of nine thousand five hundred volumes. Application may be made to Rev. A. A. Livermore, President of the Board of Instruction, Meadville, Pa.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE,
LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS,
GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
OFFICE HOURS, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 CHAMBERS ST.,
NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(ROOM 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover, to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are here by revoked.

Poetry.

FAITH.

BY RH. S. S. ANDROS.

A swallow, in the Spring,
Came to our granary, and 'neath the eaves
Essayed to make a nest, and there did bring Wet earth and straw and leaves.

Day after day she toiled,
With patient art; but ere her work was crowned,
Some sad mishap the tiny fabric spoiled,
And dashed it to the ground.

She found the ruin wrought;
Yet not cast down, forth from the place she flew,
And with her mate fresh earth and grasses brought,
And built the nest anew.

But scarcely had she placed
The last soft feather on its ample floor,
When wicked hand or chance again laid waste,
And wrought the ruin o'er.

But still her heart she kept,
And toiled again—and last night, hearing calls,
I looked, and lo! three little swallows slept
Within the earth-made walls.

What Truth is here, O man!
Hath Hope been smitten in its early dawn?
Have clouds o'ercast thy purpose, trust, or plan?
Have Faith, and struggle on.

—Selected.

Children's Department.

"HE TRUSTED ME."

There was a great placard on a window in a street of a great city, that read, "Boy Wanted," and a great many boys had been in to see about it; but it was only morning, and the merchant who had caused it to be written had not yet come down town. So the boys waited, all hoping to get the situation, and each one expecting his would be the great fortune.

Apart from the rest was a boy whose face was sad and thoughtful. It was a good face, clear and open, but that boy had just served a term in the city bridewell. He had stolen a loaf of bread from a baker who employed him occasionally to run on errands, a hard, grasping, avaricious man, who had repeatedly charged him with dereliction from duty when he was innocent, and who had no mercy on him when he was guilty.

His mother—his poor, toiling, patient mother—the only true friend he had ever known, had died while he was in jail, and now that he was free again, with the disgrace clinging to him, he felt like an alien from humanity.

While the boys were waiting the bells sounded an alarm of fire, and they scampered off after the engine, all but the boy from jail, who waited in a sort of dumb expectancy.

Presently a gentleman drove up in a carriage and stopped before the shop door. His horse was restive, and as he was getting out he would have have fallen, but the boy started forward and caught the animal by his head, holding him firmly in one position.

"Thank you, my boy," said the gentleman. "That's for your trouble," and he handed him some loose change, which the boy refused.

"It wasn't no trouble," he said, and was turning away.

"Stop," said the gentleman; "have you been in there?" pointing to the shop in whose window the placard was.

"No, sir; the gentleman as wants a boy hasn't come down."

"Well, I am the gentleman. Suppose you come in with me; I would like to talk with you. Do you want a place to make yourself generally useful?"

"Yes, sir," said the boy, "but"—and then his courage failed. He could not say he had been in jail.

"Come into the office," said the merchant; and he passed through the long store, with its row of important looking clerks, into a small apartment where several men were busy writing. They looked up a moment, bowed to their employer, and resuming their writing, were deaf to all other sights and sounds.

"Sit down," said the merchant, kindly, "and tell me your name and age."

"John Dawson; age fourteen."

"And now, John, where did you live last?"

There was a long silence, a long struggle in John's breast, when he answered, as calmly as he could,

"In jail."

The merchant started as if a pistol had exploded before him. For a moment he was too surprised to speak. He was no type of a thief or rogue, this fair, frank looking boy. There was no villainously low forehead, no round, cropped head, no leer in the blue eyes, yet he was a jail boy.

"What was you convicted of?" he asked, at length.

And John Dawson told him the whole sorrowful story of his sick mother, and his long struggles with want and temptation and sin, how at last he stole the loaf of bread, when they were too poor to buy food and fuel, and must have both.

"O, sir," he went on, "that baker was such a hard man. He never trusted me, he accused me of stealing when I had never touched a pin, and I believe was glad when I did fall, but if you will only trust me I will never deceive you, sir, or lay my hand on anything that is not mine."

Mr. Blake, the merchant, thought long and deeply. There was a chance to save a soul from ruin: he might not succeed, but if the boy had a trial and turned out well, how great a work would be accomplished. He thought of his own little son at home, surrounded by love and virtue, and that decided him.

"I will trust you," he said firmly.

"You will have plenty of chances to steal, even if you are watched, but I shall not watch you. If you deceive me, you ruin your own soul and offend God. You say your mother was a christian; for her sake do right, and you will find a virtuous life brings its own reward. Dare to do right, dare to be firm in the cause of virtue, and your own conscience will approve, and your Father in heaven will smile upon you. Now you can begin, and I will give you $5 a week, which will pay your board and clothe you if you are economical. Now carry this package to the express office, and let me see how smart and punctual you can be."

When John went out with the bundle under his arm he met the other boys, who had returned from the fire. They were much disappointed at John's good luck, and one cried out, "did you tell him you had been to jail?" And another said, "Don't steal that bundle." But John kept bravely on, undisturbed by their taunts.

"He trusted me," he said to himself. "I shall pray every night to be kept out of temptation, for if I miss this time I shall never come out right again."

For two years John Dawson faithfully served Mr. Blake, and never once did he deviate from the straight path of duty. Then he went to a business college, and after he got through there he entered business for himself and prospered well.

But he found time always to attend the noon prayer meetings that were daily held by a religious association in the town where he lived. Once he told the history of his life, and how Mr. Blake saved him from temptation and sin, "because," he ended by saying, "he trusted me."

Then an elderly man arose, a stranger, and with much agitation said, "I thank God for this hour. One soul saved through me lightens every cross and makes even my crown grow lighter. He has trusted me even as I trusted the boy who had done wrong."

DEMONOLOGY, OR DEVILISM.

EXPLANATION TO POLLY G. PITTS, BY SAMUEL MASON.

[Concluded.]

Again, the apostle mentions the fall of these angels as a fact familiarly known. For if God spared not the angels that sinned and the angels that kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation, &c. It would be very singular to speak in this way, if the truth of their fall was not supposed to be understood. But we have no knowledge of the fall of any of the angels in heaven. If that was true this is the first intimation of it. We have, however, been made familiar with the fall of Adam and Eve; and of their being thus reserved under chains of darkness; and in like manner, the old world and the cities of the plain. Apply this to our first parents, and all is intelligent; but if to angels in heaven, we are left in as great darkness as the state that holds them.

But again, angels from heaven have appeared to men, and conversed with and instructed them; but who ever heard of their entering a man? And if the idea of a holy angel entering a person is absurd, is it not equally so to say that a fallen angel can enter a person? Indeed, whatever be the nature of these beings and their spiritual organism, it is the height of insanity to say that one of these created beings can enter another created being. Therefore, when Christ cast out devils, he did not cast out fallen angels; real, created, conscious, living beings. How such a sentiment could ever find lodgment in a rational mind long enough to prejudice it in its favor, and blind it to the truth, I cannot conceive. The devils, as we have stated in our former epistle, are the spirits of our lusts, that war in our members, bringing us into captivity to the law of sin and death. And consequently they are connected with, and in most cases, the cause of our diseases, both of the mind and body. He, Christ, cast out these devils, or spirits; and healed the sick. He rebuked the raving and demoniac spirits with which they were possessed from their inflamed lusts, and healed their infirmities both of body and mind. They were not possessed with a fallen angel, or the spirit of a fallen angel. The whole seat and difficulty was within themselves; and when he had cleansed their minds—the fountain of moral impurity—and their bodies from disease, the stream of iniquity from them ceased to flow.

Matt. ix. 32, we read, "As they went out, behold they brought to him a dumb man possessed with a devil. And when the devil was cast out the dumb spake." This man had a spirit of dumb infirmity, or dumb devil, as Luke has it. He was possessed of this bodily disease. This dumb spirit was cast out; his tongue was loosed from this hour, and he was free from captivity to this dumb infirmity, or spirit.

Luke xiii. 11, "And behold there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together and could in no wise lift up herself; and when Jesus saw her, he said, Woman thou art loosed from thine infirmity." Ver. 16. "Ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom satan hath bound these eighteen years, to be loosed from this bond on the Sabbath day?" Here it is plain, again, that this spirit of infirmity, or disease in this woman, that for so many years had troubled her, was her great adversary, and source of temptation and trial; hence it was proper to denominate it satan. Remember, this satan, or devil, was the spirit, the life, the power, and workings of this infirmity.

How unnatural and contrary to truth, the sentiment that satan here is to be understood to be the spirit of a fallen angel. We wish in every instance to apply this idea, that you may see its perfect fallacy.

Luke iv. 33, "And in the synagogue there was a man which had a spirit of an unclean devil, and he cried out with a loud voice, saying, Let us alone, what have we to do with thee, Jesus of Nazareth, art thou come to destroy us? I know thee, who thou art, The Holy one of God. And Jesus rebuked him, saying, Hold thy peace and come out of him. And when the devil had thrown him down in the midst, he came out of him, and hurt him not."

Here it is said the devil spoke, and consequently it must be a separate, intelligent agent. But where is the evidence that the unclean spirit did not use the man's organs to speak? Give us one instance where the Bible recognizes an intelligent wicked spirit, capable of talking independent and separate from man, and it will suffice. But until we can have one such instance, we have no warrant to draw a conclusion from this or any other text, that that which is called devil, in man, speaks independent of man. It is all plain; no one need misunderstand this language. We have all seen men possessed with the devil, or an unclean spirit. We see them every day. And how this wicked spirit makes them act. They are noisy, boisterous, profane; and behave every way out of character. It is the spirit and power of their evil habits, passions and lusts, that rage in their members, and propel them on to deeds of wickedness, clamor and blasphemy.

In conclusion we would say, be not deceived, let us not be looking to some wicked angelic agency; and charging our temptations and the cause of our fall into sin to such a being, as a literal, personal devil; when the root of the evil is in ourselves, and all that is denominated satan and devil. To resist the devil, is to resist the evil propensities of our heart, and that of others; and overcome evil with good, and obey the truth of God, and keep ourselves sanctified through its divine influence. The enemy, the devil, is within us, and within others; and we need look for no development of his satanic majesty from any other source. We have never met him, or seen him, only in the character of depraved man and woman; and we never can, for the very good reason that he has no literal, abstract existence.

New Brighton, Pa, May 27, 1867.

REMARKS BY THE EDITOR.—We would suggest to Br. Mason, if it is not probable that he has mistaken "the angels that sinned"? That angels in scripture, often mean messengers, or servants, is an undeniable fact. Hence, the servants of God are sometimes called angels. In the case under consideration, we incline to a different application from that of Br. M., but cannot make extended notes now. The world before the flood, the period spoken of by Peter and Jude, was divided into two classes of men, viz., Those who "called upon the name of the LORD," Gen. iv. 26; called the "sons of God" (i. e., "servants of God") Gen. vi. 2; and those who disregarded the service of God, and were servants of the flesh, living wholly for animal gratifications. These two classes were entirely distinct. Jude says "The angels which kept not their first estate" [margin, "principality."] God designed these "sons of God" to be the princes, or rulers of the earth; but they "kept not" this excellent "estate," or high privilege; for, beholding "the daughters of men"—mere worldlings—they were enticed to form alliances with them because "they were fair," regardless of the consequences to their own character as "sons of God," angels, or messengers of God—servants of God—and gave themselves to sensual gratifications to the loss of God's favor, and so "kept not their first estate, but left their own habitation," or intercourse with God; and for it, he shut them up, as it were, in prison, reserving them "unto the day of judgment"—the flood to destroy all flesh—"to be" then "punished;" which punishment was inflicted on them and on the sinful seed of their begetting, by an utter destruction from off the face of the earth, so that these "angels, that sinned," met their day of judgment and punishment according to the prophecy of "Enoch, the seventh from Adam," who prophesied of that coming judgment on "all the ungodly among them;" and Peter says, God brought "in the flood upon the world of the ungodly," while He "saved Noah" and his family. In this view, to our mind, we have a perfect explanation of the matter relating to sinning angels. As Br. M. has said, the transaction must have been something well known by all to whom he wrote; but where is there any information in the scriptures that any of the angels in heaven ever rebelled, sinned or fell? Clearly there is no such statement in the Book of God, though it has long existed in the traditions of men and been embodied in "Milton's Paradise Lost," the fruitful source of a fancy religion.

The London Jewish Intelligencer makes the following statement on the authority of a Portuguese journal published at Goa, in the East Indies: "Great excitement has been caused among the Jews at Bombay by the publication by their pontiff, H. B. Koyn, 'member of the family of Aaron,' who has lately come to Bombay from Jerusalem, of a pamphlet under the title, 'The Voice of the Vigilant'—the object of this voice being to persuade the Jews that it is useless waiting longer for the promised Messiah, as this is Jesus Christ himself whose doctrines have been spread all over the world without sound or force. The 'Voice' is said to use arguments which are solid and conclusive. 'Compare,' says the pontiff, 'the Old and New Testaments and the truth will be seen.' He also adds that he was born in the old law, and under it was elevated to the pontificate, but the light had already penetrated with its rays into the deep recesses of his mind, and he is therefore persuaded, and with well-founded reasons, that it is in vain that the Messiah is now looked for."

THOUGHTS AND THESES ON REV. VI., 9-11.

1. This vision of the souls under the altar, being found among figures and symbols, and not in a literal narrative of literal and real events, and the symbols not being explained, as in other portions of Revelation, the evidence derived from it in support of man's immortality in death, must necessarily be characterized as merely inferential—hence impositive. That which is positive is direct, implicit, confident, assured, and absolute. Inference is conclusion drawn from certain premises which may be sotnd or unsound, and is always indirect and somewhat uncertain.

2. Being found among a class of symbols, as that which is symbolized is always higher or greater than the symbol, no person should ever dream that the souls under the altar represent mere human ghosts disembodied of flesh and blood and bones. Note. The only exception to this law of symbols is, where visions of realities, such as God, Christ, etc., must symbolize God, Christ, etc., there being nothing greater for them to symbolize. See chapters v. and xix., also Dan vii. 10, etc. The vision under consideration is a vision of souls, and souls are not spirits—the human spirit and human soul not being interchangeable or identical.

3. If soul always uniformly meant mind, or a spiritual entity, then souls here might represent disembodied souls, all other things being clear and equal; but there are scores of passages where soul means the entire human being, embracing the tripartite division of soul, body and spirit, called collectively man. So that while here the souls must represent something of their own order and kind, the symbol being unexplained; the symbolic law demands that something different from and more than spirits be represented by the term; besides, to make these souls symbols of mere ghosts, it must first be proved that they are out of human bodies, which at present is not proved, but only taken for granted. Hence the vision of souls must represent a vision of persons.

4. This being a vision of symbols representing that which should be hereafter, and not that which actually was—it is therefore utterly forbidden, as all must concede, that we make the souls at the foot of the altar a living, present reality at the time John wrote. These souls seen in vision were not born until more that a thousand years afterwards. Being as yet unborn, the real beings were not seen; had no existence. Not having lived, they could not have died. Not having died, the souls could not be seen disembodied. Only the image or shadow of the unborn martyrs was put before the eye of John. In this view we see that the vison of the souls under the altar affords not a particle of proof that the pious and martyred dead were then in heaven.

5. In not another place in the scriptures is it recorded that any prophet or apostle, or any one else, ever saw a soul which might appear to be out of the body, save in Revelation, and then always among symbolic visions. Assuming that these were indeed disembodied, then the sight was a rare one truly. Prove them to have been out of the body, human, spirit-entities, and John saw what no mortal eye had seen before. Even if designed to represent the whole man (being killed), even then the expression "I saw a soul" is not elsewhere found. An interesting fact.

6. Prof. George Bush, in a work of one hundred and forty-one pages on "The Soul," written expressly to prove "that man exists in the absolute integrity of his nature, apart from the material body which he here inhabits" (p. 65), after quoting and examing psukee, (soul) in all its varied senses, and criticizing learnedly and profoundly, produces out of the whole Bible but two passages to prove "that the term (soul) is applied to man after his dislodgment from the house of clay" (p. 65). And these two are—"Tell it not in Gath"—Rev. vi. 9, and xx. 4. Why not oftener applied? And if a possible thing, why not oftener seen? Why?

7. Could it be proved that these were disembodied, real, living souls, it would still afford no direct and positive proof of the soul's immortality. For if a soul lives after and in what we call death, yet it remains true that "God can destroy soul," Matt. x. 28, ergo, soul is perishable, mortal. It does not read, "I saw the immortal souls," etc. Alas for orthodoxy, that qualifying word is not found in the same verse with soul, nor in the same chapter, nor on the same page, nor in the same book. To speak in a figure, it is not found within a million of miles of nephesh, psukee, soul.

8. Could it be proved that these were disembodied souls seen in the intermediate state, even then it affords no evidence of their being perfected in heavenly happiness, or having received their reward. It is not said that they were in the kingdom, or wore the crown, or basked in the glory. Even the robe was not bestowed until they had cried, "How long?" Their hope was not realized; they were anxious and unhappy. They yearned for the judgment day as we the living do. They needed to be pacified and consoled; they were without rest and in longing. They sorrowed and mourned. The nature of their cry denotes a state of suffering on earth rather than one of glory and triumph in heaven. They were not in heaven under the golden altar, but at the foot of the altar of sacrifice, on the earth. More anon.

D. T. T.

—World's Crisis.

A SIMPLE EXPLANATION.

The late Mr. William Greenfield was once in company at the house of a friend, with a gentleman of deistical principles, a stranger to him, who put to him the following, among many other questions:

"Can you give me the reason why Jesus Christ is called 'the Word?' What is meant by 'the Word?' It is a curious term."

Mr. Greenfield, unconscious of the motive or the skeptical principles of the inquirer, replied, with the mild simplicity and decision by which his character was marked—

"I suppose, as words are the medium of communication between us, the term is used in the sacred scriptures to demonstrate that He is the only medium between God and man; I know no other reason." The deist's mouth was shut.

Oh, if people were but acquainted with piety, they would not fear it so much or give it so unattractive a character: 'tis the balm of life, and perhaps in the world is believed to consist of bitterness, harshness, uncouthness; but take my word for it, nothing is more gentle, more yielding, more loving than a pious soul. I know some who suffer all, forgive all, love all; who are capable of whatever is great, noble, generous; who would be the admiration of the world if only the world knew them. This is what I observed while very young, and it filled me with love and veneration for that religion which rendered men so perfect, made them such kind and gentle creatures. I have had instances of this under my own eyes; I have seen my mother, and each recollection of her resignation and courage in misfortunes and suffering engraves more and more deeply in my heart that religious sentiment from whence proceeded her strength.

A STRING OF PEARLS.

Applause is the spur of noble minds, the end and aim of weak ones.

It is with life as with coffee, he who would drink it pure must drain it to the dregs.

He that loves sin and can live in sin, is not in a pardoned state, let him him presume as he may.

Friendship is a silent gentleman that makes no parade; the true heart dances no hornpipe on the tongue.

He has a good income who has but few occasions of spending—not he who has great rents and great vents.

To win a soul is your noblest prize, and the greater the number you win, the greater and richer will be that "crown of rejoicing" which you will wear in the day of the Lord.

HOLLOW-HEARTED SENTIMENTALISM.

The following incident shows the difference between practical beneficence and maudlin sentimentalism:

Eugene Sue used to visit almost daily one of the most fashionable ladies of Paris, Madame de——, and hold forth in her richly furnished boudoir, on the condition of the poor.

"Do you ever relieve their distress?" asked Madame de——, at the close of one of these harangues.

"To a trifling extent," answered Sue; "but though my gifts are always small, they are always cheerfully bestowed. I give one fourth of my income in alms."

That afternoon, as he left the Cafe de Paris, where he had been eating a costly dinner, an apparently old woman, clad in rags, prayed for charity.

"Go away,' was the stern reply.

"But I am starving—give me a single copper to purchase bread with."

"I will give you in charge to a police officer if you thus annoy me."

"You will?" said the beggar; "and yet, Monsieur Eugene Sue, you are the man who writes about the misery of the poor—you are the workingman's champion—you are—"

"Who are you?" exclaimed Sue.

"Madame de——," was the reply, and the disguised lady left the novelist to his reflections.

DOUGLAS JERROLD'S KIND SPIRIT.

Charles Dickens relates the following of Douglas Jerrold: Of his generosity I had a proof within these two or three years which it saddens me to think of now. There had been estrangement between us—not on any personal subject, and not involving angry words—and a good many months had passed without my ever seeing him in the streets, when it fell out that we dined, each with his own separate party, in the Strangers' Room of the Club. Our chairs were almost back to back, and I took mine after he was seated and at dinner (I am sorry to remember), and did not look that way. Before we had sat long he openly wheeled his chair around, stretched out both hands in an engaging manner, and said aloud, with a bright and loving face, that I can see as I write to you: "Let us be friends again. A life is not long enough for this." Jerrold was not a christian, but his conduct in this case was worthy of a christian character. On a dying bed how insignificant will appear many things about which we contend in bitterness and wrath! Life is too short, its inevitable sorrows so many, its responsibilities so vast and solemn, that there is indeed no time to spare in abusing and maligning one another. Let not the sun go down on your wrath. Never close your eyes to sleep with a heart angry towards your brother and fellow-sufferer. See him and be reconciled to him if you can. If he is a true man and a christian, he will listen. If he is not, you will have done right, and your soul will be bright with the sunshine of heaven.

AN INCIDENT OF BY-GONE DAYS.

Near this city, a few years since, the rite of baptism was performed on several women by immersion in the river. As it was winter it was necessary to cut a hole in the ice; and the novelty of the scene attracted a large crowd, among whom were several Indians, who looked on in wondering silence. They retired without understanding the nature or the object of the ceremony they had seen; but observing that all the subjects of immersion were females, and getting a vague idea that it was to make them good, the Indians came back a few days afterward, bringing their squaws with them. Cutting another hole in the ice, near the same place, they immersed each and all of them, in spite of their remonstrances, being very sure that if it was good for the whites it was good for the reds.—St. Joseph Herald.

Commercial advices received in Liverpool from the Mauritius give a most alarming account of the mortality from fever. Upwards of six thousand persons died in March, and from the 1st to the 5th of April more than five thousand deaths had been registered. Of this number more than one-half died in Port Louis. The population of Port Louis is eighty thousand, and according to the circular of Messrs. A. Duff & Co. the deaths have averaged over two hundred a day.

"Faith," says the apostle, "is the substance of things hoped for, and the proof of things not seen." What is this but the apprehending of divine things as realities?

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Chris alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a wo-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy or their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, he price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage a his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether a business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all hese matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 177. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 19, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 35.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

THE AGE TO COME.

BY GEORGE B. DAY, LATE OF THE M. E. CHURCH.

BR. STORRS:—I submit to you for publication in the HERALD OF LIFE what I deem the scriptures teach concerning the facts of the age to come. The outlines may seem to you and your readers speculative and even fanciful. But if you can conceive that the church founded by Christ and his apostles is a type of the kingdom yet to come, and can admit, as you will be able to, upon sufficient comparison, that nothing of the kind is existent visibly now; and if you will fill the declarations and promises of Jesus, with a meaning drawn from the facts of the apostolic times, rather than the phenomena and experiences of the church now so called, it may strike you suddenly, as it did your correspondent, that the great work of the Holy Spirit was to show the first believers, and consequently us also, the things that are to come. It seems to me conclusive that its powers and functions, as related to us in the Acts and Epistles of the apostles, are revelations of the eternal kingdom of Christ. They were powers of the world to come, and earnests of the inheritance.

I realize how hard it is to lay aside the long indulged belief that we are living under the sway and influence of the Holy Spirit. The church has taught so long that our convictions of sin, desires of salvation, conversion to God, and faith in Christ, together with uprightness of conduct, integrity of life, and perseverance in the faith, are all the legitimate results of the Holy Spirit working in our hearts, that it requires almost a herculean effort to admit that it may not be so. And yet one simple fact will dispel the whole illusion, if we dwell upon it in all its bearings.

That fact is this:—that after a man had been convicted of sin, had believed on Jesus, and been baptized, the Holy Ghost was then communicated by the imposition of the hands of the apostles. By that act the believer received some one of the nine great gifts, or manifestations, which St. Paul analyzes and explains in 1 Corinthians, xii.

The possession and exercise of that gift, for the benefit of himself or his brethren, were all the advantages or influence which the recipient gained in the reception of the Holy Spirit.

And the possession of it constituted the comforter, the witness of his sonship and heirship with Christ. This shed abroad in his heart, or made him see the love of God for him. It was his sealing, his earnest of inheritance. It was the Spirit of adoption. In short, it was the office power of the future kingdom, which, in the resurrection, the recipient would be endowed with, in order to reign with Jesus.

You will call to mind very readily that St. Paul makes offices out of these nine gifts or manifestations, and declares that God by the Holy Spirit had set these offices in the church. They have all been wanting since the death of the last apostolic disciple. They were withdrawn after they had served the purpose of revealing the "mysteries of the kingdom."

The church generally now claims to be in possession actually of the Holy Spirit. In so doing it interprets all the work of that Spirit by whatsoever phenomena may be found within and among its members. Ministers and laymen live by the Spirit according to their profession. They preach and pray, sing and talk, shout and cry, hope and fear, are sad and joyful; in short, impute all their moods to the divine agency. I do not mention this to hold them up to ridicule, but to show you why they reject the personal coming and real kingdom of Christ. They have lost all scriptural conception of the Holy Spirit. They do not, and cannot see that that Spirit was making in the apostolic church a revelation of the office powers of the world to come.

The claim to the righteousness of the Spirit, if not well founded, is very dangerous, and it seems to me there can be but little doubt that all the churches are holding the same attitude toward the second Advent which the pious Jews held to the first. By the law the Pharisees believed they were good enough to inherit with the Messiah. By the Spirit, the churches claim to be righteous enough to reign with Jesus. The gentiles have stumbled over the Spirit as Israel stumbled over the law. They will receive a like condemnation, unless saved as by fire.

FUTURE GOVERNMENT OF THE WORLD, otherwise THE KINGDOM OF HEAVEN.

Supreme Monarch.—THE LORD JESUS CHRIST.

Executive Power.—THE HOLY SPIRIT.

Royal Family.—THE SONS OF GOD, by translation or resurrection.

Subjects.—THE HUMAN RACE, divided into, ISRAEL AND THE GENTILES.

Cabinet of our Lord.—PATRIARCHS AND PROPHETS.

Offices of the Government.—1. APOSTLES.

ISRAEL.—Peter, James, John, Andrew, Philip, Bartholomew, Thomas, Matthew, James, Simon, Judas, and Matthias.

GENTILES.—PAUL.

2. PROPHETS,
3. TEACHERS,
4. MIRACLE WORKERS,
5. HEALERS,
6. HELPS,
7. COUNSELLORS,
8. SPEAKERS OF TONGUES,
9. INTERPRETERS,
10. DISCERNERS OF SPIRITS.

I have drawn this programme, not because I find it thus laid out in the scriptures, but that your readers may fully comprehend what I think Jesus wishes us to understand. Some of it is already clear. Your periodical is the HERALD of this coming Kingdom. You believe that Jesus will reign forever in person. It is equally clear that the Holy Spirit, which will raise the believing dead, will by its power produce all the blessings and blessedness of his reign. "The kingdom of God is righteousness, joy and peace, through the Holy Ghost." You teach that the destiny of the saints is to reign with him, and that the mortal race will be subject to their power. It may, however, seem fanciful to mention the patriarchs and prophets as the cabinet of the Great King. Abraham, you will recollect, was pledged a coinheritance with his seed, which is Christ "Unto thee and unto thy seed will I give this land." Isaac and Jacob were heirs with him of the same promise. David's Son is to reign before him, i. e., in his presence; and Jesus himself says that Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob shall sit down with the prophets in the kingdom of God.

To the twelve apostles, Jesus said, "In the regeneration, when the Son of man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye shall sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." Paul was not a believer at that time, and could not have been included in this promise. Matthias took the place of Judas the traitor. But St. Paul claims, "I am the apostle to the gentiles; I magnify mine office."

Concerning the other offices of the kingdom, I feel sure that protracted study will show that they are the offices which will be held and exercised in the coming age. I can only mention some of the arguments therefor, without expanding them.

1. They are the precise powers by which Jesus demonstrated his Messiahshih or character of Redeemer.

2. They were given singly to each believer to seal him for the kingdom.

3. Their universal exercise will fulfil every prediction of the blessings of the kingdom made in the Old or New Testament prophecies.

4. No other blessings were ever received at the hand of prophet, Christ, or apostles, save these communicated by these Holy Ghost powers.

5. If we do not thus understand them, we must continue to spiritualize, as the church calls it; i. e., vaporize, or make mythical, all the revelation of the Spirit.

Paterson, N. J.

PREDESTINATION AND ELECTION.

AN INQUIRY.

BR. STORRS:—Would you have the kindness to give me some information on the following query through the columns of the HERALD OF LIFE—viz., "Does the Bible teach the doctrine of Predestination and Election?" It is a subject at present under consideration in a Bible class, of which I am a member. It has been discussed this Thursday, evening, and there being a diversity of ideas, I proposed that the subject be taken up again. I endeavored to show that man was created a free agent; endowed with perfect intelligence and a capacity to receive or reject the promises of God. I further sought to convince the class that it is practicable in man to shape his walk through all the vicissitudes of this mortal and changing life, and study to avoid what to him appears his "inevitable destiny." I insisted that God could not actuate man to commit sin, it being at variance with his divine nature, and then punish the being whom he actuated.

I am a subscriber for the HERALD OF LIFE for nearly two years, during which time I have carefully read and retained its precious Bible truths, over which the veil has been so long allowed to remain. Your extempore sermons delivered in Brooklyn, have not been preached in vain. I have heard them, and to prove my appreciation, I succeeded in inducing others to hear you. Mr. Wendell's discussion has been productive of much good. Some six or eight of the class above referred to, in company with myself, attended it; when all admired his candor and explicitness; while they condemned the want of even true gentlemanly bearing in his opponent. A great many feel anxious to know if the report of the discussion will be put in printed form, and if so, when? Yours in hope of a resurrection,

JAMES J. BUTLER.

New York City.

RESPONSE BY THE EDITOR.—The subject of our friend's inquiry is one that we do not care to introduce into the HERALD OF LIFE. It was we think, exhausted in the last century and the beginning of the present one, in the discussions between Rowland Hill, Toplady, and others, in the affirmative; and JOHN FLETCHER, and others in the negative. A more holy and heavenly writer than Mr. Fletcher, we doubt if God ever raised up since the days of the apostles. To all whose minds are troubled with the question our friend asks us to respond to, we would say, Do not fail to read "FLETCHER'S CHECKS;" a work which we read more than forty years ago; and which, under God, forever settled our mind that the popular or Calvinistic notion of "Predestination and Election" can no more be found in the Bible than an inherent immortal soul. We say again, "Read Fletcher's Checks." We presume they can be had at the "Methodist Book Room," New York. It will be understood we do not endorse all of Mr. Fletcher's theology; but on the question of "Predestination and Election" we think he is unanswered and unanswerable: for forty years we have not had a doubt of the truth of his view of the question, and of the amazing wrong done to the character of God by the opposite view. It is to avoid controversy on this worn out subject, that we decline a discussion of it in the HERALD. We have no fear to discuss it: but we doubt if it has hold enough on the christian community in these days, to be worth a protracted conflict with the few who still hold that "God foreordained whatsoever comes to pass." Some may attempt to revive fatalism, but it is not to be feared; and the exercise of common sense in the search after scripture truth will soon convince the inquirer that the system charges the God of truth with a duplicity, in his dealings with men, which would destroy the character of any man for honesty, to say nothing of its violation of all the principles of justice. As, however, we received some days since a communication from Walter Patterson on the same subject, we have concluded to let it follow in this place. He says, it is "A copy of a letter to a friend on the doctrine of Election." We are not to be understood as endorsing every expression in this communication. He writes:

The doctrine of election as understood and believed by many, has been a source of much perplexity; and I make no doubt has turned many aside from giving that earnest heed to those things that belong to their everlasting well being, reasoning that if the Almighty hath chosen and decreed the salvation of a portion of the human family, a number that "can not be either increased or diminished," while the other portion is also "fore-ordained to everlasting death," that in connection with the doctrine taught of "total depravity," of men's being "utterly indisposed, disabled and made opposite to all good," they come to the conclusion it is best to banish anxiety and serious thoughts from the mind, catch the fleeting pleasures of life while within their reach, eat, drink and enjoy the fruit of their labor, for who can resist the will of God? If they are destined to be saved, they will be saved; if they are decreed to be damned, they will be. Such is a very natural conclusion from the belief of this doctrine, as it is generally understood.

Is such a doctrine taught in the Bible?

The word of God, when free from corruption and faithfully translated, is like its divine author, one harmonious whole; no discordant note in all its utterances. It is not yea and nay, a system of contradictions; but from the general scope of the scriptures we find they are addressed to reasonable and accountable creatures, who must act according to their free will, and must be answerable for their obedience or disobedience; be rewarded or punished according to their action. But how could such a system of things be, if "all things are fore-ordained, whatsoever comes to pass," and if men are saved or lost without any reference to their choice or responsibility?

That such is not the case, we may learn when the Bible informs us that "God is no respecter of persons." If God was a respecter of persons surely a portion of the human race might sicken at heart and give up in despair. We are very much the children of circumstances; we have no control over the accident of our birth, our form, our features, and many of our circumstances of life. If God did choose the rich, what would become of the poor? if he chose the form of grace and symmetry, what would become of those not so highly favored? If he chose because they were head and shoulders above the people, what would become of those who could not add a cubit to their stature? If he chose because of nobility, the accident of high birth, what would became of the plebeian? But thanks be to God, he is "no respecter of persons; but he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted of him." This might settle the whole question. God's election is not of persons, but of character. But again, God's perfections would seem to forbid that he should choose persons irrespective of character, to salvation; if so, he must will the salvation of some, and also will the damnation of others, unless compelled by some power beyond him, a thing inadmissible. But it is declared in his word that he is not "WILLING that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." Ez. xxxiii. clearly vindicates the justice of God's ways. But instead of presenting the contradictory nature of the common view of election with the word and attributes of God, it might be better to inquire, Is the doctrine of election taught in the Bible? if so, who are the elect? Now I believe that God, the Creator of the world, like a wise and intelligent architect, had a great and glorious purpose in view when he spake this world into existence; and for the accomplishment of this great purpose, he laid his plan in wisdom, which will eventually be crowned with complete success. "Thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it; he created it not in vain; he formed it to be inhabited." Is xlv. 18. "The heaven, even the heavens are the Lord's; but the earth hath he given to the children of men." Ps. cxv. 16. The righteous shall inherit the land, and DWELL THEREIN forever." Ps. xxxvii. 29. "Thy people also shall be righteous; they shall inherit the land forever." Isa lx. 21.

God has not only made known to us his glorious purpose, but he has also developed his plan, how this glorious consummation will be realized. God's purpose and plan has never been thwarted, notwithstanding the defections and rebellion of men. From the beginning, God chose, elected or determined (I care not how strong the term used) Jesus Christ as the head and center of his new creation; he was "the Lamb slain (in God's purpose) from the foundation of the world." In harmony, Paul says, "according as he hath chosen us IN HIM before the foundation of the world." Eph. i. 4. Now here we are taught the doctrine of election; we cannot deny it, neither would I; for it is God's glorious purpose, my only hope. But it is as easy to put a false construction on a plain passage of scripture, that might lead to wild and dangerous errors, as it is for a train to be turned from the right track by a switch, into danger which might prove fatal. As I understand the common view of election, it represents God as looking upon the human family in a lost and ruined state; his sympathy and love are awakened; he chooses a number of them to everlasting life, the rest are left in their helpless condition to perish; the elected number are given to Christ, that he should die for them, and redeem them. Then, of course, the atonement would be limited; the elect would be saved, because Christ died for them, but those whe are not elected must perish, having no Saviour provided for them; and, as is commonly believed, go down to eternal torments, eternally drinking the cup of God's wrath, because they have rejected God's love, mercy and grace, which were never provided for them! poor, helpless souls!

O, let us beware of blaspheming God's holy name. Shall we ascribe a character to God, that we would denounce as malignant, savage, diabolical, in human nature? But such an election I apprehend is not according to truth. It would be an election out of Christ instead of an election "in Christ." How wide the difference. To illustrate. Jesus says, "I am the true vine; ye are the branches." Jesus Christ is God's chosen vine: every true believer is one of his branches. Now do the scriptures inform us how we get "into Christ," and become one of those branches of God's chosen vine? Does not this leave sufficient room for human free agency; and hence the responsibility of every man that hears the offer of salvation through Jesus Christ? If we choose to remain out of him, then we are where God will not, can not, choose, approve or elect us. But if we choose to listen to God's voice of love, and come to Christ, believe in him, obey him, then we are "in Christ," where God can and will approve, choose or elect us. I speak now of election to everlasting life.

But we have elections spoken of in the Bible that do not warrant the security of eternal life. The children of Israel were a chosen people. Deut. vii. 6. "For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself." This election did not insure their everlasting salvation; but with this election God gave them the means that by their will and free agency they might become heirs of eternal life. Their subsequent history proved that "they were not all Israel who were of Israel." And it seems to me that the orthodoxy of the present day has stumbled into the common error of the Jews; for undoubtedly they depended very much upon their election, as being the favorites of Heaven, the children of God. John the Baptist applied his axe to that error by telling them not to trust in their relationship to Abraham. Jesus told them unless they believed in him, they had no life in them. But still they cling to their relationship to Abraham; and as such, "the seed the Lord had blessed." In this state Paul found them, as is evident from his powerful reasoning in Romans ix. to disabuse their minds of such a fallacy; and is it not very singular that the orthodoxy depends on those very arguments, to support their views of election, that Paul was using so powerfully to demolish that same idea in the Jews?

Our election is not the cause of our union with Christ, as it would be if we were chosen out of Christ; but if we are chosen, as Paul says, "in Christ," then our election is in consequence of being in Christ.

From what I have said, you will see my views on election. God created this earth, and designed it to be inhabited by a race of intelligent creatures that would show forth his glory, and be at one with him; for this purpose man was created. God, foreseeing that man, unaided, would not develop a character suitable to such a glorious consummation; before the foundation of the world He laid his plan, chose his medium, through which man would attain to that perfection of character that would qualify him for the fulfilment of God's glorious purpose. As Jesus Christ is the chosen, elected medium, he is the "Lamb slain from the foundation of the world." Man was put on trial and failed. God met him, and passed sentence of death upon him; the law must be honored; justice cannot be sacrificed to mercy, although God is love. God looks upon the human family with pity and compassion. He reveals his provided Saviour, suited to our necessities, and qualified for God's glorious purpose; so it is written, "God so loved the world, [not a few of them, or a small portion of chosen or elected ones] that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." This salvation that is in Jesus, is offered to all who hear it, "whosoever." Its acceptance or rejection is with man a free choice, he is responsible; it is offered on conditions; these conditions must be complied with—"whosoever believeth in him."

Now, does the poor, trembling sinner stop to "consider his ways"? does he realize without this salvation he is lost? "for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby he must be saved." Does he with a full soul accept of this salvation? does he come to Jesus, believe in him, obey him? Then he is where God approves of him, chooses him, elects him. Paul says we are chosen "in him;" in Christ Jesus. And this was God's purpose from the foundation of the world that those who "should inherit everlasting life" should be chosen in Christ Jesus.

This doctrine of election, according to the Bible, is a glorious doctrine, and in full harmony with man's free agency and accountability. The obscurity that envelops men's minds with respect to this doctine might soon be dispelled if they would consult the Bible instead of their creeds and confessions of faith.

For the present, I will take notice of only one of the passages which are so often quoted as proof positive of the popular view, by the self-styled orthodox; that is, the potter and the clay; affirming that God has the power and the right to dispose of his creatures as much as the potter has power over the clay to make one vessel to honor and another to dishonor. I admit that the potter has power to take his material and make what he pleases with it. But is this the lesson God was teaching Jeremiah when he sent him to the potter to receive divine instruction? See Jer. xviii. "The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, Arise and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words. Then I went down to the potter's house; and behold," (let us behold too, and see if the instruction given to Jeremiah was such as is so credulously believed) "he wrought a work on the wheels. And the vessel he made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter: so he made it again ANOTHER VESSEL, as seemed good to the potter to make it." This was an illustration of the instruction to be given to Jeremiah. The potter was making a vessel, but it got damaged in the making; so he made it another vessel than what he designed at first. Now God makes him to bear and understand his words. God says, the children of Israel were in his hands as the clay in the hands of the potter; "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it; if that nation against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom to build and to plant it; if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them."

Now a right understanding of this passage is the very reverse of the construction generally put upon it. Instead of God acting in an arbitrary, sovereign manner in moulding nations or individuals, he will act with them just as as they mould themselves; and instead of Paul using this passage to establish election, as generally contended for, he uses it for the very purpose of hewing to pieces the Jewish notion of their special election. The truth is, nations and individuals are on the wheels of God's moral government. If we are willing and obedient we are approved of God, and it will be well with us; but if we become marred we will be condemned to everlasting destruction. If it please better, I would say we are foreordained to our destiny; but mark! it is our character that decides which destiny. To illustrate. A man commits murder; he is arrested, tried, and sentenced to death. Now it may truly be said, he was foreordained to that death, because the laws of the land had ordained before, that the murderer should die. But the laws of the land did not ordain that individual to be a murderer. Neither does God fore-ordain any person to follow a course that will end in his displeasure. "As I live, saith the Lord, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn ye, from your evil ways, for why will ye die, O house of Israel?"

Delhi, N. Y. WALTER PATTERSON.

THE TRUTH BETTER THAN LIES.

"Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine?" Ans. "Them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts."—Isaiah xxviii. 9. What milk, and from what breasts must these be drawn so as to be weaned? and so being weaned he may teach them knowledge, and make them understand doctrine? If we study well the first eight verses of this chap., we shall be able to answer the above questions.

We answer our first question thus: "the milk" here means their supplies of luxury and drunkenness, wine and riotous living; such as the proud and idle always indulge in when they have the means; and "breasts" here means the sources from which their "milk," i. e., their supplies of indulgence, are drawn. They mean, "The fat valleys of them that are overcome of wine;" the rich agricultural resources of God's professed people, at the time this word was spoken.

Now we understand this 9th verse to plainly declare that you can never teach a man "knowledge," or make him "understand doctrine" until you have first drawn him away from such luxury, such sensual indulgence; and so shall have weaned him from the love of these vanities. This, we say, must, by some means, or by all means, be done; though it require "precept upon precept, precept upon precept, line upon line, line upon line, here a little and there a little," as represented in verse 10; and verse 11 says that some of these "precepts" and "lines" would be spoken "with stammering lips and another tongue, to this people;" or with an "unknown tongue," which was to be to them for a "sign." See 1 Cor. xiv. 21. Verse 12 declares that to the weary should be given rest and refreshing, if they would only come away from their worldly pleasures and sensual gratifications, and thus learn "knowledge" and "doctrine;" thus be taught to know the true God; and thus gain a relish for the pleasures he would give; "yet they would not hear." But still the 13th verse tells us that although all these means would prove ineffectual with the mass of his people, that though they would not be drawn to him, and away from their idols, still all these means were used: and the last part of this 13th verse tells us the fearful result of all this effort to reclaim them, that they may go, and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken."

V. 14. "Wherefore, hear the word of the Lord, ye scornful men, that rule this people which is in Jerusalem." When men are allowed to rule they are always "scornful." V. 15, 16, "Because ye have said, We have made a covenant with death, and with the grave we are at agreement; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, it shall not come unto us; for we have made lies our refuge, and under falsehood have we hid ourselves: therefore, thus saith the Lord, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious cornerstone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste."

V. 17. "Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding place." Verse 18, "And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it" .....V. 20. "For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that a man can wrap himself in it."

The following are some of our reflections as we carefully study the above texts. How kind is our God in thus calling upon scornful and deceived men to hear his words spoken in warning to them, because they are resting on that which must fail them, and at the same time preparing for them, and bringing to their acceptance that which is sure and abiding.

And how can we fail to notice the awful contrast here drawn between these refuges of lies and falsehoods, under which men seek to hide themselves, and this "true, judgment righteousness," which are refuges indeed. O, these refuges of lies, who would not flee from them? O, this foundation of truth, who would not build upon it? As we write, what gratitude glows within our breast "for this unspeakable gift," that such a foundation is laid for our hope. O why should we try to cover ourselves with lies, which is a covering all too narrow, when the broad mantle of truth is at hand? And why try to stretch ourselves for rest on a bed of falsehood, which is all too short for the purpose, when the ample couch of truth and righteousness invites us to a safe repose?

"O, for a strong, a lasting faith
To credit what th' Almighty saith!
T' embrace the message of his Son,
And call these promises our own.

"Then, should the earth's old pillars shake,
And all the wheels of nature break,
Our steady souls would fear no more
Than solid rock when billows roar."—Watts.

H. YOUNG.

Pittsfield, N. H.

The Lovely One.

Human nature presents its fairest aspect to the distant eye. Nearness dissipates its fancied beauty, and leaves a form of little power to attract. Many of the most distinguished for greatness or goodness suffer loss of reputation by familiar intercourse. The noble mien of the statesman lowers to the base grovelling of the sensualist. The majestic bearing of Truth's ambassador degenerates to the levity of a man of pleasure. The yearning compassion of the philanthropist appears a selfish itching for public fame. But the capability of our nature for the attainment of dignity and purity of character, is demonstrated by the model—the man Christ Jesus.

He was the fairest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely. Facing the throng, proclaiming the gracious words of his mission, or silencing the cavils of wicked men, you saw the dignity of his manhood, the glory of his divinity. Nor less attractive was he, when by the well of Jacob he sat talking with the woman of Samaria. His public walks and private ways alike command our admiration. Upon the stormy lake, tossed by the wild wind's fury, stilling it with a word, you feel the kindling of enthusiasm, and an involuntary desire to worship. While beside the grave of his friend, and in sight of the sisters, you see the heaving bosom and the falling tear showing how much he loved him, your melting heart overflows with sweet affection.

The triumph of his fame as the one altogether lovely, is now complete and universal. Friends and foes of christianity alike agree. The one who is adored by the believer is also eulogized as a model of perfection by the skeptic. That prophecy of himself which he uttered long ago, is even now in an important sense fulfilled. "And I, when I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me." And how earnestly should we draw near to contemplate his character, who is the desire of nations—the perfection of beauty—the praise of the whole earth.

A Delightful Legend.

There is a charming tradition connected with the site on which the Temple of Solomon was erected. It is said to have been owned in common by two brothers, one of whom had a family; the other had none. On the spot was sown a field of wheat. On the evening succeeding the harvest, the wheat having been gathered in separate shocks, the elder brother said unto his wife: "My younger brother is unable to bear the burden and heat of the day; I will arise, take of my shocks and place them with his without his knowledge." The younger brother, being actuated by the same benevolent motives, said within himself: "My elder brother has a family, and I have none; I will contribute to their support; I will arise, take of my shocks, and place them with his, without his knowledge." Judge of their mutual astonishment when, on the following morning, they found their shocks undiminished. This course of events transpired for several nights, when each resolved, in his mind, to stand guard and solve this mystery. They did so, when, on the following night, they met each other half way between their respective shocks, with arms full. Upon ground hallowed with such associations as these was the Temple of Solomon erected—so spacious and magnificent, the admiration and wonder of the world. Alas! in these days how many would sooner steal their brother's whole shock than add to it a single sheaf!

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 85 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J.;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND TRACTS can be had at the Editor's residence; of GEO. W. YOUNG, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York; also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Thorne & Co., 58 White St., and likewise at 37 Park Row, Room 40.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, JUNE 19, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"The Age to Come."

The article on the first page of this paper—by our esteemed Br. Day, late a minister in the Methodist E. Church, but now an independent preacher in Paterson, N. J.—on the above subject, is worthy of candid consideration. So far as the special gifts and miracle working power, by the Holy Spirit, is involved in his position, we shall not at this time controvert it. Those special gifts and powers, in the apostolic times, or church, may have been "a type of the kingdom yet to come."

Br. Day, however, seems to us to have overlooked the manifest distinction between the special gifts and powers by the Holy Spirit, imparted only to a portion of the church, and the general work of the Spirit, or the impartation of a measure of it to all the members of "the body of Christ." We agree with him that ministers and lay members of the so-called churches, in the present day, have set up a fanatical and pernicious claim that all their preaching, praying, shouting, etc., are by the Divine agency; a claim discreditable to religion, leading to fanaticism, error, discord, and a disregard for, or undervaluing of, the word of God, tending to bring christianity into contempt by the palpable contradictions in the theories of the different sects, each and all of whom claim to be guided by the Holy Spirit; and yet by their misrepresentations and even slanders of those who differ from them, show that their claim of possessing the Spirit of God is a baseless assumption; and that they act under the influence of their own spirit, instead of the Holy Spirit.

But this unchristian conduct we do not regard as proof that the Spirit is not now given to every true believer in Jesus, or that the Spirit does not now accompany the word of truth wherever read or published; but it is an abuse of the truth, or a perversion of it, through the native pride of the human heart and a desire to be thought more highly of than we have any right to claim, instead of confessing with Paul, "By grace I am what I am;" or asking, "What hast thou that thou didst not receive?" The claim, then, of "infallibility," set up, not by the chief Pope only, but by a multitude of lesser popes, is an abuse of a glorious truth, viz., that the promise of the Spirit, to some extent, is, not only to the apostolic church, but "to all, as many as the Lord our God shall call." Acts ii. 39. Jesus also testifies, "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink: he that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." John vii. 37, 38. John tells us, "This spake he of the Spirit, which they that believe on him should receive." To the woman of Samaria Jesus said, "Whosoever"—that covers all believers—"drinketh of the water that I shall give him".... it "shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." John iv. 14. And Paul saith, "If the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." Rom. viii. 11.

Such language seems to us to settle the point, as a fact, that our future life all depends on our now possessing the Holy Spirit dwelling in us. Furthermore, Paul saith to believers, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you?" 1 Corth. iii. 16.

That the gift of the Holy Spirit was not to be confined to the apostles, or the age of miracles, seems evident from many testimonies. John the Baptist addressing the multitudes who came to his baptism, saith of Christ, "He shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost," etc. Paul saith to the Corinthian church, "By one Spirit are we all baptized into one body." 1 Corth. xii. 13. This did not relate to miracles, in the ordinary sense of that term; but is a statement of how "any man" that "thirsts" can have a union with Christ. Again, Paul inquires, "Know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost, which is in you which ye have of God?" 1 Corth. vi. 19. He also saith, "Who hath also sealed us, and given the earnest of the Spirit in our hearts." 2 Corth. ii. 21, 22. Once more, Paul exhorts, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." Gal. iv. 30. "He that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." Gal. vi. 8. Jesus was "put to death in the flesh but quickened by the Spirit." 1 Pet. iii. 18. His friends have no promise of living from the dead only by the same Spirit that raised Christ; and in order to that result, it must "dwell" in us now, as Paul saith, Rom. viii. 11. Paul prayed that believers might "be strengthened with might by God's Spirit in the inner man," Eph. iii. 16; and exhorts, "Quench not the Spirit;" 1 Thess. v. 19; and tells the believers, "God hath chosen you to salvation [life] through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth." 2 Thess. ii. 13.

Here is an impartial statement which seems to place the subject beyond all reasonable doubt, that the truth has need of the Spirit of God to accompany it to make it effectual in fitting men for life eternal. Peter harmonizes with Paul in this matter when speaking of believers, everywhere, and of their being chosen "through sanctification of the Spirit unto obedience," etc., 1 Pet. i. 2, and adds, "Ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth through the Spirit," etc., verse 22. Jude characterizes certain wicked men as "sensual, having not the Spirit," and exhorts believers to build up themselves, "praying in the Holy Ghost:" Jude 19, 20. Paul saith, "Ye are not in the flesh," [that is, "sensual,"] "but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you:" Rom. viii. 9. Again he saith, "The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered." Rom. viii. 26.

The greatest of all christian graces is the work of the Spirit of God: "The love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us;" Rom. v. 5; and we "abound in hope through the power of the Holy Ghost:" Rom. xv. 13. "He saved us by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he shed on us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Saviour." Titus iii. 5.

It were easy to multiply testimony which goes to show that the Holy Spirit was designed to be the grand Agent to the believers in Christ, during his personal absence, in the work of preparing men, in connection with the word, for a change to immortality and the endowing them with endless life; and that without it they are but "sensual" and perishable creatures. These views, however, need not be counted adverse to Br. Day's view that the special and miracle working power of the Spirit, in the time of the apostles, was "a type of the kingdom yet to come;" for that may be true; and yet the Spirit, for the purposes indicated in the texts we have presented, be still in the church, and to have its full development at the resurrection; but it must dwell in us now, or that resurrection will never take place.

CHARITY.—If we believed to constitute a man a real christian, he must be perfect in knowledge and judgment, we should never hope to find a christian on earth, till the next age shall come. If men are sincerely inquiring after truth, and using the best light they have, and do fall into some error, they are no more blame-worthy than they would be for having a fever, or breaking their bones, or being destitute of daily food. We might just as well fall into a passion with our fellow-men for suffering with hunger, being sick, or breaking their bones, as to get out of humor with them for their errors in doctrine, if they manifest the spirit of Christ in their lives, and are using their best endeavors to inform themselves as to what is truth. To be sick, or to be in error, are both misfortunes, and both cause loss or pain to a greater or less extent. The subject of these calamities is to be pitied, not abused. We would think him a tiger that would fall upon a man with a broken bone and abuse him. Surely error is worse to the individual than broken bones: and we all have more or less; let us never forget that.

Assumptions Tested.

Our new-fledged "D. D." shows his qualification for his new title by his readiness in using assumptions. We notice two or three of them this week. He speaks as follows:

"Paul says, 'death cannot separate us from God,' therefore the soul lives on, or death does separate us from Him."

If our D.D. had told us where Paul says this, we would have felt obliged to him. It is however nowhere in the Bible, and must be a new revelation, if he is correct in the statement. We have no doubt he thought Paul said so, yet he should translate the English right, if we cannot do so with Hebrew and Greek, as he has affirmed not one of us could. The mistake here is in making a very important omission. Paul saith, Rom. viii. 35–39, that nothing "shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord." Let it be observed, it is the love of God, as manifested in Christ Jesus, that [illegible] anything else can separate [illegible] saint falls asleep in death [illegible] separated from the love of God [illegible] in its mother's arms, or [illegible]er, is separated from the [illegible]. Her love, if possible, is [illegible] stronger than before, while she watches for it to awake; especially if it was suffering much before it fell asleep, and she knew it was to awake free from all pain and sorrow. God's children are great sufferers here, especially those of whom the Apostle is speaking in this chapter—they were killed all the day long, etc., v. 36; but though killed God loves them still, and watches over them to awake them at the last trump, by the voice of his Son, in whose hands he has placed their lives; and because of their union with his Son he loves them though men may hate and kill them. That love secures their resurrection at the last day; from it they cannot be separated, not even in death. But what has this to do with the assumption from an imperfect quotation? Next he says:

"God is not the God of the dead but of the living, therefore Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob must be living, or God is not their God."

Here is another specimen of a want of attention to the text and its connection. What is the subject in dispute, of which these words are an imperfect extract? It is the subject of the Resurrection. It was not about the present state of the dead, though it involved the agreement of both parties that the dead were not now alive. We say it involved this agreement, because no question of their present state was raised, it was a question about the resurrection. The Sadducees denied the resurrection of the dead, and believed that death was an eternal cessation of conscious existence: that was what they called being dead. Hence their question is direct on this subject—"Whose wife of them (the seven husbands) is she in the resurrection?" Not Whose wife is she now? Mark's record reads the question thus, "In the resurrection therefore, when they rise, whose wife shall she be of them?" And Jesus' recorded answer, in Mark is, "When they shall rise from the dead;.... and as touching the dead that they rise"—not that they are now living—but, "that they rise, have ye not read in the book of Moses, how in the bush God spake unto him, saying, I am the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob?" Luke adds, "For he is not the God of the dead, but of the living, for all live unto him." Thus by a combination of the Evangelists, we arrive at this truth. The Sadducees did not question our Lord on the present state of the dead, because they manifestly had no dispute with him as to the fact that if there is a future life, at all, it depends on a resurrection. They understood him to teach a future life to dead men by a resurrection, and in that way only; while they maintained, when men die they remain eternally dead. It is in view of their belief, or disbelief, our Lord uses the term dead. If men were to be eternally dead, as the Sadducees maintained, then God could not be called their God, for he is not the God of men who are dead in that sense. The Sadducees acknowledged the authority of Moses, and Jesus appeals to that authority to prove them in error. To do this, he shows them, if there be no resurrection, then Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob would be dead in their sense; but that such is not the case, he tells them that God had declared himself to be their God; hence they must have a resurrection, and that such was the purpose of God concerning those Patriarchs; in his purpose they all—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—live unto him "who quickeneth the dead and calleth those things which be not as though they were," because of the certainty of their actually being. Compare Mark xii. 23–27, and Luke xx. 27–38, with Rom. iv. 17; then turn to Heb. xi. 13, where, speaking of Abraham and others, Paul saith, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises," etc., and at verses 39 and 40, having spoken of many ancient worthies, he saith, "These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promises: God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." The whole family of saints are to be brought into the inheritance at once, at the last trump, by the resurrection, and not by a survival in life when dead.

If our opponent's construction of the words under consideration is the true one he will find it difficult to show why the Sadducees were silenced. For if Jesus designed to show that the souls of those ancient Patriarchs were now living, by his appeal to Moses, his opponents might easily have replied, "How does that prove the resurrection, Master?" So far, in fact, would such an argument be from proving the resurrection—the very point in question—it would prove it wholly unnecessary, and hence highly improbable. The only way to avoid this would be to take the ground of Rev. John Howard Hinton, England, who attempts to make it appear that it is not the resurrection proper that is the disputed point, but a future life in general; but to his view Mark's account—which we have quoted—is fatal, viz.: "When they shall rise—when they shall rise from the dead"—not, when they die, or when they enter the future life merely; no, the great question of a future life, all turns on the fact whether men shall rise from the dead: without such rising there is no future life to any man. The text we have considered, so far from sustaining our opponents, is an engine that demolishes their own theory completely, and is a strong bulwark to defend the position we advocate, viz., "Life—future, eternal life—only through Christ, and that by the resurrection at the last day."

A Short Hell.

We copy the following from the Daily Times of this city, of June 2d. It is from a letter dated "ALABAMA, May 26th, 1855." We give it the above heading that the reader may feel the contrast with an extract following it, taken from a sermon of "orthodoxy."

"The papers will also convey to you a tale of horror which will make the ears of those who hear it tingle. It is in this wise: Some months ago a negro man violated a young woman in the county of Sumter, Ala., and to conceal his crime, murdered the victim of his lust and horribly mutilated her. He was imprisoned at the time, and though removed for a short time out of the county for trial at another court, has not been out of the hands of the officers of justice until last Thursday night. A party of men went to the prison, and under pretence of desiring to imprison another culprit whom they brought in irons with them, they gained admission to his cell. This was at 10 o'clock at night, and from that time until 10 the following morning they exercised their ingenuity in torturing him! They finished this refined amusement by burning him alive at the stake! The crime was great; but, good heaven, what shall we say of the punishment, or by what name call it! Torture a human creature twelve hours in all the hellish ways that devils incarnate know so well how to invent in this nineteenth century, and in a christian country! The Feejees are no longer savages. Sumter county, Ala., has achieved the proud position, the high honor of a deed without a parallel in the annals of brutality in any land. Lynch law may sometimes find a justification in the insecurity of the prisons of a new country, or the venality of the officers of justice, as in California in former times; but this ought never to be dignified even by the doubtful title of a case of lynch law. It was demoniac revenge, gloating for hours upon the agonies of its helpless victim. The perpetrators of this deed were not christians of course, but christian men do not denounce it in such language as it deserves."

Now read the following, which is an extract from a sermon "On the Future Misery of the Wicked," by Mr. Benson, an eminent minister of the Methodist connection in England. He was also a commentator. We head the article

The Long Hell.

Benson says:—"Infinite justice arrests their guilty souls, and confines them in the dark prison of hell, till they have satisfied all its demands by their personal sufferings, which, alas! they can never do."...."God is present in hell, in his infinite justice, and almighty wrath as an unquenchable sea of liquid fire, where the wicked must drink in everlasting torture—the presence of God in his vengeance scatters darkness and woe through the dreary regions of misery. As heaven would be no heaven if God did not there manifest his love, so hell would be no hell, if God did not there display his wrath. It is the presence and agency of God that gives everything virtue and efficiency, without which there can be no life, no sensibility, no power. God is, therefore, present in hell, to see to the punishment of these rebels against his government, that it may be adequate to the infinity of their guilt: his fiery indignation kindles, and his incensed fury feeds the flame of their torment, while his powerful presence and operation maintain their being, and render all their powers most acutely sensible; thus setting the keenest edge upon their pain, and making it cut most intolerably deep. He will exert all his divine attributes to make them as wretched as the capacity of their nature will admit." ...."Number the stars in the firmament, the drops of rain, sand on the seashore; and when thou hast finished the calculation, sit down and number up the ages of woe. Let every star, every drop, every gain of sand, represent one million of tormenting ages. And know that as many more millions still remain behind, and yet as many more behind these, and so on without end."

Such is the "Long Hell;" and reader, will you believe it, multitudes of people claiming to be christians, can look at this picture complacently and be as cool as if it were only fiction; while the short hell of the poor negro culprit, fills them with unutterable horror. "Twelve hours in all the hellish ways that devils incarnate know so well how to invent"! Horrible, O horrible! But endless torments, such as infinite wisdom and "almighty wrath" can "invent," inflicted on many sinners, with not the thousandth part of the guilt of the poor negro, these "christians of the nineteenth century" can advocate and attribute to their God with the utmost coolness, and call those "infidels" who dare to call in question their representations of the dealings of God with "the souls he has made." Let those persons contrast the two "hells" of the foregoing extracts, and ask themselves whether the torturers of the poor negro were not saints compared with their God. Shame on the "nineteenth century" that can allow the character of the God of the Bible to be reviled by such blasphemous representations as those of BENSON, and the self-styled "orthodoxy" of the day. Let "christian men denounce it in such terms as it deserves."—Bible Examiner of 1855.

The West.

The announcement in the paper of last week of Br. Hanford's willingness to enter for a time upon active duty in the "Western Mission," cannot, I think, be other than gratifying to all our friends, and to none more so than those with whom and among whom he will be called upon to labor. They who know him best feel that he is well fitted for the work and believe him equal to any contingency that may happen to arise. None who love the precious truths we advocate and earnestly desire their speedy triumph over terrible and wide-spread delusions will need reminding that his proposal to go west imposes upon us, his co-workers, the duty of doing what we can to lighten his labors by sending him forth light-hearted and joyous in the consciousness that his loved ones at home, who are sharers with him in the sacrifice, are cared for in his absence. Nor ought our friends in the West to forget in this connection that their interest in the matter should be considered a special one, for so much needed are the services of our brother here in the East, by reason of a scarcity of preaching brethren, that by his departure for the West this part of the field will incur a loss. May we all so faithfully discharge our duty in this and every other particular, that when "Jesus who is our life shall appear," we may be considered worthy to "appear with him in glory."

L. C. THORNE.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—We hope those who are able will help Br. Hanford in this outfit. We wish him to go armed with Pamphlets and Tracts, as well as to go in person. Will each one respond immediately how much they will do to further this mission? The following pledges are made in this vicinity for the object:

Wm. H. Thorne	$10
L. C. Thorne	$10
Geo. K. Carroll	$10

Stand up for Truth.

One of the strongest temptations in the world is a fear of reproach. What multitudes of people there are who know more truth than they tell; who even profess or acknowledge that they hold opinions which they believe to be false; who look shyly on persons whom they believe to be right; who do things which they do not like to do, things which they believe to be foolish or wrong; who leave undone things which they would like to do, things which they believe to be their duty, for fear they should be laughed at or reviled, deserted or looked coldly on. And even among those who brave opinion, who risk their reputation or their friends, who respect their consciences and fear God, how few there are who are not controlled in some degree by a regard to the thoughts of others; how few there are who go right on; who go as far in word as they go in judgment; who are as prompt in deed as they are in conscience; who regulate their creeds or their confessions by a regard to truth alone; who go as fast as a pure regard to God, to duty, and to the interests of mankind would oblige them to go. How few there are who are "dead to the world," and alive only to righteousness, and truth, and God. Men could not believe in Jesus because they received honor one of another, instead of contenting themselves with the honor that cometh from God. Some would not acknowledge him because none of the rulers or chief priests had believed on him. Even Peter the apostle shrunk from his principles in the presence of respectable or influential Jews who differed from him. This was the sin of the Gentile philosophers: they knew much truth, but held it back from the multitude for fear of reproach or persecution. This is the crime of preachers, theologians, and philosophers of the present day: they see farther than they dare go. They know more than they dare tell; they believe more than they dare acknowledge; they hold to notions which they are compelled to doubt; they conform to things which they believe in truth to be of no authority, to have no use; and all through the fear of reproach, through regard to the feelings, the opinions of others. They are ruled, more or less, by the fear of man, by the fear of losing friends, or of sinking in their friends' esteem. They are ruled by a regard to the honor that cometh from men, and not by the honor that cometh from God.

I say this is one of the strongest temptations in the world. I question whether it is not the strongest of all. I am astonished at its power; and I am astonished at the multitudes that are manifestly influenced by it. A man says to me, "You are right, go on: there are thousands of your opinion, if they dare show it. I am of your way of thinking myself; but the world is not prepared to do justice to such opinions yet." I grant that some are afraid of losing their bread as well as the good opinion of their neighbors and friends, and that they would brave men's opinion if they were sure of a living: but the majority are ruled by a regard to opinion, and not a living. I find men everywhere that have a living; whom property or trades have placed above the reach of bigotry and intolerance, who yet are afraid to let their minds come out; who yet are afraid to let their opinions be known. They look on the forms and opin ions of orthodoxy as superstitious and false; yet they attend to those forms and act as if they held those opinions, because their neighbors or acquaintances attend to them and appear to believe them. They are afraid of reproach, or of sinking in the esteem of their friends. And sometimes it happens, that two persons, both doubters of the truth of orthodox errors are yet both afraid to declare their most rational doubts, lest they should lose each other's friendship and esteem. The world is almost full of such cases. Men are afraid to tell their views even to the very persons who hold the same views secretly. Men's minds are one thing, and their lives another. They deceive, and are deceived. The fear of man makes hypocrites of them. What shall we do in such cases? We must teach them that the favor of God is life; better than life; that no one loses friends or reputation for Christ's sake, who does not receive better friends, and higher reputation in return; that to do wrong is the only loss, and to do right the only gain; and that there is neither wisdom nor safety, nor glory nor joy, but in being faithful to truth, to conscience, and to God.

We must resolve to be honest and upright ourselves. We must risk all, and if need be, die martyrs for the truth. We must speak right out on every subject, and rather perish at once than play the hypocrite. That expediency which is inconsistent with the most perfect integrity must be cast from us as an accursed or envenomed garment. We must let our minds come out and show themselves without distortion both in what we say and in what we do. We must let the worldlings know that we will not regard their unreasonable or uncalled for reproaches. We must let it be seen and understood, that we are content with the consciousness of doing right, and that we feel ourselves secure in the approbation of God. In short we must be dead to the world, and alive unto God alone.

We must respect and honor those who do act uprightly. We must not only not persecute them, but treat them with the utmost kindness. We must encourage people to begin to speak and act uprightly, by taking care not to blame people for thinking differently from us. HOMO.

The New Philosophy of Forces.

SPIRITUALLY CONSIDERED: BY E. V. C. B.

The correlation of natural forces indicate that all created objects, including the earth, and the race of man, may be ultimately resolved into their original elements and reproduced in other forms, in the course of future ages. Regarding only the ordinary course of natural law, this conclusion seems inevitable, and it is no objection to the new philosophy that such results are predicted of its ascertained facts; since Revelation alone can assure us that the Author and controller of all force, will render the earth a permanent abode for that portion of the race, which, complying with given conditions, shall secure a new life, and thus be able to draw from the spheres of nature and spirit inexhaustible supplies for its blissful continuance.

The will of the Omnipotent is not limited by the assertions of science, for science is the sum of human knowledge, and is of necessity incomplete, since man, in his present state at least, cannot fully comprehend the system of which he forms a part. In some instances, the seeming demonstrations of science may lack an element of truth which will materially affect the result: its votaries therefore, should be very modest in their assumptions, for He who sitteth on the circle of the heavens will have them in derision, whether from boldness or misconception they deny his words, and will work calmly on, as before the morning stars sang together, fulfilling His purposes regarding the race, which he has led through nearly a week of millenniums, toward a destiny which will prove him as infinite in benevolence, as he is unfailing in resources. He will show that sorrow and wrong are but for a season; that the waves of evil shall be stayed, and the good unfolded, in endless diversity, for the joy, peace and satisfaction of those spiritual natures who attain the second birth at the resurrection—that consummation for which "the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now."

Science is pushing on the car of progress with wonderful rapidity in these latter days; but it has no telescope to penetrate the realm of spiritual laws, the wonders and beauties of which the simple eye of faith discerns. "Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither hath it entered into the heart of man the things which He hath prepared for those that love him; but God hath revealed them unto us by his Spirit." Begotten and taught of that Spirit, the weakest member of the race has access by the key of prayer to the storehouse of Divinity, and thus appropriates what his necessities require, and ultimately secures the pearl of immortality which shall increase in lustre and value as the circling ages roll along.

In conclusion, What is the sum of the matter? It is this: the study of nature and science is exhilarating and delightful; but the study of Revelation and the search for immortality is of vastly greater importance.

Who would not exchange the tinsel of wealth, and even the treasures of worldly wisdom and scientific attainments for the pearl of great price?

It is a matter of astonishment to me that those who in any degree appreciate the gift of life; those who are ready to make every exertion to prolong their days in the present state; those who rejoice in health, strength, and this world's treasures of beauty and taste; should be so insensible and neglectful of the free gift of an endless life; a life without the alloy of pain and want; a life where transcendent beauty, riches, and grace, shall yield perennial enjoyment. And yet, the reason is apparent. It is the straitness of the paths which deters them; the lions of self-denial which are in the way. It is so much easier to glide down the current of popular favor, than to stem the tide, "the wave at the lip," and girded with stern resolves. It is so much more congenial to gratify the fleshly nature than to crucify its affections and desires!

Ah, worldling! that alone is true freedom which is born of restraint; and I cannot see you flitting away your summer's day of existence without calling after and reminding you how the Saviour yearns over you, as he did over his beloved Jerusalem when he saw its approaching desolation. He would fain gather you under his wings, to shelter you from approaching judgments. Turn, then, with earnest purpose away from the alluring fields of indulgence, and seek the narrow path which leads to life, and leave to others the lament of the "harvest past, and the summer ended!" Do ye turn a deaf ear to my warning? Glide onward, then, in the easy grooves of fashion, prejudice and inclination, to the pit of oblivion which surely yawns to receive you; but nevermore boast of prudence and foresight, for that is madness which exceeds the folly of a lunatic—the choice of the "pleasures of sin for a season," instead of immortality and its inseparable beatitudes.

Riceville, Iowa, June 5, 1867.

Interview with a Pastor.

BR. STORRS:—I called once on a pastor who was at the time holding inquiry meetings for the purpose of preparing sinners for church membership. He received me very kindly, and asked if I had come to inquire about my soul. I said, no; that I had thought of that long ago; but that I desired to ask him a question, and hoped I might have the privilege of doing so. He said, Certainly, he would try and answer any inquiry I felt disposed to make. So I asked, Can a person who believes that there is no immortality, no future, nor endless life, except in Jesus Christ only, be a member of the church, and entitled to fellowship therein? Ah, said the pastor, your question involves a denial of the immortality of the soul. I know it does, I said. He replied, We are committed to the belief of the immortality of the soul; and it would be inconsistent for us to admit one who denies it. I remarked, If the immortality of the soul is not a bible doctrine, but only a mere philosophical speculation, why make it a test of christian fellowship? We believe, said he, that it is a bible doctrine. Then he asked, How do you prove that all men are mortal, and that there is no immortality except in Christ only? Oh, I said, very easy.

First, Thus saith the LORD, "Dust thou art;" that's your nature, Adam; and, "unto dust shalt thou return;" that's your destiny. And second, "He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son shall not see life." How do you like the proof, Sir? The pastor said, Oh, you must not take God's word as it reads. I replied, Is it possible that you would thus teach? Why, do you not know that that is just what the serpent said in the Garden of Eden?

You seem to be very smart, he said; I will ask you just one question. Are you positively certain that your views are right? My answer was, an unqualified, Yes. Well now, said the pastor, whenever I meet with a man who is positive that his views are right, I set him down a hopeless case. Indeed, Sir, when you can't meet me on Scriptural grounds then you begin to ridicule; but it won't prosper, and I will soon let you see that it's a poor rule that won't work both ways. Allow me to ask you, Are you positively certain that your views are right? No reply. The pastor is silent. You, Sir, dare not answer your own question. If you say you are positive that your views are right, then by your own showing you are a hopeless case; and if you are not positive, then you don't know whether you are right or wrong. Why then do you occupy the door of the church, like the dog in the manger, and deny those fellowship for whom Christ died?

Just here the conversation ended. The foregoing is no fiction. It is a positive reality.

J. W. S.

Prayer.

How few, among the multitude of praying ones, really consider what prayer is. To bow down and raise the eye and voice to God, is regarded as prayer, irrespective of the condition of the heart, but how mistaken are all such dreamers. Prayer is the language of want, either unuttered or expressed in words, with a feeling of subdued dependence on that God to whom we pray. True heartfelt prayer cannot be offered, when there is not heartfelt want, for want indicates the necessity of prayer. Again, true prayer is offered to God in faith; hence those who truly pray never utter vain repetition—never repeat the same thing after they believe, unless the want again occurs, consequently, they who believe most pray much less than those who never believe only what they can feel.

The Difference.

Mrs. G—— was one day visiting an aged man, a friend of her father, and one who was associated with him in early life. Though differing widely in sentiment, the two old men still felt a deep interest in each other. Mr. S—— had been one of those who run after the world and overtake it. All that it can give he had obtained. Now, he inquired of the state of his friend, whom he knew to be in circumstances of far less external comfort than himself. As he listened to the story of his patience in suffering, and of the cheerfulness with which he could look forward, either to a longer pilgrimage in this world, or to the hour of death, his conscience applied the unexpressed reproach, and he exclaimed: "Yes, yes, you wonder I cannot be as quiet and happy too; but think of the difference; he is going to his treasure, and I—I must leave mine."—Tract Journal.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

ILLINOIS, June 10, 1867.

Sixty-eight years ago I was "born of a woman;" and Job spoke the truth when he said, his days are few and full of trouble. But if man continues to exist, either in heaven or hell, as theologians tell us, Job was mistaken; for his days are unending, in a state of bliss or torment. Which shall we believe? Is the old serpent, that told the first lie, saying, "Ye shall not surely die," or the LORD God, who said, "Ye shall surely die," to be believed? Let God be true, though every man is proved a liar. In 1799, I first had existence, being born of a woman, with nothing but an animal life, capable of developing a character in harmony with the plan of God, in order that I might be regenerated and born again of God; which will be a new creation, inasmuch as Christ was the beginning of the new creation of God, by being the first born from the dead. It follows, as a matter of fact, that if the wicked are resurrected to life they must be born again, as there are but two births brought to view in the bible; the first of water, the second of the Spirit: or, in other words, the first an animal life, the second a spiritual life.

Hence it is certain, that man, born of woman, is of few days, and those end at the cessation of the animal life; which life is then forever gone: his days are ended. The wicked died out of Christ; so that none but the righteous will be born again by a resurrection from the dead, being like the first fruits of the harvest, which is Christ.

In order then to be born again from the dead, there must be a germinating principle implanted in us; which Paul tells us, is the seal of the Holy Spirit; or, in other words, the spirit of adoption, without which none need ever hope to live again from the dead.

Let us then sum up on this wise: A man must first be born by natural generation. Second: He must die, or be changed. Third: He must be born again by regeneration in order to see the kingdom of God. In view of all these things, then, my dear brethren and sisters, readers of the dear HERALD OF LIFE, and all who may chance to read these lines, we exhort you to examine yourselves, lest you be deceived with the notion of being baptized into the Christ by water. May the Lord help us to look beyond water to the fountain that flows from the Father and the Son, without which all the water in the ocean will do no good. We feel truly thankful to our heavenly Father in view of all his past mercies: for, in taking a retrospective view of the past, we confess that our cup has been mingled with many a bitter drug, and we even pray that some part of our past life may not be numbered with the rest of our days; and may the Lord help us on this our birth-day to solemnly and devoutly re-consecrate ourself to Him, resolving to spend and be spent in the cause of truth, and for the life of poor dying men; feeling well assured that what is done must be done quickly, from the fact that we are living under the last vial of the wrath of God; in the which great Babylon came in remembrance before God to give unto her the fierceness of his wrath, synchronizing with the seventh trumpet, in which the nations were to be angry. They are now; and his wrath is come. The wine cup of Jer. xxv. has been poured out upon all nations, beginning at Jerusalem. But it seems that God has, or is about to take the cup out of the hands of the down trodden Jews and put it into the hands of those that have oppressed her. Glory to God, the harlot church is soon to go into perdition, together with all her daughters. Let us therefore be sober and watch unto prayer, and exhort one another daily, and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

From Dr. John Billings.

NEW RUTLAND, Ills, June 12, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Inclosed is two dollars for two copies of the HERALD OF LIFE for six months. I hope to get more soon. Some have promised, and as soon as the money is paid I will send. I expect as the fruit of our labor in this place to have a goodly number to send yet. The so-called Advent denomination in the West has learned that God's word is taking root in what they call their borders, and the man that dares to preach the truth in relation to the resurrection and church organization, as taught by Christ, has to feel the rod of proscription.

God pity the people in the West, and save them from the power of corporate institutions. I never prized the HERALD as I have since I came West; and I shall do all I can to sustain it. I hope that others, like myself, that have not done what they could, will, with me, try and redeem the time, knowing the time is short, and the people (if not the days) are evil. I will just say to Br. Lewis, if he will come to this place I will find a chance for him to preach; and then, if it seems to be the will of the Lord, I can help him start his tent. Br. W. S. Campbell is some acquainted with me. If he thinks West, he can write to Br. Lewis on this subject. Likewise to me. Address Dr. John Billings, New Rutland, La Salle Co., Ill. Yours in hope.

From S. S. Call.

NEWPORT CENTRE, VT., June 9, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—We have been fed from the word to-day by a brother from Canada; and it was not mixed with tradition, but was taken from the fountain of truth. His subject was the tenth chapter of Rev., in connection with prophecy, and was ably handled.

I thought, while the brother was speaking, of the contrast between his Bible arguments and sensation sermons, with all the stamping, gestures, and force of tradition combined, that he would fall short of coming up to the standard of modern theology. So it proved; for when liberty was given for remarks either for or against what had been said, the congregation, or the professed believers in the word, were dumb; but after they left the house their tongues were loosened, and I heard the expressions, "That's rather dry; that's pretty tough;" etc; yet none could say he did not give them a thus saith the Lord; and I could compare it to nothing so much as to spreading a table with all the necessary and substantial food for the laborer, and milk and lighter food for the children, and then waiting upon his guests freely, and afterward inviting them to help themselves to such as they wished, and yet they find fault with his supper. O that the guests were worthy and would partake of the rich provision that is prepared for them, lest the Master swear in his wrath, they shall not taste my supper. Yours, striving for the truth.

DANIEL PARSONS, Harlem, N. Y., writes:—I find by examining the Bible that Christ came to bring life to light by the gospel. He says: I am the life of the world. The Jews would not receive that life either from him or his apostles; therefore the light to them went out for eighteen hundred years. But I bless God that he opened my eyes thirty years ago to behold the light of life; but not clearly until He sent Geo. Storrs, in this last age of the world, to call the attention of men to what is written in the word of God on the life theme. Christ says, "I am the resurrection and the life." Therefore, we see, out of Christ there is no resurrection or life.

JAS. W. PURDY, Sonora, Cal., sends $7, and writes:—I am once more privileged to be the instrument of sending another mite to the "HERALD OF LIFE Establishment" for books, tracts, and papers to circulate among the candid of this far off, but goodly land. The numbers are not great, here, who are willing to investigate Bible truth independent of denominational views; and I esteem it a privilege of no low degree in being the instrument in placing in the hands of such a little volume, even, which reflects the Gospel light untrammeled. May the great LIFE-GIVER bless you with health, strength, and long life shall continue to be my prayer.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

Trouble seems likely to break out afresh between President Johnson and what is termed the Radical party. The occasion is the working of the Military Reconstruction Bill of Congress. The President opposed its passage, using all his great public patronage to that end, but without avail; then, when passed, he vetoed it; this did not help the matter as it received the necessary vote in Congress to become a law. It is said generally, that the President would have been impeached long ago, had he not agreed to carry out the law when enacted. Now he finds occasion of interference in its operation, in the conduct of the military commanders in whose hands the power of re-establishing the political and civil affairs of the South rests. They have superseded some of the governors and other officers inimical to their authorized ruling, in the State governments authorized by the President. This he claims as beyond the line of their delegated power, although in his veto messages it was the very occasion on which he based his opposition to the Bill. Before it adjourned, Congress anticipated some such manœuvre of the President, and provided for an extra session of Congress in July. This has now been called by the proper officers, to meet on the first of next month, so that the extent of the breach will soon be learned, and what action it will lead to. In the meantime the whole country must be injured by the renewed agitation of a question that was being rapidly settled in a manner most satisfactory to all sections.

Murders and other high crimes are fearfully increasing, not in the wilds of Texas and Arkansas, as of yore, but in the centres of our civilized and educated communities, east, west and north.

The accounts continue highly favorable for all kinds of crops. The cotton crop will be very large this year among the rest.

Surratt, who was brought hither from Asia, as an accessory in the assassination of Lincoln, is having his trial at Washington. One of the witnesses testifies that he was one of the authors of the mysterious cries in the theatre announcing the hours of the evening just preceding the murder, and which have always been regarded as in some way connected with that dark deed.

FOREIGN.

The present gathering of sovereigns at Paris is the most notable in history. They comprise all the rulers of Europe, beside a large portion of those of both Asia and Africa. America is unrepresented by any crowned sovereign, but there are notwithstanding a large number of the sovereign people, who have no occasion to plot to preserve their own nationality, nor desire to plot to destroy that of their neighbors—work, we fear, that has bothered the crowned despots that met to hob nob with Napoleon. The world has outgrown both despotisms and aristocracy; there is therefore a double danger impending in every such government. The ruler has to raise great standing armies to keep down the people to preserve the power and wealth in the hands of the few. Having raised the armies they are difficult to keep merely as a show, and as they menace each other, they become refractory at times, and an outlet is easily found to war to divert and thwart home danger. The military potentates realize their dilemma, but do not as clearly perceive their way of deliverance. Occasionally we hear of disarming, to be followed by a reign of peace and good fellowship; such has been the delusive topic since the royal gathering in France. But what will it amount it? Look at England, the most liberal, the best governed, the most prosperous and every way the most contented people in the world, out of America. Just in proportion to the liberty they have, they are exerting themselves to overthrow their aristocratic system; and notwithstanding the menace of 40,000 soldiers in their midst, a revolution may be looked for at any time—when kingcraft and nobility, and every other form of caste will be swept away forever. Then think of France boiling and raging, and chafing under the crushing despotism of Napoleon with his 500,000 soldiers. So of Spain, Austria, and other powers in Europe, while in Asia it is ten times worse, anarchy there, as in South America, seeming to be chronic. Peace, therefore is a chimera under such conditions. Changes will go on; as these aim to break down the privileges of great rotten institutions, revolutions, wars, and destruction, will continue until these changes are effected. Where they will break out or by what given cause or circumstance would be merely speculative to state. It is a battle —social and political—all the time: it will often require military aid to assist in each. We see no end to this state of things; we have no hope in any, until that event recorded in Daniel takes place, and the kingdom under the whole heaven be given to the saints.

Omar Pasha, the Turkish Commander-in-Chief in Candia, has sustained a signal defeat at the hands of the Christian insurgent army, and that his second in command, Mehemed Pasha, had been almost simultaneously driven from an important position, and the communication between the two generals interrupted so that a junction of their forces was rendered almost impossible. Smarting under his defeat Omar Pasha, with the true instinct of an enraged Turk, and quite in accordance with his personal and professional character, burned all the villages in the neighborhood of the scene of his reverses and murdered the inhabitants. The foreign consuls serving in Crete immediately notified their respective governments of these "atrocious proceedings;" so that it is almost certain that the Eastern question will be brought to an immediate arbitrament for issue, either by diplomacy or war. When the Sultan reaches Paris, so soon after the visit of the Czar Alexander, the exact status of the Christian populations in the East will be defined, and Turkey must either become tolerant or retire from Europe.

Maximilian and his principal officers are to be banished from Mexico; the republican government considering this not only as a just concession to the wishes of the United States, but also a dignified proceeding in behalf of their own country. It may be considered as settled that Maximilian will not lose his life at the hands of the outraged Mexicans for his filibustering exploits among them.

MEETINGS IN BROOKLYN, N. Y.—Preaching every Sunday evening in Sawyer's Hall, corner of Fulton Avenue and Jay St., at 7 1-2 o'clock Entrance on Jay street, at the sign of "SAWYER'S PIANO FORTE ROOMS." The main subject is, The Scripture doctrine of a future Life, connected, as it is, with the Coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Advertisements.

Meadville Theological School.

THE NEXT TERM begins September 2d, 1867. The Faculty of instruction consists of four resident and four non-resident Professors, and a Tutor. The object is to educate young men for the Christian Ministry. Beneficiary aid is given to indigent students. The tuition, use of library, and text books are free to all. The school was founded by the Unitarian and Christian denominations, but is open to all who believe in the divine origin of Christianity. The library consists of nine thousand five hundred volumes. Application may be made to Rev. A. A. Livermore, President of the Board of Instruction, Meadville, Pa.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE, LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS, GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW,
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
OFFICE HOURS, { From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 CHAMBERS ST.,
NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(Room 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they ros in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy" —more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY; by GEO. STORRS Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. H. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100, but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each: MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny," being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover, to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are here by revoked.

Poetry.

THE "MORTAL RESURRECTION."

A DREAM.

I dreamed I died and rose again,
With all my aches and ills and pain.
And looking round I saw the lame,
The deaf, the blind, the halt and maim.
The saint, the sinner, fool and wise:
I heard their groans, their shrieks and cries;
For some were minus head or limb,
Some sleek and fat, and some were thin.
Among the rest the baptist John
A body had but no head on:
This in his hand he brought along,
As he passed through the mortal throng.
But as I stood in sad surprise,
An object new soon met my eyes:
One shaped and winged like one from heaven,
To whom the special gift is given,
To teach the myst'ries from above,
And sing a Saviour's dying love.
He seemed an angel clothed in light,
With smiling mien, celestial quite.
And drawing near to him I said,
Tell me, kind angel, of the dead,
How raised, and with what bodies come?
They seem diseased; all, every one.
"Yes; that's the way, indeed" said he,
"Then seek for immortality."
But seek it first I thought we should,
And none were raised except the good.
To which my angel thus replied,
"Know, all are raised who ever died,
The saints are saved, the wicked slain
Are raised to life and die again."
Ah! then said I, in saddest plight,
I must have lost my senses quite:
And wond'ring still, amazed I stood,
Doubting if God all wise is good.
Then one I saw unlike the rest,
In all respects more highly blest,
Who rose immortal from the clay,
And seemed an angel every way.
With falt'ring voice to him I said,
Are these the resurrected dead?
"Oh no;" said he, "I told you better,
In Number One, my Corinth letter."
Your Corinth letter! Who are you?
I've read those letters, there are two.
"My name is Paul," he meekly said,
"And on the block I lost my head;
But when I rose I found it on,
And all my pains and ills were gone."
Why then, I pray, what means all this,
Has my good angel spoke amiss?
"Alas;" said he, "if I guess right,
Your angel's but a Crisisite."
Then in a laughing fit I 'woke
From such a queer and dreamy joke,
And gave to God a higher praise:
IMMORTALS ONLY WILL HE RAISE.

Z. CAMPBELL.

Children's Department.

JOHN QUINCY ADAMS' LOVE FOR HIS MOTHER.

The mother of John Quincy Adams said in a letter to him, written when he was only twelve years old:

"I would rather see you laid in your grave than grow up a profane and graceless boy."

Not long before the death of Mr. Adams, a gentleman said to him:

"I have found out who made you."

"What do you mean?" asked Mr. Adams.

The gentleman replied:

"I have been reading the published letters of your mother."

"If," this gentleman relates, "I had spoken that dear name to some little boy who had been for weeks away from his mother, his eyes could not have flashed more brightly, nor his face glowed more quickly, than did the eyes and face of that venerable old man when I pronounced the name of his mother. He stood up in his peculiar manner and said:

"'Yes, sir, all that is good in me I owe to my mother.'"

Is not this incident very touching and beautiful?—Children's Hour.

ELIZABETH'S NAME.

When I was a little girl, I did not like my name—Elizabeth! It seemed so cold and dignified, so unsuited to a child; while the pet name "Libbie," which my brothers called me, I thought very homely—not at all so sweet and loving as the names of my playmates.

Not one of the little girls whom I knew had so old-fashioned a name as mine. There were Clara, Helen, Julia, Grace, Agnes, Edith, Florence, Isabel and Rosabelle. The last name I thought the prettiest of them all, perhaps because it belonged to a darling little girl.

One day she said to me, "Do you know why I like my own name better than any of the others?"

"No," I replied; why do you?"

"Because it has such a sweet meaning. Belle means beautiful; Rosabelle, beautiful Rose."

Then the little girl blushed and smiled and held down her head, while I kissed her red cheek.

"You ought to have a name with a pretty meaning," I said. "I wonder if mine means something as plain and dull as I am?"

"Why don't you look in the Bible?" she said; "your name is there."

When I returned home, I did look, and found—Elizabeth. It meant: "the oath of God." I thought: How dreadful it was!

When my father came home that night, I took the Bible to him, and told him all my difficulty.

"The oath of God," he exclaimed, "must mean perfect truth." Since God himself is the truth, everything he says is truth; his oath must be perfect truth!"

I was comforted. What a beautiful meaning for a name! I would not exchange Elizabeth for the most romantic name in the world. I only feared that I had no right to it—perfect truth.

"But I will earn a right!" thought I. "If my name means anything beautiful, that I could not be; but I can be true, and I will! With God's help, I will be true from this hour!"

I was then ten years old. I began in earnest. I watched myself, and morning and evening, and often through the day, when tempted, I prayed that God would help me to be truthful. I did not once speak about it to any one; but when I was sixteen, I was amply repaid by hearing my mother say to a highly esteemed friend, that "Elizabeth was the only one of her children who had never told a lie."

You may imagine, dear children, how happy I was. I had earned my beautiful name—Perfect Truth.—Selected.

CHRIST'S TEMPTATION.

EXPLANATION TO POLLY G. PITTS, BY SAMUEL MASON.

DEAR SISTER IN CHRIST:—I will now call your attention to Math. iv. 1-11. These verses contain, it is supposed, conclusive evidence of the personality of the devil, and his identity independent of man. This will be admitted, if we cannot reconcile Christ's temptation with the spirit of our lusts that war in our members. The apostle Paul says, Heb. iv. 15, "For we have not an high priest which cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." The feeling of our infirmies is the spirit of our infirmities; and the spirit of our infirmities is what tempts us. Heb. ii. 18. "For in that he himself hath suffered, being tempted, he is able to succor them that are tempted." Christ, then, had our infirmities, and suffered, being tempted in all points as we are. But how are we tempted? Is it by a personal devil—a fallen angel? Hear the apostle James: "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed." "Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin: and sin when it is finished bringeth forth death."

If Christ had not our nature, and the natural propensities of our flesh and mind, he could not have suffered from temptation as we do. Angels have not our nature, or infirmities, and consequently they cannot sin and fall from their holy and exalted state. Therefore Christ took upon him not the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham—our nature—and became subject to our infirmities, temptations and death. Though Christ had the lusts or propensities of our nature in him, and thereby was tempted, yet it did not conceive in him; he resisted the devil, or this spirit of lust, and it brought forth no sin. James says, every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust, and enticed. Now, is he tempted in this manner and a personal devil besides? If so, why does he lay down this law of temptation, and not mention the fact of a personal devil? But if we will notice the operations of our own minds, and the manner in which He was tempted, we shall find the law James has given to be correct; and in no one instance have we been tempted from any other source, or in any other way.

There are instances of men meeting with angels, and being instructed, influenced, and guided by them; but where is the instance of the appearance of a personal devil, instructing and guiding a person? If this was a personal devil that met our Saviour and tempted him, then he was not tempted as we are, unless it can be shown that we meet a personal devil in our temptations; neither was Christ tempted as James declares men are tempted. To say, therefore, that Christ was met and tempted of a personal devil, is to contradict the law of temptation laid down by the apostle, and to say that Christ was not tempted as we are.

We will now see if the temptation of our Saviour cannot be harmonized with the law of James, viz., drawn away of his own lusts, and enticed." First: He fasted forty days and nights. What would it be natural for him to lust after? Plainly, something to satisfy hunger. The demand of appetite, and his desire for something to eat presented this first temptation—command these stones to be made bread. Work a miracle for the gratification of your own appetite. This was not right, and in accordance with the will of God. Hence this scripture was brought to rebut the temptation and silence this propensity, "It is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." "Then the devil took him into the holy city, and set him upon the tower of the temple." Now, was this a literal act? Was there a personal devil that took him up bodily and really to the city and pinnacle of the temple? Who saw him? for if it was real it must be visible, and multitudes would have seen him; and it would have been a most remarkable circumstance, such as never occurred before or since.

If we carry out the theory of a literal, personal devil, we must believe that Christ thus literally suffered himself to be carried about by the devil; and consequently was handled and tempted in a manner no other man ever was. But Christ could have had these thoughts and promptings in his own breast, from his own lusts or natural infirmities, and not have changed his locality in the wilderness; and we shall find it more rational, and in accordance with the fact, to so consider it. If it was suggested to Christ's mind to do this, it was a temptation; and as much so as though he had been literally carried to the top of the tower of the temple. If we should write or relate our temptations, we should speak of being carried to some high eminence in a plain and certain course, and there induced to commit some rash act, or presumptuous sin, as Christ was tempted to commit, and he resisted it by another quotation from scripture. It was suggested that he could jump off from this high steep, because it was written, "He shall give his angels charge concerning thee, and they shall bear thee up," and keep thee from being dashed to pieces.

Men are alike tempted to commit presumptuous sins; and they should always remember that such a temptation places them upon the verge of a dangerous precipice, where, if they yield, they will be morally dashed to pieces.

The devil next takes Christ up into an exceeding high mountain, where he could view the splendor of earthly kingdoms, with the following promise from the devil, that if he will fall down and worship him, i. e., be obedient to the ambition and lusts of his fleshly desires, all these should be his to enjoy. Our Saviour at once rebuked the tempter, and bade him begone, saying, It is written, thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. And the devil left him, and angels came and ministered to him. The devil left him upon the top of this mountain; and if it was a literal event, he must have been at a distance from the place where the devil first communicated with him. But from Matthew, Mark, and Luke, it appears that the whole affair of his temptation took place in the wilderness, and that he was not moved from the locality. There is not the slightest evidence or rationality in all this account of a personal devil. He was attacked and tempted by the devil in the same way that we are, and by as literal a devil, and no more so. Yet he sinned not, because lust did not conceive. He did not suffer the temptation to mature in his mind, and ripen into a conception and determination to commit the acts. He was tempted in all points like as we are.

These three temptations embrace the whole body of temptations to which we are subject; and they are given us as a sample that we must resist temptation by a direct appeal and adherence to the scriptures. The first temptation covers the ground of our appetites, and shows how strong they are, and how we are tempted to go to the utmost extent of our power, even to work miracles, if possible, to gratify them. The second represents the whole class of our presumptuous sins that we are at times tempted to commit. The third embraces the world of our ambition, and love of popularity, influence, wealth and power.

By this example and temptation of Christ, we are taught how to resist evil, or the devil, and overcome this power of our lust by a direct appeal to the Bible. When Adam and Eve were tempted to eat of the forbidden fruit, they should have met the suggestion with a "Thus saith the LORD," and maintained a firmness in obeying the commands of the Lord, and no evil or devil would have entered our world. And if we would recover ourselves from the condemnation of sin, and the snares of the devil, we must resist temptation, and adhere strictly to the voice of God. We must yield ourselves servants to obey him; and not our own lusts, or we shall be of our father the devil, and not the children of God.

Then let us by a patient continuance in well doing seek for glory, honor, immortality, eternal life, through Jesus Christ. Your brother in Christ.

New Brighton, Penn, May 28, 1867.

ETERNAL TORMENTS, ANNIHILATION.

The following is a letter written in the last century, by Rev. SAMUEL BOURN, of England, on the above subject, addressed to a clergyman. It will explain itself.

NORWICH, Sept. 24, 1759.

Reverend Sir:—Having heard you publicly assert some time ago, "That the Doctrine of Annihilation, or that the souls of wicked men shall be totally destroyed in the future state," is utterly inconsistent with the christian scheme; and as you did not at that time produce any argument of reason, or authority of Scripture, to prove what you have asserted, it raised in me a curiosity to know by what proof you are able to support your assertion; in hope of receiving such satisfaction, as may be expected from a gentleman of your known abilities, and study of the christian Revelation.

I am more ready to gratify my own curiosity in making you this public request, as I am persuaded that there is nothing more conducive to the discovery of truth than if those who have studied the same subject, yet are of contrary opinions, enter into a mutual disquisition of each other's arguments, and with an amicable spirit of free inquiry, examine the strength of what may be alleged on both sides.

That I am of an opinion directly opposite to yours, you need not be informed: nor do I see the least reason to avoid either a public declaration, or defence of my opinion. For, so long as I remain fully convinced, as I am at present, that that doctrine which you asserted more than once, to be absolutely inconsistent with the christian scheme, is the very doctrine of christianity, it will not affect me in the least, whether the opinion which I maintain be thought old or new, common or singular, popular, or unpopular.

That men who apply their minds to the study of religion and the holy scriptures, should be of different and even contrary opinions, is certainly no new thing in the christian world. But that such should conspire, by a joint examination and friendly controversy, to investigate truth for themselves and others, in a subject concerning which they totally differ, is (I am sorry to say) something new and uncommon. But as the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews exhorts them to provoke one another (as our translators have rendered it) to love and good works; so, I do not doubt, but you, as well as every other reader of this pamphlet, will approve my conduct, in inviting and urging you in this public manner, to a friendly discussion of so important a subject as this before us.

The importance of it will, I apprehend, be readily allowed; especially by those who have a real concern for the credit of the christian religion: at least, it appears of so much consequence to me, that if it should be proved, that the final punishment threatened to wicked men in the New Testament, is not a total destruction, but an endless preservation in a state of misery and torment, this would, in my opinion, fix a greater odium upon christianity, and raise a stronger objection to it, than all its adversaries have yet been able to produce; and I will venture to assert, that there are many persons in this nation, of no inconsiderable understanding, who would be strongly disposed to reject the New Testament as a divine revelation, if they were convinced that it contains such a doctrine.

For, that any doctrine should be true, and have the real stamp of divine authority, which ascribes to the Supreme Governor of the universe, a conduct unworthy of any prince or governor on earth, and repugnant to our best conceptions of the measures and ends of good government, cannot easily be admitted by persons of thoughtful and ingenious mind. To overcome the antipathy of a good heart, and the remonstrance of a reasoning mind against it, will require an immense weight of external evidence.

A limitation of punishments is essential to all good government: to extend them beyond the limits of reason or of law, which is the public reason, is one characteristic of tyranny. Where punishments are extended or increased, so far as the public safety and welfare require, and no further; i. e., where they are always limited and directed by a view to the happiness of the whole, there is good government: but where they are increased, either in degree or duration, beyond what is requisite to that end, there is tyranny: where they are unlimited or infinite, there is the greatest tyranny: for to punish a criminal in an excessive degree, and beyond what the ends of good government require, is as real injustice and cruelty, as to inflict a lesser degree of punishment upon an innocent person. For in both cases, it is equally inflicting misery, not to answer any necessary or useful end, but for the mere sake of increasing misery; which is the worst end that can be conceived.

There neither is, nor can be, any other difference, between the best and worst government possible; than that the former is administered with a view to produce and maintain the greatest virtue and happiness, or to prevent, or extinguish, as much as possible, wickedness and misery; and the latter with a view to prolong and increase wickedness and misery. Now, whether the endless preservation of wicked spirits, in order to inflict upon them infinite miseries, be more consistent with the former, or the latter kind of government is not difficult to be determined. Their wickedness, or their misery may be a reason in the mind of a good governor for destroying them: but the contrary, viz., preserving them forever in a state of wickedness and misery, appears more conducive to the ends of the worst government, than of the best.

To allege that human ignorance is so great, and our ideas of what is fittest and best so imperfect, that we can form no judgment of what the ends of divine gvernment may require; and that therefore, for aught we know, infinite punishment, and the endless existence of some beings in the greatest misery, may be made subservient by the incomprehensible wisdom of Providence, to the greatest virtue and happiness of the universe—is only arguing from a supposed possibility against the greatest probability; and endeavoring under color of human ignorance, to screen a doctrine apparently most injurious to the character of the Supreme Being.

In human government, extreme and lingering punishments are a certain mark of barbarity, and a criterion by which to distinguish a tyrant from a just and good prince. In the best constituted governments, punishments are the mildest; in the worst, the severest. For a perfect tyranny is supported solely by fear; but a just and legal government by better principles and affections. Whether, then, the best or the worst governments on earth, are most like the divine; whether the greatest tyrants, or the most beneficent and merciful princes, most resemble the perfect Governor of the universe, no one will hesitate in deciding.

But, indeed, in all human governments, even the worst, death (which is annihilation in respect to human society) is the ultimate punishment: and all that is added by those judges who proceed to the extremest rigor, is an augmentation for a short space of time, of the horrors and agonies preceding, or attending the execution. And it is hardly to be conceived, that any prince, though absolute in power, tyrannical in disposition, and both injured and incensed to the highest degree, would not, in length of time, think justice satisfied, if not feel his own resentment satiated, by the extreme and lasting miseries of the criminal: the idea of making these miseries everlasting, was this in his power, would be found too abhorrent to reason and humanity to be long entertained in a human breast.

How then can we think of imputing a procedure exceeding the severity of the greatest tyrant, and of the worst government on earth, to that Being whom we style the best; whose tender mercies are over all his works; whom we ought to love with all our hearts, and to contemplate with the greatest delight; and in whose designs and measures we ought to place an entire confidence? Why do we style him most merciful? Why address him as the Father of mankind? A father, indeed, may punish a wicked and disobedient son: i. e., he may withdraw his favor from him, may disinherit him, may inflict stripes, or other penalties upon him, nay, acting as a magistrate and judge, may put him to death. But what should we think of that father, who acting in the capacity of judge over his offending offspring, would not be satisfied (be their crimes ever so great) either with their total destruction, or their suffering for any limited duration, or the addition of the former to the latter; but who would rather judge them to live forever, than to perish forever in fire unquenchable? How could such a judgment consist either with the equity of government, or the clemency of a judge? How much less with the disposition of a parent? How vain is it to compliment the Almighty with the titles of Most Just and Most Merciful if at the same time we ascribe to him a conduct not only inconsistent with the paternal character, but irreconcilable to our clearest notions of justice as well as mercy?

Nothing is of greater importance to religion, than to preserve the character of the Supreme Being inviolate: for without this foundation it cannot be supported; but will be apt to degenerate into slavish superstition, or a blind and savage enthusiasm. Yet, perhaps, no character in the world has been more mistaken, or traduced, and consequently suffered more reproach and injury from the tongues and pens of men: whilst not understanding the nature and end of government in general; nor having formed any clear and consistent notions of justice and mercy, or of that public utility, which ought always to be intended and answered, by punishing as well as by rewarding; they have erected, in their own imagination, a scheme of government, according to their own narrow, partial, arbitrary, or enthusiastic conceits; and have fondly imputed this scheme to the most sublime and excellent Being, whose wisdom and goodness are infinite, whose thoughts and designs excel those of the wisest and best men, as the heavens are above the earth.

[To be Continued.]

A FRIEND AND ENEMY: WHEN MOST DANGEROUS.

I will take heed both of a speedy friend, and a slow enemy. Love is never lasting that flames before it burns. And hate, like wetted coals, throws a fiercer heat, when fire once gets the mastery. As the hasty friend may quickly fail: so the slow foe will hardly be altered. Early fruits rot soon. As quick wits have seldom sound judgments, which should make them continue; so friendship kindled suddenly, is rarely found with the durability of affection. Enduring love is ever built on virtue; which no man can see in another at once. He that fixeth upon her, shall find a beauty that will every day take him with some new grace or other. I like that love, which by soft degrees doth raise itself in the soul. As for an enemy that is long a making; he is much the worse for being ill no sooner.

He hates not but with cause, that is unwilling to hate at all. OMEGA.

PULPIT INGENUITY.

A preacher in the neighborhood of Blackfriars, London, not undeservedly popular, had just finished an exhortation strongly recommending the liberal support of a meritorious institution. The congregation was numerous, and the chapel was crowded to excess. The discourse being finished, the plate was about to be handed around to the respective pews, when the preacher made this short address to the congregation: "From the sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is only one thing I'm afraid of, that some of you may feel inclined to give too much. Now it is my duty to inform you that justice, though it is not pleasant, should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will all be called upon in your respective pews I wish it to be thoroughly understood that no person will think of putting anything in the plate who cannot pay his debts!" It need not be added that this advice produced an overflowing collection.

YOUR NAME IN THE BIBLE.—The Dutch farmers in Africa have held the black natives in great contempt, the same as the Southern planters once despised their slaves. As one of these farmers was riding out one day, he saw one of these blacks sitting by the roadside reading. Checking his horse, he jeeringly asked, "What book have you got there?"

"The Bible," replied the Hottentot.

"The Bible! Why that book was never intended for you."

"Indeed it was," replied the black confidently, "for I see my name here."

"Your name! Where?" said the farmer, getting off his horse; show it me."

"There!" said the poor fellow, putting his finger on the word sinners. (1 Tim. i. 15.) "There! 'sinners!' that's my name. I am a sinner—so that means me."

The farmer was silenced, and mounting his horse he galloped away.—Exch.

THE UNGRATEFUL.—A Fable.—A fisherman just throwing out his line, saw a man fall into the water. He ran to his help, and finally succeeded in hooking him up by the clothes, but, unfortunately, he wounded one of his eyes with his hook. He took the wounded man to his house, nursed him till he was healed. But no sooner was the ungrateful wretch departed than he entered a complaint against the fisherman for having wounded him. The case was heard, and the judges were embarrassed, when a fool raised his voice in the court, "Gentlemen," he said, "it is easy to decide the matter. This man complains that the other has put out his eye. Now throw him into the water in the place where he fell in. If he gets out himself, it is fair that he should obtain damages of the fisherman; but if not, leave him there, and reward the fisherman for the service he has rendered." The complainant withdrew in haste, giving up his demand.

RETRIBUTION.—The moment a friend, or even a mere acquaintance, is dead, how surely there starts up before us each instance of unkindness of which we have been guilty towards him. In fact, many and many an act or word which, while he was in life, did not seem to be unkind at all, now "bites back" as if it were a serpent and shows us what it really was. Alas! 'twas thus we caused him to suffer who now is dust, and yet then we did not pity or reproach ourselves. There is always a bitterness beyond that of death in the dying of a fellow creature to whom we have been unjust or unkind.

GLEANINGS FROM DR. WAYLAND.—The devils going into the swine seem like the "spirits" now-a-days that act so like fools!

"Strive to enter in"—I suppose means just as many will be saved as want to be saved. Every one that strives and is willing to make sacrifices. Don't you suppose God knows all who are His? That is His business. Suppose a man shauld say, "I want to be saved—but I don't want to give up my love of property."

For our sacrifices for the right and the good, and for the Saviour, we shall be abundantly rewarded.

CHURCH FAIRS.—The Reformed Messenger, expresses an earnest disapproval of fairs for church purposes. It says that the parties engaged in them, often "godly men and devoted women," "labor more and accomplish less, with less credit to themselves and less glory to God, by falling in with these worldly schemes, than if they would simply follow the Bible plan. We may get money by catering to the tastes of the world, but we sacrifice principle—and this is more precious than money."

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo-Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Christ alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy for their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
New York."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life
AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 178. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 26, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 36.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

JESUS IN THE STORM, ETC.

We see him by the lake side; again under the pressure of the multitudes. Seeking rest and seeing no hope of it for him in Capernaum, Jesus said, "Let us pass over unto the other side." That other eastern side of the Lake of Galilee offered a singular contrast to the western one. Its wild and lonely hills, thinly peopled by a race, the majority of whom were gentiles, were seldom visited by the inhabitants of the plain of Gennesaret. Now-a-days both sides of the lake are desert; yet still there is but little intercourse between them. Few travellers venture to traverse the eastern shore; fewer venture far into the regions which lie behind, which are now occupied wholly by an Arab population. As offering to him in some one or other of the deep valleys which cleave its hilly ridge and run down into the sea a shady and secure retreat for a day or two from the bustle and fatigue of his life in Galilee, Jesus proposes a passage across the lake. All is soon ready, and they hurriedly embark, taking Jesus in "even as he was," with no preparation for the voyage. It was, however, a short, a six or eight miles' sail. Night falls on them by the way, and with the night one of those terrible hurricanes by which a lake which lies so low, and is bound on all sides by hills, is visited at times. The tempest smote the waters, the waves ran high and smote the little bark. She reeled and swayed, and at each lurch took more and more water in till she was nearly filled, and once let her fill, the next wave that rolls into her she sinks. They were practised hands that navigated this boat, who knew well the lake in all its moods; not open to unreasonable fear, but now the fear comes upon them, and they are ready to give up all hope. But where all this while is he at whose bidding they had embarked? They had been too busy at the time with the urgent work to which the sudden squall called them to look about for him; the mantle of the night's thick darkness may have half hidden him from their view. But now in their extremity they seek for him, and find him "in the hinder part of the ship asleep on a pillow." Unbroken by all the noise of winds and waves without, and all the tumult of those toiling hands within, how quiet and deep must that rest of the wearied one have been! They have some difficulty in awaking him, and they do it somewhat roughly. "Master! Master!" they cry to him, "save us! we perish! Carest thou not that we perish?" With a word of rebuke to them for their great fear and little faith, Jesus rises, and speaking to the boisterous elements as you would speak to a boisterous child, he says to the winds and the waves, "Peace, be still!" and nature owns at once the sovereignty of the Lord. The winds cease their blowing—the waves subside—instantly there is a great calm. Those who had sought and roused the sleeping Saviour, fall back into their former places, resume their former work; at the measured stroke of their oars the little vessel glides silently over the placid waters. All is quiet now, where but a few minutes before all was tumult; few words spoken during the rest of the voyage, the rowers but whispered to each other as they rowed:—"What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the waves obey him?"

Jesus lying this moment under the weakness of exhausted strength, rising the next in all the might of manifested omnipotence: in close proximity, in quick succession, the humanity and the divinity that were in him exhibited themselves. Though suddenly roused to see himself in a position quite new to him, evidently one of great peril, Jesus has no fear. His first thought is not of the danger, his first word is not to the tempest, his first care is not for the safety of the body, it is for the state of the spirit of them who shake him up from his slumbers; nor is it until he has rebuked their fears that he removes their cause, but then he does so, and does it effectually, by the word of his power. And so long as the life we are living shall be thought of and spoken of as a voyage, so long shall this night scene on the lake of Galilee supply the imagery by which many a passage in the history of the church, and many in the history of the individual believer, shall be illustrated. Sleeping or waking let Christ be in the vessel and it is safe. The tempest may come, our faith be small, our fear be great, but still if in our fear we have so much faith as to cry to him to save us, still in the hour of our greatest need will he arise to our help, and though he may have to blame us for not cherishing a livelier trust and making an earlier application, he will not suffer the winds or the waves to overwhelm us.

The storm is past, the night is over, the morning dawns, the opposite coast of the Gadarene is reached. Here, then, in these lonely places there will be some rest at least for Jesus, some place of secure repose? Not yet, not instantly. Soon as he lands, immediately from some neighboring place of graves there comes forth a wild and frenzied man, a man possessed by many devils, for a long time so possessed, exceeding fierce so that no man could tame him. They had bound him with fetters and with chains: the fetters he had plucked asunder, the chains had been broken by him. Flying from the haunts of men, flinging off all his garments, the naked, howling maniac lies day and night among the tombs, crying and cutting himself with stones; so fiercely assaulting all who approached him that no man might pass by that way. From his lair among the graves the devil-haunted madman rushes upon Jesus. His neighbors had all fled terrified before him. This stranger who had just landed flies not, but tranquilly contemplates his approach. He who had so lately brought the great calm down into the bosom of the troubled lake, is about now to create a greater calm within this troubled spirit. At the voice of Jesus he was soon "clothed and in his right mind"........ From the moment that he had been healed, the demoniac had never left Jesus' side—never thought of parting from him—never desired to return to home, or friends, or kindred. A bond stronger than all others bound him to his deliverer. And when he saw Jesus make the movement to depart, he accompanied him to the shore: he went with him to the boat. And as he fell there at his feet, we can almost fancy him taking up Ruth's words and saying, "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee: for whither thou goest I will go, and where thou lodgest I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God." He is ready—he is anxious to forsake all and follow Jesus, but he is not permitted. "Go home to thine own house and to thy friends," said Jesus, "and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee." It was to a heathen home—to friends that knew little about the Lord, and cared little to know, to whom he was to go. No small trial to him to be thus torn from the Saviour's side, to go and reside daily among those who had sent that Saviour from them. But he did it—did more even than he was told to do; not in his own house alone, nor among his own friends alone, but throughout the whole gentile district of Decapolis he published abroad the great things that Jesus had done for him. Better for the man himself—too long accustomed to dwell alone, taking a tincture of the solitary places in which he dwelt into his own spirit, to mix thus freely and widely with his fellow men; and better undoubtedly it was for those among whom he lived—acting as the representative of Him whom in person they had rejected, but who seem to have lent a more willing ear to the man of their own district and kindred, for we are told that as he spake of Jesus, "all men did marvel," and some, let us hope, did believe.—Selected.

THE WILLS.

OUTLINES OF A SERMON PREACHED IN THE COURT HOUSE, PATERSON, JAN. 20, 1867, BY GEO. B. DAY.

"But their minds were blinded: for until this day remaineth the same vail untaken away in the reading of the Old Testament: which vail is done away in Christ."—2 Cor. iii. 14.

To-day we begin an interesting and profitable work—the investigation of the Bible for ourselves. No creeds embarrass us; no system of theology requires that we force interpretation, or torture meanings. The wisdom of the world cannot assist us—it may even prove an obstacle, for it is pronounced, "foolishness with God." Therefore we shall place no dependence upon it. As if the scriptures were given for the first time, and into our hands, that we might know the divine truth, which no human reason could discover except by this revelation, do we address ourselves earnestly to our undertaking. And it is our purpose to make this a life work. "To search the scriptures" shall be the first and only duty to which we feel ourselves imperatively inclined. Let us first, then, thoroughly recognize our position. We are not masters, but disciples; not teachers, only scholars. We have no "views" to maintain by able argument, no "articles of faith" which we are resolved shall find a home and support in the minds of men. With open minds we are to sit at the feet of inspired men to hear what God hath said to those who have an "ear to hear."

What is the Bible? A book of celestial literature? of divine imaginings? of moral precepts? of high philosophy? of purest poetry? or of all these combined and mysteriously blended? St. Paul calls that part of it written before his time the Old Testament, and that portion of it which was written by himself and brother apostles the New Testament. And apart from the common term scriptures or writings, the authors have no other designation for this great work. Turn to the title page. I read there no other name than this, "The Old Testament." Next to this "Family Record" follows another title page—"The New Testament of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." We have stumbled on two wills.

In the Latin Vulgate and in the original Greek the word here rendered "testament" has but one meaning; "a formal written document conveying property or value from one party to another." Will it seem novel to us, to open this sacred book as a legal paper, and read there the particulars of a contract between the unseen God and his only begotten Son Jesus Christ, "parties of the first part;" and some unknown persons (would that we might be included) as the "parties of the second part?"

Testaments, God calls them, testaments they are labelled, testaments let them be.

Let us scan these two "wills," and catch some idea of the running contents.

Genesis opens with an account of the creation of men, and the formation of the earth. God claims to be the author of both. His claim has never yet been successfully disputed. Therefore he has a right to will as much of the world as he pleases to whom he pleases; and though as your eye runs over the antediluvian times it would seem as though the sovereign Master left men to occupy what they chose to occupy, and on such terms as they themselves might elect, the scene soon changes. A flood sweeps off the race, and out of Noah's descendants God calls Abraham and leads him to a particular land. It is the real estate, and the only real estate devised in the Old Testament. Abraham is directed to let his eye range over that land. Our eye may well follow his. For within its limits occurred most of the glorious scenes which made our young eyes roll in wonder as we read, and according to the prophets, upon that same territory shall the vision and reality of the divine glory again be manifest in the fulness of time. Its western boundary was the beautiful Mediterranean; its eastern, the Euphrates river. The river of Egypt limited it upon the South; the mountains of Lebanon on the North. This is the Promised Land—the land of the will—the Canaan, the home over Jordan, and the only land on the wide earth whose tenancy God has directed and enforced ever since he made the old will.

But who were the heirs? "Unto thee will I give it, and unto thy seed," said the Testator to Abraham. Let us not stop to inquire why God gave the flowing land to the Jews. We cannot dispute his right, nor can we undo the facts. To them he willed it, and he was able to execute every provision of his testament. With a high hand and outstretched arm he whirled the Canaanites from their walled towns and towers. With miracle power he set down Abraham's seed in that land, and with the same miracle power he kept them there. Shall we learn, while passing, one truth about miracles? They are the mighty deeds of God executing the provisions of the Testaments—never seen and never to be known except when God is fulfilling something which he has said in these documents shall be done. Here alone is the supernatural, and outside of this there is no miracle: all is natural.

What were the conditions of inheritance and tenancy? This people of God did not inherit in fee simple. They took possession under conditions. Two or three books of the will are occupied with these conditions. We call them the law. Keep them sacredly and you shall stay in the land and be prosperous and happy. So ran the covenant of the Testator. God made this covenant good so long as the conditions were kept. If the Jews were negligent, God let in the banished nations on them to torment them; if they were wholly forgetful and allowed the conditions to be lost and become a dead letter, he banished them from the land, but only for a time. "The gifts and calling of God are without repentance:" and though now wanderers for eighteen hundred years in strange lands and homeless, he is able to graft them in again; and it is in the will a hundred times that he will yet do it.

How long should they maintain possession under the law? Till the real heir should come and take permanent and lasting possession. They should not be dispossessed if they kept the ceremonial and moral law until a strange personage should appear of their own lineage, who would claim and maintain his right to the land, its people, and all its privileges. After that, the law should avail them nothing. He to whom the land thus rightfully belonged as the Son of the Testator should make a new covenant with them and maintain them in perpetual possession. But they must believe in him and receive him as the heir or he would reject and cast them out. This was faith, the new condition of inheritance. Shall we dwell a moment on that faith? It is of all things the most important, for through the want of it the old heirs lost the land, all the benefits of inheritance and the wondrous displays of God's presence in their midst. There was much to be believed, and what they would not credit, that we must receive or we cannot become heirs. That Jesus was God's Son, and therefore heir of the land of promise; that he is to take possession of that land and keep it forever; that he is clothed with all power to make it fruitful, defend it from enemies and make its inhabitants righteous and pure forever; in short, to carry into execution every codicil which is appended to the old will.

Consider well these codicils. I range them in some order, though doubtless an inconsistent one. They are scattered all around in the books of the Old Testament called the prophets. Jesus, the heir, should take possession of the land along with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David, who must therefore rise from the dead to inherit with him. He would rebuild Jerusalem, and make it the capital of the land and nation; establish a kingdom which would never be overthrown; translate into immortals like himself all the Abrahamic people who would believe in him; give to them a pure, intelligent and wise nature, such as other men never had; organize a new government with officers such as human governments never possessed; and give unto these believing ones untold and mysterious powers by which they were to be fitted to govern with him all other nations of the world.

Through him and them, blessings of peace, health, long life, intelligence, wisdom and righteousness should be scattered among the sinful dying nations of the earth, and the world should become filled with their glory and the glory of God. This is some of the substance of these codicils. The heir, Jesus, came to carry them into effect; but somehow there was a vail on the eyes of the Jews when they read the Old Testament and they did not and would not receive him. This vail is done away in Christ, that is in the anointing of Jesus with the Holy Ghost. These codicils have never been executed as yet in full. The Old Testament remains in part waiting for execution. The heirs did not come forward to co-inherit with the Son. They attempted on the contrary to put him to death, that they might still possess on the old condition of the law. They were sure they had succeeded. But there whs another scene which they were not privy to. The heir made another will before he died which was in part to supersede the old. He sealed it in his blood. It is the new Testament of our Lord Jesus Christ. We will scan it this afternoon.

ETERNAL TORMENTS, ANNIHILATION.

Nothing, then, can be more becoming those who are appointed to be ministers of religion, and guardians of its truth and purity, than to vindicate God's government of the world, and to rescue that most sublime and sacred character, which we should always contemplate with the highest veneration and affection, from those unworthy notions, which men are apt to intermix with their belief of a Deity; and especially from those black calumnies, by which he is represented as no better, in effect, than the greatest tyrant, instead of being the most just, beneficent and merciful governor. For the influence which religion has upon the dispositions and morals of mankind, will be useful, or hurtful in proportion as their sentiments of the divine nature and government are good or evil. The worst evils of superstition and enthusiasm have their source in an unjust or partial opinion of the Deity. Nor can the belief of his existence, or almighty power, produce any good effects, separate from a belief of his perfect justice and goodness. A just esteem of the Deity, therefore, is that spring of true religion and virtue, which ought to be preserved, as much as possible, pure and untainted in the minds of men.

It is more curious and difficult than necessary, to account for the propensity of mankind, to receive and retain such ill impressions of the Deity, and his government of the world. Whether they may be ascribed to those fears and horrors which are apt sometimes, especially in some persons, to seize and wholly possess the imagination, and thereby disturb and overpower their reason; or, to their violent resentments against those who offend and injure them, which tempt them to avenge themselves in proportion to their own power rather than to do justice in proportion to the offence; and hence lead them to imagine, that the greater power the person offended is possessed of, the greater punishment he will consequently inflict: or, whether they may be owing in some instances to the strength of any other passions; so much is certain, that human passions and affections, either separate or united, have a great influence upon their understandings and contribute both to form and confirm their peculiar sentiments of the character and disposition of the Supreme Being.

It may be equally difficult to trace out with any precision, how such opinions have actually arisen and spread in the world; particularly this barbarous notion of a state of never ending misery and torment. The heathen poets adopted the vulgar fables, in regard to the different species of the infernal torments. And Virgil assigns a perpetual duration of misery to some criminals: "Sedet æternumque sedebit infelix Theseus:"—though to others he is so favorable as to allow, in process of time, a release: so that his doctrine has a remarkable conformity to the popish hell and purgatory. But it was the business of the poets to affect the imagination: and to this end they made the like use of the fabulous traditions of their times, as Shakespeare does of his witches and apparitions. These were the poetarum and pictorum portenta, which Cicero, as a philosopher, speaks of with so much contempt, as to say, "Who can be so senseless as to give any credit to them?"

Mohammed seems to adopt the doctrine of eternal torments in good earnest; and thunders it out, not only against criminals, but against all who do not receive his Koran. His language is, "They shall undergo the rigors of an infinite pain. They shall never be eased in their torments. They shall be eternally confined in the fire of hell. They shall dwell there eternally. God will change their burned skin into a new skin, that they may suffer the more. He hath prepared hell for them, where they shall remain eternally. The infidels shall be encompassed with flames of hell. They shall have shirts of fire. Boiling water shall flow in upon their heads. The fire shall burn what is in their bellies, and shall roast their skin. They shall be beaten with clubs of iron. When they think to go out of this fire they shall enter further into it. They shall not die in those torments, and their torture shall never be assuaged. They shall in vain implore succor of God. They shall demand of the keeper of the fire, Will thy lord never deliver us from these pains? He shall answer them, Ye shall abide there eternally. They shall never get out of this fire, neither be able to repent. Their pains shall be augmented, and pains upon pains."

It appears, then, that this doctrine of eternal torments, is certainly a Mohammedan if not a heathen doctrine. But whether it be a Jewish or a christian doctrine, remains a subject of inquiry.

I have not yet been able to discover anything like it, in the writings of the Old Testament: and am fully convinced that those passages in the New, which have been thought to imply it most strongly, do directly, and in the strongest manner imply the contrary.

If the expressions of being thrown into a furnace of fire—cast into a lake of fire—into everlasting fire—into hell, where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched—do not import a total destruction, or annihilation, I must confess myself to be utterly at a loss; and must beg your kind assistance, in order to find out the meaning of them.

If I tell a man whose house is on fire, that that fire is unquenchable, the meaning is the same as if I told him, that his house would be entirely destroyed. If I tell a gardener, whose plants, or the blossoms, are infected by the worm, that he cannot kill that worm, or that it will not die, it is the same thing as if I told him that his fruit will come to nothing, or his plants die. Or, if a patient is afflicted with a distemper, which is supposed to proceed from worms, and he is told that the worm will not die, the meaning of the phrase must be, that the disease will end in the death of the patient. And if such phrases be considered as proverbial among the Jews, and that when any person fell into any distemper, or calamity that would certainly end in destruction, it was usual for them to say, "That is a worm that will not die;" or, "That is a fire that will not be quenched;" the sense is perfectly intelligible: they meant that it was a lost case; that there was no possibility of preventing the destruction of the person or thing to which they applied the proverb.

Besides, there is something absurd and contradictory in the image made use of, if we suppose chaff, wood, or other useless materials, thrown into an unquenchable fire and yet not be consumed and destroyed in that fire; or a living creature cast into it, and yet preserved alive forever in it: for, throwing into the fire is always understood to be the most effectual way to destroy a thing: and the less extinguishable the fire is the more certainly will the subject thrown in be consumed. The original, term, katakaieiu, properly translated, is, to burn up, or utterly consume by fire; which is directly contrary to a being preserved in the fire. Who shall burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. John iii. 12. The expression here is probably borrowed from Malachi iv. 1. For behold the day cometh that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of Hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. Similar to this is the expression in the Epistle to the Hebrews: Our God is a consuming fire, katanaliskou. Which signifies, utterly destroying; the very reverse of preserving. There is, indeed, so direct a contradiction between the idea of preserving any creature alive, and that of throwing it into a fire, a fire that cannot be extinguished, that if duly considered, it is amazing how men came to join so opposite ideas together, or imagine them to be consistent. This inconsistency Mohammed ridiculously attempts to reconcile by saying, "That God will change their burned skin into a new skin, that they may suffer the more."

Fire is, indeed, an instrument of torture, as well as of destruction. But why men should think it more becoming the most just and merciful Governor of the world, to make it an instrument of everlasting torment to his offending creatures, rather than of their everlasting destruction; or why they should be disposed to take the words of scripture in a sense contradictory to reason, justice and humanity, when they will not only admit of, but are most naturally understood in a different sense, agreeable to justice and clemency; is to me inconceivable.

The subject is reducible, so far as the christian revelation is concerned, to this single question: Whether the aforementioned expressions are intended to convey to us the idea of everlasting torture, or of everlasting destruction, i.e., annihilation? Perhaps, some may be inclined to think, that they serve to convey ideas, both of torment and of total destruction. With such persons (if there are any) I desire to have no controversy. Because on this supposition, the torment or misery cannot be infinite. And it is only that Mohammedan, Pagan, and (as I must confess it appears to me at present) most absurd, cruel, anti-christian, and diabolical doctrine of infinite, or never-ending misery and torment, which I am opposing, and endeavoring to eradicate.

That there are passages in the New Testament which imply that the sentence of eternal death shall be executed upon criminals with circumstances of ignominy, horror and pain, proportionate to their guilt, I readily allow and affirm: yet am not of opinion, that the figures of being cast into unquenchable fire, and the like, are intended to convey to us any idea of torment, but solely that of total destruction, or annihilation, or a ceasing to exist. And the passage in the book of Revelations, where it is said, that death and hell (i.e. Hades) shall be cast into the lake of fire, seems to me decisive on this point. For certainly the meaning there is, not that death and Hades shall be tormented (which is ridiculous) but that they shall be abolished.

But it is not my design either to trouble you with a superfluous repetition of what hath been suggested in the discourse referred to, or to exhaust the subject: but only to represent to you in few words, the view which I have of it at present; and to entreat your friendly assistance in further explaining the subject, and either rectifying or confirming my sentiments.

Give me leave to add, Sir, that it is a subject worthy of your pen: That according as the doctrine of future punishment is differently explained and believed, it will very differently affect men's opinion of the Supreme Being: and that in a cause in which the honor of God and the credit of the christian revelation are so immediately concerned, you cannot find yourself unconcerned.

For my own part, I am persuaded, that the vulgar notion of eternal torments has been productive, not of virtue and happiness, but of wickedness and misery in the world, where it has been most seriously and steadily believed. However, consequences are not the subject of our inquiry, but the truth of the doctrine. The proper question is, what is the doctrine of our Saviour? When that is determined, if any man, after allowing the doctrine to be His, yet shall impute ill effects to it, or assert that it ought not to be preached or published, he pretends to be wiser than our Saviour, and is guilty of an arrogance inconsistent with his christian profession.

LOST TIME.

Let any man pass an evening in vacant idleness, or even in reading some silly tale, and compare the state of his mind when he goes to sleep or gets up next morning with its state some other day, when he has spent a few hours in going through the proofs, by facts and reasoning, of some of the great doctrines in natural science, learning truths wholly new to him, and satisfying himself by careful examination of the grounds on which known truths rest, so as to be not only acquainted with the doctrines of themselves, but able to show why he believes them, and to prove before others that they are true, will find as great a difference as can exist in the same being—the difference between looking back upon time unprofitably wasted, and time spent in self-improvement; he will feel himself, in one case, listless and dissatisfied—in the other comfortable and happy; in the one case, if he did not appear to himself humble, at least will not have earned any claim to his own respect; in the other case he will enjoy a proud consciousness of having, by his own exertions, become a wiser, and therefore a more exalted nature.—Lord Brougham.

AN UNUSUAL SCENE.—At the church of Rev. Dr. Thompson in Roxbury, on a late Sunday, when several persons, all females, were received to the church, one of them was noticed to be absorbed, not with what the pastor was saying, but with the signs and gestures of a gentleman near. To the audience these signs and gestures were not only destitute of meaning but in themselves even ludicrous; but to the young lady they conveyed ideas of the most sublime and solemn import. She was deaf and dumb.

As the services proceeded, the pastor extended the hand of fellowship to each of the candidates. When he came to this young lady, giving her his hand he said in affecting tones to the audience. "No human voice has ever reached the soul of this young woman, but Christ has spoken to her heart." There was not a dry eye in the house. All felt how merciful are the ways of God, who, in his providence, by the ingenuity of man thus causes the deaf to hear the wonders of redeeming love.—Boston Recorder.

The End of the Wicked.

The following is from the World's Crisis of 1860.

We affirm that the conditionality of the purpose for which the atonement was instituted involves the total cessation of the wicked.

We find the purpose of the Lord, and the condition of salvation for those who hear the gospel, expressed in such language as the following: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16.

Here we find "perish" contrasted with "everlasting life." Apoleetai, rendered perish in this passage, is from apollumi, which is defined by Donegan "to destroy totally," "to die." Mr. Webster says," destroy means to demolish, to pull down, as, to destroy a house; to ruin; to annihilate a thing, by demolishing or burning it; as, to destroy a city; to ruin; to bring to naught; to annihilate; to devour; to consume; in general, to put an end to; to annihilate a thing, or the form in which it exists."

The scripture just quoted shows that all would have perished if there had been no Saviour provided. The question arises, what would have been their condition when in the state where it would be proper to say of them, they are perished? The antithetical term in the text is life; hence, we conclude that perish in this passage is used in its legitimate sense, meaning the opposite of life, which is death. This point is clearly set forth by the apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. xv. 18, where he says, "They also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished," if there is "no resurrection of the dead." He cannot mean that christians have gone into torment "if the dead rise not," but as an old translation of this verse reads, they "are totally lost out of creation; they have ceased to exist as men."

In 1 John iv. 9, we read, "In this was manifested the love of God toward us, because that God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him." Will all live through him? He says of some, "Ye will not come to me that ye might have life." John v. 40. It should be observed that the only words qualifying the life promised to the faithful, through Christ, are such as represent its duration; as everlasting and eternal; but we never find such words as blessed or happy used to qualify the future life, thereby indicating that there is another class just as truly alive, but existing in misery. Says Paul, "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ." Rom. vi. 23.

Through the whole Bible we find life promised to the righteous, and death threatened to the sinner, as the end of his wicked career.

John says in his first letter, "He that believeth in the Son of God hath the witness in himself; he that believeth not God hath made him a liar, because he believed not the record that God gave of his Son." What is the record? "And this is the record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." 1 John v: 10–11.

Observe, the life is not yet in us; but, as Paul says, "Your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. iii. 3–4.

As our eternal life is hid with Christ, the life-giver, and some will not come to him to obtain it, it follows as a necessary consequence that they must die.

After Adam's transgression, he was driven from the garden of Eden, "lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever." He lost life by his disobedience. Christ came and proposed to give eternal life to as many as will obey him. Hence he says in Rev. ii. 7, "To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the paradise of God."

Then it follows that such will live forever; but those who do not overcome, like Adam, are driven from the tree of life, and die.

Paul tells us in Rom. ii. 7, that we must "seek for glory and honor and immortality," "by patient continuance in well doing." We feel confident he would not exhort us to seek for immortality if we have it already. As it is to be obtained "by patient continuance in well doing," it cannot be obtained by any opposite course, as pursued by the wicked.

It seems clear that eternal life is a gift bestowed only upon the righteous, through Christ, and this life is received when Christ who is our life shall appear "the second time," "without sin, unto salvation." "Then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, death is swallowed up in victory." "Then this mortal shall have put on immortality;" but the wicked shall "utterly perish in their own corruption."—2 Pet. ii. 12. They die "the second death," and never live again. Then "sin is finished," and the wicked are "no more," Their "end is destruction."

Hence we come to the conclusion, "that the conditionality of the purpose for which atonement was instituted involves the total cessation of the wicked."

Books, Pamphlets, and Tracts can be had at the Editor's residence; of Geo. W. Young, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 87 Park Row, Room 40

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, JUNE 26, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

The Herald of Life.

This number completes three fourths of the present volume. At the issue of our last number the Editor was confined at his house by another attack of sciatica, which has rendered it impossible for him to be at the office, and prevented him from preparing much matter for the present number. He hopes to be about again soon.

It is important for the friends of the Herald to do all they can pecuniarily to help the paper through the next three months, as our present funds are several hundred dollars short to complete the volume. They should, also, settle the matter, if our paper is to be continued in its present mode of issue, that it shall be placed on a basis not to lack funds for the succeeding volume, nor leave it to a few to bear the expense alone.

We mention this matter now as our anniversary is to take place in a few weeks, and then the whole matter of its continuance must be settled. Let us have our minds made up to do whatever seems to be the indication of Providence in relation to it.

If the paper is to be continued—and we suppose nearly all will say, "It must be"—let there be such an united effort as shall show that we know how to value the only paper in existence that maintains the unbroken truth of "Life future and eternal, only in Christ." That such is the fact, you all know; and our opposers cannot deny it. All, save this one paper, proclaim a future and miserable existence to the wicked—to those out of Christ. Shall not, and ought not all our means and energies to be devoted to sustain that cause which has thus to struggle against so "many adversaries"?

We have no cause to faint in our warfare. We have passed through the heaviest onset of its opposers; and if divine support has hitherto been afforded us surely we need not fear for the future. Yet we should seek not to force Providence, but to wait upon him who guides all things well. As his stewards we should act, and not for any selfish ends.

The Annihilation of the Wicked.

It is satisfactory to the wicked. One young man, dissipated and profligate, said, 'That doctrine just suits me.' And so it is. If the impenitent could really believe it, their impenitence would become a fixed fact. Could they but persuade themselves that they could continue in a life of dissipation and pleasure here, and then be blotted out of existence, they would scoff at the Bible and religion, and give themselves up to lives of unbridled wickedness. Those who promulgate this doctrine lay a flattering unction to the souls of the wicked, and encourage them to continue in lives of impenitence and rebellion against God."—B.

This objection is made up of two parts: 1st, The effect of the doctrine on the wicked; and 2d, the censure of those who preach it. We will look at each part by itself. "B" says "It is satisfactory to the wicked." What proof has he given of this assumption? "One young man said, 'That doctrine just suits me.'" But "B" forgets that it is by the mouth of at least "two or three witnesses" every word is to be proved: yet he is satisfied with one. And that one may never have learned anything of the doctrine spoken of except what he had heard by the misrepresentations of its enemies. Quite probable "B" had "garbled" the doctrine in giving the "one young man" an idea of it which drew out the expression spoken of. But suppose this young man had a correct idea of the doctrine, and expressed himself as "B" says—what then? Does that prove the doctrine false, and not calculated to lead men to repentance? By no means. We have known intelligent persons who had rejected christianity altogether, from the representations of God, his character and designs, by such men as "B," who have been brought to acknowlege its truths, and been led to renounce sin and consecrate themselves to the service of God, and are now ministers of the gospel by means of the very doctrine which "B" says "If" they "could" believe, their impenitence would become a fixed fact." Thus "B" is convicted of a false assumption.

Some of the dissipated may continue impenitent under the preaching of this doctrine; and what doctrine will not be abused or perverted by such characters? Does the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul and endless torments lead all such to repentance? And do not "B." and his school teach that the punishment of the wicked is postponed to a future life—and in another world? Has such a doctrine no tendency to encourage men in sin? If "B." says no, a greater than he has said—"Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil." Eccl. viii. 11. Does that prove the doctrine of judgment and punishment future is calculated to lead men "to continue in a life of dissipation and pleasure here?" The fact is, men of corrupt minds may abuse any truth; and some hold the truth in unrighteousness. "B.," then, should show, not by assumptions and mere declamation, that the doctrine, "all the wicked will God destroy"—Psa. cxlv. 20—is a doctrine "satisfactory to the wicked," and calculated to lead them to continue in sin and "scoff at the Bible and religion." We rather think the doctrine of inherent immortality and endless sin and suffering is that which hardens men in sin and leads them to "scoff at the Bible and religion." Many cases might be adduced where such is the result of his theory, to "one" of his showing led to such a course by the doctrine of "the annihilation of the wicked." The question, however is not settled in this way. It is a question of What does the Bible teach? Whether sinners are pleased or displeased with the doctrine presented settles nothing of its truth or falsehood; but What saith the Lord? That point determined, if sinners abuse his mercy and take liberty to continue in sin on that account the teachers of that truth are not responsible for their stupidity and love of sensual gratification rather than life and eternal immortality. We know the truth will be a "savor of life unto life" to some, while it is a "savor of death unto death" to others. The fault in the latter case is not chargeable to the truth, but to men's perverting that truth and refusing obedience to its claims.

Multitudes who profess to believe the theory "B" advocates "give themselves up to lives of unbridled wickedness." His views, therefore, are not a sovereign remedy for sin and wickedness. So far from it, the probability is, that the very "young man," of whom he speaks, had become confirmed in his "dissipated and profligate" course under the preaching of "endless misery." It is not to be wondered at, then, that a "young man" lost in evil habits, and feeling that his case was hopeless, should say "that doctrine just suits me." Unhappy youth! He had doubtless been driven to despair of the mercy of God by the savage representations of his Maker's character that "B" and his school had given him; and one ray of light thrown upon his mind that God did not design eternally to torment him, did, doubtless, remove a burden from his heart, and in that sense did "just suit" him; and if anything on earth could melt his heart, such a discovery of the character of God contrasted with the hardening effects of the endless misery theory, must have moved him to an effort to overcome his evil propensities and "lay hold on eternal life." Possibly it had that effect, for "B" seems not to have stopped to inquire in what sense the "young man" used the phrase—"just suits me"—whether to encourage himself in sin, or as inspiring him with hope in God's mercy, which he never could have had under the horrible doctrine of endless sin and suffering. In the absence of evidence to the contrary, we may fairly conclude he had a hope inspired in his heart, by this milder view of the character of his Creator that even he, wicked as he felt himself to be, might find mercy: while the savage theory of "B" had driven him to despair that had made him reckless of his character and doom.

The doctrine that "B" traduces has no tendency to lead men to give "themselves up to lives of unbridled wickedness:" it is a libel on truth to affirm it. It is only by a misrepresentation of the doctrine, such as "B" and others of his faith are guilty of, that the doctrine will lead to such a result, except in cases where no doctrine would affect the heart to lead the sinner to repentance. "The goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance," saith an apostle, Rom. ii. 4. If that will not do it, men will go on, under any theory, to "treasure up wrath against the day of wrath."

We repel, then, the charge that "those who promulgate this doctrine lay a flattering unction to the souls of the wicked," etc. It is not so. "The Lord preserveth all them that love him; but all the wicked will he destroy," is the testimony of inspiration: and, "the wicked shall perish: the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs: they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away," see Psalms cxlv. 20, and xxxvii. 20. Such Bible testimony is not to be set aside by the mere declamation of such men as "B." The encouragement to continue in sin belongs to his theory by representing God as a most merciless tyrant who having brought men into being without their knowledge or consent, is determined for the sins of this short life to perpetuate that being or existence, without interruption and without end, in the most unutterable and unmitigated anguish, and without hope! Such a representation of God is more fitting the savagism of heathenism than the character of the most merciful and compassionate God of the Bible, who saith—"Say unto them, As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live: turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die?" Ezek. xxxiii. 11. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John iii. 16.

Thus the appeal to men is based on their love of life and God's love to them, and not on the savagism of endless torture and woe; which latter idea is well calculated to beget hatred to God and dislike for his service now, hence is almost universally, where it is proclaimed and believed, followed with a present neglect or contempt for his service, and procrastination in relation to the things of religion till just as they are "going to die;" and then a profession of submission often takes place merely to escape the savagism of the God they are taught claims their homage, without which they are to be the eternal objects of his "fiery indignation" and "incensed fury."

Had Adam the Life of God?

"Adam had the life of God in him.... In Eph. iv. 18, Paul speaks of 'having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God,' etc. To be alienated implies a previous interest in a person or thing."....
"If the unconverted are alienated from the life of God, they once had it—not personally, but in their federal head. The marginal reading of Gen. ii. 7, 'Breath of lives,' indicates a two-fold life, an animal life, the soul, and the zoe, or life of God."...."Man was originally deathless, hence immortal."—Josiah Litch.

We think we understand you. You hold man was immortal because he had "the life of God in him"—that he became "alienated from that life," hence lost his immortality: i e., he is no longer "deathless," though his Creator made him so! Thus immortality is no absolute security against death.

The text you quote from Eph. iv. 18 and your comments on it seem clearly to stultify yourself. You have to admit these Ephesians never had "the life God personally"! Then they never had immortality personally: and so neither had nor could have immortality till such time as the "life of God" is restored to them; but this "the unconverted" never have; it is the converted only that have the life of God in them. So the sinner has no "immortal soul" now, you being witness. It does not follow because the Ephesians, while unconverted, were "alienated from the life of God," they "once had it." The term "alienated" does not necessarily imply this. The first sense given the word by Webster is "estranged:" which signifies "to keep at a distance," etc. Paul saith, they were alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart; not through "their federal head," as you affirm. He tells these Ephesians, when they were in their heathenism, they were "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world:" i. e., they "were far off" from "the life of God"—"at a distance" from it, "estranged" from it; but no idea that they ever had it personally or in their federal head.

Your construction of the Hebrew, "Breath of lives," Gen. ii. 7, is totally untenable. The language has no such sense as you give it, and will not admit it. The same Hebrew word—'ha' yim'—is used Gen. vii. 22, and is there applied to "cattle, beasts, fowl, creeping things, and man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life—'ha' yim.'" If Gen. ii. 7 proves what you say, it is equally proved by Gen. vii. 22, that all cattle and creeping things had "a two-fold life"—"the life of God"!

The facts are simply these: all the animal, or brute creation were made and brought into life before man. Man was created last of all creatures that lived by breathing. He was formed of the dust of the ground, and so were all the brute creatures; (see Gen. ii. 19): they lived by "the breath of the spirit of life," (see margin of Gen. vii, 22). and had a priority in that life. When man was formed, he was to be made alive, or made to live. How was it to be done? "The Lord God breathed into his nostrils the breath of lives:" the breath which was common to all breathing creatures which God had previously made. Instead of the language indicating any different life being imparted from what was given to inferior living creatures, it settles the fact—if the record is to settle it—that man had no other life-element in his creation than what was common to all creatures that lived by breathing.

Your insinuation that zoe means "the life of God," or immortal life, is without foundation. It does not, of itself, express anything more than simply life; whether short or long must be determined by some connecting term. The following texts will show the absurdity of attempting to prove an eternal life or immortality from this term:

"That he would grant us, that we....might serve him....in holiness and righteousness.... all the days of our life"—zoe. Luke i. 74, 75. "For a man's life—zoe—consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Luke xii. 15. "Thou in thy lifetime"—zoen—"receivedst thy good things." Luke xvi. 25. "For this life"—zoe—"is taken from the earth." Acts viii. 33. "I am persuaded that neither death, nor life"—zoe—...."shall be able to separate us from the love of God." Rom. viii. 38, 39. "For all things are yours, whether....life"—zoe—"or death." 1 Cor. iii. 21, 22. "If in this life"—zoe—"only, we have hope in Christ," &c. 1 Cor. xv. 19. "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life"—zoes—"or by death." Phil. i. 20. "For what is your life"?—zoe—"It is even a vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." James iv. 14.

These texts, we judge, are sufficient to convince the candid that the term zoe, of itself, does not signify eternal life; and especially the last quoted text must convince all such that zoe, in James' mind, has no such meaning.

"The Unsearchable Riches of Christ."

Christ has riches; and they are unsearchable, and so extensive that they cannot be explored, nor exhausted. Let us dwell a moment on this topic. What are we called to? First, a union with Christ: to become his bride. Of course, partners in His treasures, honors, and whatever belongs to him. Let this truth be proclaimed. But who and what are we? Mortal, corruptible, dying creatures: whose foundation is in the dust; and all of whose tendencies are to return to dust again; with no principle of immortality or endless life in ourselves. To such creatures Christ is proclaimed, as seeking to bring us into a relation to Himself of the nearest and most interesting character. Men are allured by the charm of riches, gold, inexhaustible mines; that wakes up their whole being, and they eagerly inquire what it is, where it is, how they can find it, how they may possess themselves of those treasures? If they find there is even a chance for success in the pursuit, they enter at once on the expedition, hazarding all the labor, toil, risk, suffering, or privation that may be attending the enterprise. Now, says the apostle, I come to proclaim to you riches unsearchable, a mine that is inexhaustible in Christ. He is the Son of the living God, and heir of God: heir of his incorruptibility, glory, endless life, and whatever pertains to the fulness of God. He proposes to share these riches with us: and in exchange for this short and fleeting life to give us an endless life: instead of these corruptible bodies to give us incorruptible ones: instead of the dishonor of consuming in the grave, by worms, to raise us to crowns of glory that fade not away. In a word, to give us riches as much more glorious, valuable, and durable than the richest diamonds, or the most refined and pure gold, as they exceed the most worthless and loathsome object that earth bears upon its surface. But all comparison fails, and we feel the deepest sense of weakness in the attempt, and leave it to your own reflections to follow up the contemplation of the honor, glory, and riches that are so freely offered to us in Jesus Christ.

Another Assumption of the D. D.

"'Fear not them which can kill the body but cannot kill the soul.' Man cannot kill the soul. But if it is one with the body, any man can kill it. There is no such thing in the universe as a dead soul."

Ignorant as this D.D., says we are of Hebrew and Greek, we think we know enough to comprehend the fact that he does not possess the attribute of omniscience, and therefore there may be such a thing somewhere in the universe as a dead soul. If he will turn to Rev. xvi. 3, he will find testimony that "every living soul in the sea died." Then there must have been such a thing as a dead soul. Should he say, "That means the fishes and whales died," we reply that they were souls, and they died. If he understands Hebrew and Greek, he knows that the principal word in Hebrew for soul is Nephesh, and that the only word in Greek for soul is Psuche. In the Hebrew we find the expression dead nephesh—dead soul—of not unfrequent occurrence, though our translation does not always suffer that fact to appear, but a D.D. should not attempt to conceal it. The Greek term psuche is primarily and properly expressive of life, though our translators have sometimes rendered it life, and at other times soul. Of this Dr. Clarke complains, particularly in Math. xvi. 25, 26. If our D.D. maintains a nephesh or psuche cannot be killed by man, yet he must admit that God is able to destroy both soul (psuche) and body; for so the remainder of the text declares, from which he quoted partially. Besides, if souls cannot be killed by men, in some sense, will our friend tell us how we are to understand the record, Joshua x. where in the overthrow of certain cities, it is said six times, with slight variations, "All the souls that were therein he utterly destroyed!" That looks as if men might kill some souls! Will he say, That means he destroyed their persons. Agreed. So soul sometimes means person, or personality. Now, whose person, or personality, cannot men kill, or destroy? Or, of whose persons or personality did Jesus speak in the text under consideration? Was it the soul or person of all men, or of a certain specific class of men? Luke introduces the words thus, "I say unto you, my friends;" and Matthew shows that it was in a discourse with the disciples, and to fortify them against apostacy under their coming suffering, that Jesus spake the words under consideration. They express a fact, viz.: That man cannot extinguish their personality, or deprive his followers of life, so as to destroy or deprive them of that future and eternal life which he promised; but that God was able to do both—therefore fear not them who kill the body [deprive you of life now] but are not able to kill the soul (or extinguish your personality); for whosoever shall lose his life—psuche—for my sake shall find it." Compare Matth. x. 28, and Luke xii. 4, 5, with Matth. xvi. 25.

The text, then, gives no countenance to the assumption of an entity in man, called the soul, that survives in a state of consciousness when the man is dead; but it does give the glorious hope to the followers of Christ, that however they may be tortured by men, even unto death, their personality shall be maintained by God, and they shall be raised up to an endless life at the last day. But it is also a warning that if they deny Christ, and apostatize under their sufferings, God will do that which man cannot do—destroy both soul and body—extinguish their being, their personality—forever: therefore fear Him, and not men who have no such power.

A Suggestion.

Br. Storrs.—By the first article of the Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union," ...."to spread vital godliness," the directors would do well in appointing three suitable persons for each district, as missionaries, to go together, selecting their own field of labor, distributing suitable tracts, and using the best means of "spreading vital godliness." An intelligent, good German leader, with brother Walker, would be instrumental in doing good in Hudson City, N. J., and they may rely upon my feeble efforts to aid them, if they will call upon me. You will find within five dollars for the mission. Noah.

Note by the Editor.—The foregoing is from a responsible source. His name and residence can be known if his suggestion is acted on.

He also sent us the following statement of Rev. Matthew Hale Smith, at the Park Theatre, Brooklyn. Mr. Smith has lately returned from England, and his statement relates to the "Lay Preaching" there. He said:

The "Lay Preaching movement began a few years ago in London, and has since swept over the entire Kingdom, comprehending in the ranks of lay or unordained preachers, men in every rank and condition in life, from peers of the realm to weavers and carpenters. After singing by the congregation, led by six little girls from the Howard Mission, New York, followed by prayer and the customary reading of the scriptures, the Rev. gentleman announced that he should preach no set sermon, but merely give some account of the movement and of two or three of the most noteworthy of the lay preachers who have sprung directly from the lower orders. He said:

When I asserted last Sunday that there are over 3,000 laymen preaching the word of God every Sunday in London city alone, many may have thought that I overstated the case; but when I tell you that the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon alone has 600 men from his church, every one of whom preaches somewhere on Sunday, and that one of these members has a Bible class of more than 200—that nearly every christian merchant preaches, that nearly every christian employer in every business takes his Bible and finds, every Sunday, some place to preach, and that hundreds of others do likewise, you must admit that I did not say too much. The way of these preachers who have no churches or lecture rooms of their own is to take a Bible, and generally one or two persons to sing hymns and to mount a stump, a wagon, or go into a beer shop, or any place where they would be tolerated, and begin to sing and read and preach. I was astonished to find that in England everybody preaches; laymen not only preach and pray, but they baptize and administer the sacrament without regard to the fact that they are not ordained. The English people dislike exceedingly the title of "Reverend." Mr. Spurgeon tells his friends never to address him by that name. This dislike comes from the establishment of a legal church, which exercises the right of collecting tithes and church rates by process of law, from everybody, whether they attend church or no, and people have a natural prejudice against being compelled to pay for religious privileges whether they enjoy them or not. Lord Shaftesbury, who began this movement many years ago, said that not one in twenty of the common people ever enter a church, not being able to pay the pew rent, and that this theatre preaching arose from that fact. On one special Sunday all the churches in London invited the working classes to come and listen to sermons prepared especially for them, and every church was crowded.

One great feature of these lay preachers is that they begin by affording the poor temporal relief, as well as giving them merely spiritual advice, and we shall never accomplish anything in this country till we do the same thing. They began with "tea-meetings," when the people were first given all they wanted to eat and were then gradually interested in religious matters, until many were converted before they knew it. When once a large meeting of the working classes were asked to state themselves, in their own way, reasons why they never go to church, representative men from more than a dozen trades, a butcher, a saddler, a shoemaker, etc., stated each the same fact, that they couldn't afford to go to church because pew-rent is so high—and in this country it is too much so. Religion, like justice, has become a luxury, and few can get it unless they pay for it. The most costly church ever built in the world was built on Zion Hill by order of Christ, and yet it was as free to the poorest as to the richest. This great movement also provides amusements for the people. In the city of Liverpool, under charge of a christian committee, every Saturday night the very best actors that the city affords play at one of the largest of the theatres. They produce unexceptionable plays, pantomimes, &c., and the people crowd the house; and that they may not feel that they are treated like paupers, the men and women are charged a penny English (or nearly three cents of our currency), and the children are thrown in free. This may seem a strange business for christians to be engaged in; but I feel bound to say that these performances have, I verily believe, been a means of grace to tens of thousands. The theory of it is this: We know that many of the working classes spend their money in drink, but when they attend these theatres with their families, they soon discover that it is much pleasanter and better to spend the evenings there with their wives and children than at the bar-rooms with people who rob them of their money—from the theatre conducted in this way to the Sunday meeting the gradation is easy, and so many a man finds himself a christian before he suspected he was on the road. Another great influence is exerted by ladies who go about and teach the women of the working classes how to keep their houses and themselves clean and comfortable; I don't know what "original sin" may be, but my opinion is that dirtiness and idleness come as near it as anything we can determine.

Richard Weaver, one of the most noted of the lay preachers, was originally a collier; he was a drunkard, a prize-fighter, and a bad, dangerous man. He is now 40 years old; in 1861 he was strangely converted and he immediately began to go about telling his experience, and preaching. He had one of the worst fathers ever a man was cursed with, but a good, praying mother, who, when she was abused by her husband, would tell him that she would never cease to pray for him, and that she hoped to see him yet a christian; though she died before that wish was accomplished, the old man was converted at the age of 76, and died a true christian. Immediately after his conversion, Weaver developed a wonderful natural eloquence and capacity for touching the hearts of men of his class. Bishop Noel invited him to preach in his pulpit in London, and when remonstrated with by many friends for his alleged indiscretion and improper conduct in allowing a man to preach who had never been ordained, the bishop replied that to him it was evident that if the Lord had ordained a man to preach, it made little difference whether man had said anything to him or not; so Weaver came to London and produced a great sensation. The reverend speaker illustrated his account of Weaver by a number of anecdotes illustrative of the character of the man and his style of preaching, and concluded by stating that, in his opinion "no man since Whitfield had done so much good or accomplished so great a work in preaching God's Word." Richard Baily, a butcher, and Mr. Stock, a carpenter, were also mentioned as among the leaders of this great movement. Mr. Smith said that the great strength of this kind of preaching is that they preach Christ Jesus only, and do not attempt to confute the principles or prejudices of others. If a preacher was in a Roman Catholic neighborhood he did not occupy himself with abusing the Catholics—indeed, said the speaker, "You may preach against the Catholics till you are gray, but till you can get a class of women like their noble 'Sisters of Charity' who will go and visit the poor, and attend on those sick in the hospitals, they will beat you ten to one, and so they ought to. There was but one Florence Nightingale, when there should have been a thousand. The only way to overcome these people is to outdo them in works of charity and mercy. If you haven't any charity for the thousands of the poor who perish, you haven't any christianity worth having."

Mr. Carter is another of these London preachers whose labors lie especially among thieves and pickpockets, and after a few years' labor he has now a church of over 500 reformed persons. His wife and he began their work on the "tea-meeting" plan, and at their earlier meetings they dared not have knives, forks, or spoons, for fear they should be stolen, and they had to watch every cup and take it away as soon as emptied.

The reverend gentleman closed with an urgent appeal to Americans not to let our transatlantic friends beat us in this good work or in anything else so noble.

The Palestine Colony Again.

The Jaffa Colony, if it has done nothing more, has made a great deal of talk. People generally regard it as a Yank e speculation, and on that ground many of them justify or at least defend Adams, the leader, as his case, viewing it as they do, is about as fair as all such schemes—where the smartest rogue is the best fellow. But Adams' case is different. He claimed to be influenced by religious principles, whereas his warmest defenders admit his wasteful and extravagant habits and immoral conduct. The most reprehensible parties are those who, believing in the objects of the Colony, seek to hide the misconduct of Adams, of which they cannot be ignorant.

"Few enterprises have attracted so much attention and occasioned so many conflicting and contradictory statements as the Maine colony at Jaffa, Palestine. The letter concerning it which we publish to-day from our correspondent, 'Burleigh,' will be read with interest. The colony that went to Jaffa last fall numbered one hundred and fifty-four persons, and they were induced to go in consequence of religious sympathy with C. J. Adams, who had for several years been a preacher among them. They were residents of Indian River, Jonesport, and other neighboring places in Washington county, Maine. The object of the colony was chiefly a religious one—to get to Palestine and share in the prosperity expected to attend the restoration of the Jews to their native land, but the colonists also expected to better their temporal condition by the change from Maine to Syria. Most of those who joined the colony were people of little means, and, after they had paid their passage, bought their house lots, and prepared their dwellings, they had little or nothing left.

"Under these circumstances, it is not strange that the colonists began to get dissatisfied, and two parties—one of six persons and a second one of fourteen—have already left Jaffa for the United States. Some of these persons have arrived home, and others are waiting in England for the means of getting back to Maine. From conversations with some of those who have returned we gather the general drift of the story of their grievances. They claim that Mr. Adams has deceived them and swindled them out of money, though they say at the same time that Adams has not made enough out of the enterprise to show that he undertook it for the sake of the money, and that it would require an addition of at least $2,000 in gold to his personal assets to enable him to pay the debts he has contracted at Jaffa and vicinity. They charge him with drunkenness and lying, and one of the men who have returned briefly and emphatically charges the leader with the most refined villany of the nineteenth century. They were glad to leave the colony at the sacrifice of most of what they had invested, and they assert that many others will leave the colony as soon as they can settle up their affairs and get remittances from home to pay their passage.

"The unity of the colon y has already been broken up by the sale of the property of some of those who have come home to Englishmen and other foreigners resident at Jaffa, and those who have returned feel confident that the agricultural operations of the colony will not prove very successful for the present year. They estimate the yield of wheat and barley at ten bushels per acre, one fourth of which is to be paid to the owners of the land for rent, and one-fifth of which is to be given as tribute to the Turkish government. After making these deductions and replacing the two bushels per acre used as seed, there will evidently not be a large surplus. The soil there was originally very fertile, but it has been cultivated for many centuries without the application of any fertilizer. The opponents of Adams complain of Mr. Bidwell's conduct while he was at Jaffa—that he stopped at Adams's house as his guest and took but little pains to see any of the colonists except those to whom he was introduced by Adams himself, and who were Adams's particular friends. The American Vice-consul at Jaffa and the American Consul at Jerusalem are said to have done all in their power to assist the poorer ones among the colony, and there has not yet been much real suffering from destitution. The natives and the Turkish officials and the English consuls are described as having been uniformly kind and obliging, and to have each and all done everything in their power to dissuade any of the colonists from returning home.

"On the other hand, we have received a letter from a person who represents himself as an English traveller and a member of the British Parliament from London, giving a long, and circumstantial defence of Adams's conduct, and attributing to him the best and purest of motives. We also find in the paper, which is still published under Adams's auspices at Indian River, a long statement in his defence, signed by thirty-two male members of the colony at Jaffa. They maintain that everything is going on well and that temporal riches and spiritual glory are sure to reward them if they remain at Jaffa. They denounce the conduct of those who have come home in the strongest terms, as well as the course that has been taken by our consuls there, and letters from Adams himself in the same paper are filled with strong language upon these same points.

"From the multiplicity of statements made about the colony, and from what we have learned of Mr. Adams's reputation while in Maine, and during a previous residence in Springfield, we conclude that he was hardly the right man to plant a successful colony in Palestine, and that his followers were not the proper persons to participate in such a work. A colony might be made to succeed at Jaffa, but those who undertook it would need considerable capital, and no small stock of intelligence, industry and energy. Well supplied with all these things, five or ten years of patient laboring and waiting would bring some measure of success. But the class of people that went to Jaffa with Mr. Adams can live in Maine much easier and better than in Palestine, and if they must emigrate they had still better keep within the broad domain of the United States. With our millions upon millions of virgin acres waiting to reward agricultural labor with the richest returns, there is certainly no sense in going to Asia to starve on the land that has been lazily cultivated by Jews, Arabs and Turks since the creation of the world."

The Destruction of Papacy.

We take the following from the World's Crisis. It is by Eld. D. T. Taylor. We are strongly inclinded to favor his view of the destruction of Rome; and it may occur soon. The grand assembly of Romish priests to assemble there this month seems to be a fitting time for the grand catastrophe of that harlot power. We wait to see.

ROME.

If the kings and peoples are to be Babylon's mourners, how can they be her burners? And why the terror and alarm at her burning, if done by mere human agency? If the kings alone are to burn her, how will "her smoke go up forever and ever"? How, and why, do "ship-masters, and all the company in ships, and sailors, and as many as trade by sea," cry and lament, "when they see the smoke of her burning," if this burning is merely figurative? Unless her destruction is sudden, and her overthrow complete, how can it be compared to, or illustrated by, the fall and disappearance of a mill-stone into the sea? Is there no meaning in the mighty angel's "Thus with violence?" If the kings alone overthrow her, can it be so thorough as that "she shall be found no more at all?" Did kings and their armies ever overthrow a polity or city so suddenly and completely as to produce such an instant, final effect?

Unquenched volcanic fires wait and burn all about Rome. The entire city is underlaid by volcanic rock. Its very foundation is hardened material that once was in a state of ignition. Mr. Elliott, Horæ Apoc., gives us the following information: "It is not Etna, the Lipari volcanic islands, Vesuvius, and the Phlegrean fields, that alone offer visible indication of the catastrophe. The great Appenine mountain chain and its branches are said to be very mainly volcanic in character, from Reggio to Verona; and the country round Rome, more especially, is almost as strikingly so as that of Sodom itself. Let me quote an extract or two from among multitudes to the same effect, in the mineralogist Ferber's tour in Italy. P. 189, 'The road from Rome to Ostia is all volcanic ashes, till within two miles of Ostia.' Again, p. 191, 'From Rome to Tivoli, I went on fields and hills of volcanic ashes or tufo. The water of the Lago de Tartari, on the left of the road, has a strong smell of the hepar sulphuris." Again, p. 200, "A volcanic hill in an amphitheatral form encloses a part of the plain over Albano, etc., and a flat country of volcanic ashes and hills to Rome. The ground about Rome is generally of that nature.' At p. 234, describing the route from Rome to Sienna as 'one of the most remarkable in Italy to a naturalist,' he says that the Ponte Molle volcanic tufo hills succeeded as far as Monte Rosi, behind which was a lava torrent; and somewhat further, a small lake, Lago di Monte Rossi, which seemed to have been an old volcano. Then followed a large lake, Lago di Vico, the sunk crater of an old volcano; and so on all the way to near Sienna. He elsewhere speaks of a subterranean connection probably existing between Vesuvius, Solfatara, Etna, Stromboli, and the ocean." Horæ Apoc. vol. 4, pp. 42–45.

How ominous are all these toeffect what Gibbon says was the universal expectation of the early christain church: viz., "the great catastrophe of Rome, when the country of the Scipios and Cæsars should be consumed by a flame from heaven, and the city of the seven hills, with her palaces, her temples, and her triumphal arches, should be buried in a vast lake of fire and brimstone." Hist., chap. xv. And if "Babylon," "that great city," means primarily the hierarchy—viz., the Pope, Cardinals, and Archbishops; and Rome itself, the literal city, perish as did Sodom while this great harlot hierarchy are assembled within its walls; would not the prophecy of Rev. xviii, concerning Babylon's utter ruin be accomplished? "By Ascension Day, of next year" (in 1867), said the Pope twelve months ago, "you will see celebrated in Rome such a Festival as has not been seen on earth since the days of Charlemagne." Edward About, the celebrated French author, said in 1859, "When the Pope sees his temporal power about being taken away, he will call on the whole Catholic world to come to Rome." The Catholic Bishops and Archbishops are already on their way to Rome; June 29th is at hand; the proud Festival of her who says, "I sit a queen," is coming. What next? Blessed is he that watches and keeps his garments, for the great King comes as a thief!

D. T. T.

Letters and Extracts.

From Helen Robertson.

Alexandria, Va., June 20, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—It is near school time and I can write only a few lines.

Inclosed find one dollar for a new subscriber, for six months. The paper is so good that I should be glad to get many subscribers; but it is best to be patient. Truth never was popular; still it has always stood and always will. Thank God, it is not dependent on our believing or not believing. It is good also to know that we have nothing personal to gain or lose. The truth is God's, the cause God's, and He will take care of it.

Our schools close Friday, next week. We have had many trials, still can look back and see that much good has been accomplished. How much fruit of our labor will be in the kingdom, the day will declare. We feel unprofitable servants, still hope to be saved by grace.

Your sister, longing for the restitution of all things.

Note by the Editor.—It will be seen by the foregoing that Sister Robertson's term among the freedmen closes this week. We lack a few dollars to complete paying her board for this month.

From Eld. John Craig.

Westford, Mass. June 17, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—May grace, mercy and peace be greatly multiplied to all the lovers of our blessed Life-giver and Redeemer; and may he give eternal life to you and all these dear brethren and sisters who have gladdened our hearts and brightened our future by their timely help and cheering words of comfort. The following have remembered me and mine in our extreme need. I do not give the amount received from each, fearing they might not approve of my doing so; but the names of those from whom we have had help, up to the 9th inst. James Crawford; a Br. and Sister in Boston; Br. Storrs; Br. Redhead, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Br. Thurber, N. Y.; Helen Robertson, Alexandria, Va.; from Westfield, Mass. (no name); Sister Burns, Wilbraham, Mass.; a check from Wm. H. Thorne, L. C. Thorne, & Geo. K. Carroll, New York; from Northwood Narrows, N. H., a Sister, Br. & Sister Watson & R. F. Foul; from Hartford, Conn. (no name); from a brother in Cincinnati, Ohio, who "owes his all to our Life-giver," (no name). O, thank the Lord, how happy I now feel, when I can get any little thing that is good and nourishing to my afflicted wife. She feels to praise God for the kind interest that is manifested in her behalf by the dear brethren and sisters; and for which they have, and shall have, our prayers and well wishes for their present and future welfare; hoping that, though it may be through much tribulation, we shall all enter the kingdom of God. I am yours, in much love.

From Randolph E. Ladd.

Springfield, Mass., June 23, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—I fully endorse the plan of sustaining our Br. Hanford as a proclaimer of the glad tidings, and pledge herewith $10, to be duplicated as often as it shall be necessary to keep him in the field the first year.

Let the brethren come forward with their pledges and we shall see there is no lack of funds to sustain such good and true men in the work of the Lord.

And is it not time, my brother, to pray earnestly to the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into the harvest?

You and I have passed the meridian of life, and we cannot work in the field with the energy and strength of former years. But I never saw and felt the necessity of labor as now; and I have consecrated and will consecrate my substance to aid those whom the Lord may call into the field. Honest-hearted, energetic, true men of God that love to work, that have the welfare of a perishing world at heart, are wanted. May the Lord thrust them out, is my prayer; and my income is pledged to sustain them. Who says Yea to this!

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

It is now fully arranged to have a session of Congress in July, enough members having signified their intention of going to Washington in response to the request of the President of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives. Their action will probably be confined to the modification of the Military Reconstruction Bill so that President Johnson shall not further interfere with its operation.

The Atlantic Cable recently broken, has been taken up and fixed, and is again in working order.

The liabilities of the firm of Frazer, Trenholm & Co., have been ascertained to exceed their assets by nearly a million pounds sterling. This firm was the principal backers of the South during the rebellion, and through their speculation they have come to grief.

Unfavorable accounts are beginning to come in relation to the growing crops. In Georgia and other parts of the South heavy storms have damaged the wheat and other crops; in some parts of New York the caterpillar has done great damage to the fruit. But all this is a trifle against the general prosperity promised.

The President's policy begins to work. Gen. Sickles has asked to be relieved of the command of the Second Military District, and has demanded an official inquiry into his acts, that he may answer the accusations of the Attorney-General.

The President has issued a proclamation informing the country that the treaty concluded between the United States and Russia, concerning Russian America has become a law.

The Clerk of the House Judiciary Committee is busily engaged in preparing a report of the evidence taken before that body on the question of the impeachment of the President, in expectancy of the assemblage of Congress in July.

A pardon has been granted to Gen. Longstreet, upon the written and personal application of numerous prominent individuals, including among the names appended to the request that of Gen. Grant, and other prominent officers of the army.

The people of Central City, Colorado, have subscribed $5,000 to be paid for Indian scalps "with the ears on," at the rate of $20 each.

FOREIGN.

The peace of Europe is once more threatened. Bismarck, it seems, has virtually united the whole of Germany, getting the Southern portion to accept representation in the Prussian Parliament, to take active part in all commercial matters. This is tantamount to a completion of the great unity sought by him of all Germany, against which Napoleon has striven with all his skill and duplicity. He therefore takes his discomfiture with a very bad grace, considering the honor done him by the friendly visit of the great Prussian statesman and his royal master.

In England two serious riots have taken place — one political, the other anti-papal. They were both put down, but they indicate a heated state of public feeling that may break out at any moment.

Again at Rome the long proposed blow has been struck by the revolutionary party there, to free it from papal domination. The attempt proved a failure. The people of the city did not respond to the rising, and the insurgents were all captured.

Official information was received at Washington confirmatory of the report that the trial of the Emperor Maximilian has been postponed. It is probable the proceedings of the Court Martial will not be resumed until after the fall of Mexico and Vera Cruz, and the arrival of the United States Minister. The feeling in the Liberal army, it seems, is strongly opposed to clemency, the soldiers being represented as clamorous for the blood of the fallen Emperor.

The news of the fate of Maximilian has produced a great impression on Napoleon. It is said that he had an interview with Gen. Dix, our Minister in Paris, and requested his intercession with our Government, so that no harm should be done him, and that he might be treated with the respect due to his rank.

The Austrian Government has granted an amnesty to all political offenders, including Kossuth.

Those who would reform the world, should begin by reforming themselves—by cultivating quiet and gentle habits—not speaking unless they have something to say, nor wasting other's vitality, as well as their own, by making unnecessary noise; but let them "garner their lives" for the work which all have given them to do.

"The Theology of the Bible."

Geo. W. Young has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. Halsted, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. Olmsted, Hartford, Conn.

Advertisements.

Meadville Theological School.

THE NEXT TERM begins September 2d, 1867. The Faculty of instruction consists of four resident and four non-resident Professors, and a Tutor. The object is to educate young men for the Christian Ministry. Beneficiary aid is given to indigent students. The tuition, use of library, and text books are free to all. The school was founded by the Unitarian and Christian denominations, but is open to all who believe in the divine origin of Christianity. The library consists of nine thousand five hundred volumes. Application may be made to Rev. A. A. Livermore, President of the Board of Instruction, Meadville, Pa.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE,
LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS,
GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
Office Hours, From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. NEW YORK.

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 Chambers St.,
NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(Room 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. Moral Depravity: by Geo. Storrs Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letter to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

Man's Nature and Destiny; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

The Atonement, by Geo. Storrs, and The Gospel Hope, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, New York.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our Catalogue our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance Bible vs. Tradition, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the Herald of Life, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are her by revoked.

Poetry.

NOT NOW.

Not now, my child—a little more rough tossing,
A little longer on the billows' foam,
A few more journeyings in the desert darkness,
And then the sunshine of thy Father's home!

Not now, for I have wanderers in the distance,
And thou must call them in with patient love;
Not now, for I have sheep upon the mountains,
And thou must follow them where'er they rove.

Not now, for I have loved ones sad and weary;
Wilt thou not cheer them with a kindly smile?
Sick ones, who need thee in their lonely sorrow;
Wilt thou not tend them yet a little while?

Not now, for wounded hearts are sorely bleeding,
And thou must teach those widowed hearts to sing;
Not now, for orphan tears are thickly falling;
They must be gathered 'neath some sheltering wing.

Not now, for many a hungry one is pining;
Thy willing hand must be outstretched and free;
Thy Father hears the mighty cry of anguish,
And gives his answering messages to thee.

Not now, for dungeon walls look stern and gloomy,
And prisoners' sighs sound strangely on the breeze—
Man's prisoners, but thy Saviour's noble freemen—
Hast thou no ministry of love for these?

Not now, for everlasting death is hastening,
And souls are perishing in helpless sin;
Jerusalem's bright gates are standing open—
Go to the banished ones and fetch them in!

Go with the name of Jesus to the dying,
And speak that name in all its living power;
Why should thy faltering heart grow chill and weary?
Canst thou not watch with me one little hour?

One little hour, and then the glorious crowning;
The golden harp-strings and the victor's palm;
One little hour! and then the Hallelujah!
Eternity's long, deep thanksgiving psalm!
—Selected.

Children's Department.

THE ORGAN-GRINDER.

The story which I am going to tell you begins in a large town on the bank of the Rhine, through whose streets the cold November wind blew furiously one night. It was only on an occasional passer-by that the street-lights sent out their feeble rays. There was one street in which the beggars lodge at night, but no lamps shone there. It was a narrow street, and it was with difficulty that anybody, except one who was acquainted with it, could find his way through it; for it had many turns, and was filthy in the extreme.

In a miserable little house there lay a man and his little son upon a straw cot. They lay very close together, for the night was cold. All the covering they had was an old soldier's coat, which was of thick cloth, and kept them quite warm. They were aroused from sleep by a loud knock at the door. A cross voice demanded entrance, and when the door was not opened immediately, the person who wished to get in struck the door with his fists, and also kicked it so violently that the man who was lying in bed feared it would be broken down. Not knowing what was the matter, he went to the door, and before opening it, asked the object of that late visit; while the little boy began to cry from fear.

"Open the door," shouted the coarse voice, "or I'll break it down!"

"Oh! you are Mr. Shaffer," replied the father of the child; and then he opened the door.

Mr. Shaffer, the rich young landlord, had come from a dancing party, and he had gone through this alley as the nearest way to his home. The organ-grinder was owing him some money for rent, for Shaffer was the owner of the house. Shaffer, thinking that he would find the organ-grinder at home in the middle of the night rather than any other time, sought that occasion to demand his back rent. He was intoxicated also, and it is a wonder that he was able to find the house, or even to get home at all. The organ-grinder asked him to wait three days until he could pay him his rent. But Shaffer replied that he had already waited four days, and that he would not wait any longer.

"Leave the place this very night," said he; "I will no longer allow such scamps as you to be in my house."

"Good man," replied the organ-grinder, "how can I go out on this cold night with my little boy? We have no place where we can sleep, and I will assure you that I have half enough money now to pay the rent."

"Half enough is not enough," replied Shaffer. "Leave at once—the sooner the better!"

The little boy began to weep bitterly, and creeping out from the midst of the straw on which he was lying, he came to the drunken man, and put his arms around him. But Shaffer had no sympathy, and pushed the child away from him. The child then ceased to cry, just as if an angel had mysteriously consoled it, and said: "Come, father, let us go; the guardian angel will be with us and will not leave us."

"May God forgive you!" replied the organ-grinder, weeping, as he took his organ from the dark corner, and waking up his little monkey, left the house.

"Where shall we go!" said he to his little boy, half bewildered at the thought of leaving a shelter on that bitter cold night.

"I don't know," said the child. "Come with me, father!"

The old man followed the little boy, and the two went along the cold alley barefooted. They reached the bank of the Rhine, and seeing the door of a warehouse open, they slipped in.

"You are a good child, my dear Hans," said the organ-grinder, as he put his instrument down in a dark corner, and covered the little monkey up with some straw-matting which he found there.

"O father!" said little Hans, "this is not the first time that I have spent the night here. Last week, when you were off in the country, I was afraid to sleep in the beggar's street, because the people are so bad there. I sat there on the bank of the river which flows close to this warehouse, and saw the sun go down, and my eye caught a glimpse of this house that stood empty, and I slipped in, and was not afraid, because right close by us is the landing-place of the steamboats, where two large lanterns burn all night long."

"Poor Hans," sighed the organ-grinder, "I must leave you early in the morning, in order that I may go into the distant villages and gain a little bread."

Hans did not know how poor a child he was, but yet he had a clearer view of God's preserving power than many children have. They had quietly fixed themselves for sleep when the church-clock struck one, and though it was past midnight, they had had but little sleep. At three o'clock in the morning they were still sleeping. A boat from the upper part of the river was coming down the Rhine, and landed its passengers. One gentleman had two heavy satchels in his hand, and wished to leave one near by for the night. Seeing the warehouse open, he went in, thinking he might find a good place to leave it until he could call for it in the morning. While walking into the warehouse he aroused the organ-grinder and his nervous little boy; for Hans could not sleep when he heard the slightest noise.

The traveller was startled when he found somebody in the warehouse, and did not know but that he was in danger. The organ-grinder told him that he was sleeping there for the night with his little boy, and that he would take care of his valise if he would leave it in his hands. The traveller had never seen him before, but he told him that he would trust him, and said in reply: "Your honor is at stake to take care of my valise."

"You need have no fear," said the organ-grinder, "I will take care of it. Though I was going to leave here very early in the morning, I will now stay, so that you can get your valise. When will you call for it?"

"At eight o'clock," said the gentleman.

"At eight o'clock you shall have it."

The next morning, when the hour arrived for the gentleman to come, he was quite prompt, and received his valise, and paid the organ-grinder three shillings for taking care of it. He then made some inquiries about the little boy. It turned out that this gentleman had charge of a large school, and it was natural that he should take an interest himself in children, wherever he went. The pale, thin little Hans appealed to his sympathies, and he volunteered to take him to Bavaria, to become an inmate of his school.

His father yielded to the proposition with great pleasure, and asked the gentleman if he would be permitted to come and see his child once every three months.

"Yes," said he, "and oftener too."

Two years passed by after this conversation, and Hans was one of the most industrious and apt scholars in all the school. His father also became connected with the institution, by this time, as bell-ringer.

Many years now elapsed, and Hans became a lawyer of considerable prominence, having earned sufficient means to buy a little property, and take his father to live with him. An important case was to be tried in Stuttgart, during the coming winter. It attracted great attention throughout the country, and the offence that had been committed was so bad that it created universal indignation.

A man had turned a young woman out of a house which he had rented to her, and she had fallen in the street and died within two blocks of the house that she had left. He was arraigned before a court to be tried for manslaughter.

The day of trial came; the prisoner was brought into court; and Hans, who had now become a prominent lawyer, was the prosecuting attorney, whose duty it was to take the part of the government against the prisoner.

The prisoner was none other than Shaffer, the man who had turned him and his father out of the house, one November night, many, many years ago! The case lasted some days, and when Hans was concluding his argument, he told his own experience, and the treatment that he and his poor father had received at Shaffer's hands. He carried his point. Shaffer was convicted and cast into prison. The people said, after the whole scene had come to an end: "Truly, retribution must come sooner or later."

No one is long safe in treating a fellow-being unkindly. The tongue that he would silence, and the body that he would drive from his door, will be almost sure to become a witness against him.

The enormous, the unutterable, the monstrous accumulation of all forms of evil called popery, originated in three very common evils. 1. A disposition among christians united in church fellowship to rule over each other, instead of leaving each other perfectly free. 2. A disposition to look at their own interests, instead of looking simply at the salvation of men, and the interest of Christ. 3. And thirdly a disposition in churches to control each other, instead of each church retaining its freedom and independence.

GOD'S PEOPLE SHOULD BE CHEERFUL.

There is but one thing, strictly speaking, that should occasion unhappiness, and that is sin, voluntarily persevered in. Sin brings unhappiness, and as long as we choose to be "servants of sin," we must and ought to suffer. But when we struggle manfully, does not the burden grow lighter? Are we not "strong in our weakness?" "saved through faith?" Sickness, poverty, disappointment, may and must bring suffering, to those whose hearts are fixed on the present and perishable things of time; but, of what real moment are they to those whose outstretched arms embrace eternity, and trust in Almighty power and goodness? We remember the words of Christ, "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him." We think of the perfect joy of such a promise, and looking upon time past and present, cannot refrain from exclaiming, "Man has sought out many inventions." Recall the idea of true life in earlier times. The sacrifice of every innocent enjoyment, an austere, unlovely, lonely life, the haircloth, the scourge, the penance, the weary pilgrimage! No question of happiness; they would have scorned it as a device of the "evil one;" no unfolding of natural affection, embracing all mankind; no love of the world of nature without, no reverence for the world of thought within. It was all debasement, all humiliation; man must be weary of life to be worthy of heaven; every true and innocent emotion stifled here, all reserved for heaven. Thus they learned Christ. Shall we so learn him? Their God was a "God of wrath." They saw him oftener in the storm than in the sunshine, in the whirlwind bringing destruction, than in the soft wind unfolding life and beauty. They forgot the "still small voice." Is not this the record of the life of many a canonized one?

With the memory of the great Reformer, Luther, we associate kindlier, more gentle thoughts. But where was the happiness in the doctrines of the dark and gloomy Calvin? Do we think of him as loving God because he was good, and not rather fearing him because he was mighty? And yet which of the twain has had the most influence? Alas for us! we know not what we want. Then the stern Covenanters of the Scottish Church, whose influence was so wide-spread and powerful; you admire their firm faith, their lofty courage. But now compare the gentle teachings of "the Saviour" with their fierce denunciations not only of the evil, (that was well,) but of the good that was in the world. We hardly think of them as having "joy in believing" Our Pilgrim Fathers, do you think of them as happy? "Tried, troubled, tempted" they were most sorely—and "sustained" too, they were. But do they not ever "groan in their earthly tabernacle," longing to be set free, because "the world is a weary place?" There is truth in all they say, but it is not all truth. Life is "a cross," a "struggle," a "strait and narrow way." But it is also a gift of God, and there is "a victory," "a crown," and "a laurel wreath." Christ says, "In this world ye shall have tribulation;" does he not add "in me ye shall have peace?" He was a "man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief;" but it was for us he sorrowed and grieved. Think you not that his communion with the Father brought to his perfect life happiness and peace? Paul, too, "groaned in his earthly tabernacle," but he tells us, "none of these things moved him;" and where was there ever a more cheerful disciple?

It seems almost childish to be advocating happiness, and yet we are, the happiness of a child of God. Any hope of enjoyment away from God and his love is folly. We confess ourselves weary of the spirit of complaint, of the heart and eye that go through God's world of light doubting and blinded to all its treasures of love and beauty. We long for Christians to be happy, and know of no reason why they should not be, "God their portion," what do they ask more?

Sin wearies them; let them remember that to attain perfection requires time. They must learn to "labor and to wait." Sorrow and bereavement are round them; yet while "grief tugs at the heart-strings" and tears fill their eyes, shall they forget that God has taken what they could not keep, but to restore it to them again, that He is their Father, they His children? If they truly believe it, can they be unhappy even when standing by the grave of buried hopes? Are their hearts heavy and the way long, and its end not seen, and their spirits faint? If they will but strive and trust and pray, will not God hear and answer them? "How can he murmur, who can pray?" We would ask not, why are not Christians happy? but, why should they ever be unhappy? It is in vain to say we were not meant to be happy. "Joy is the spirit's element." The whole visible world, redolent of life and beauty; the world of thought revealing our origin and our end; the world of affection, the invisible chain that links our spirits to heaven; are they not trumpet-tongued to tell us their mission, when we listen reverently to their thousand voices? He that made and careth for the flowers, that painted the violet blue and the rose red, to please the outward sense; the Maker of the bird—the emblem of happiness, with its glancing wing and thrilling song—the Creator and Preserver of every wondrous form, does he not care for our happiness? That he bade us call him Father, should silence every questioning thought. When our wills, subdued and submissive, are in unison with his, do not all things move in harmony?

God made us to be happy. Our sin, our selfishness, our artificial wants and ways separate us from the simplicity and faith of the Gospel. "To him that believeth, all things are possible." Let us then, in our hearts, believe that the path of right is the path of happiness; and whether it leads the way we would, or the way we would not, light from above shall beam on our footsteps, and "perfect peace" shall possess our souls.

ETA.

QUIETNESS AND PATIENCE.

Wherever God's laws operate, and operate freely, they work silently. There is no discord; no outcry; but with unruffled composure they move on harmoniously to the offices the Creator has assigned them. What a beneficent and beautiful influence is the dew—the dew that falls so gently, by night, from heaven! It descends noiselessly upon he dry and thirsty earth; the quickest ear cannot detect the sound, as the sweet drops gather themselves on the leaf and the grass-blade? yet their mighty agency renews and quickens and vivifies the whole domain of growing things. Stars, planets, worlds, move through their allotted spaces in the most complicated order, yet in undisturbed, undisturbing serenity.

If then, in the natural world the truest energy is the silent energy, much more so in the spiritual world. Virtue need make no noise; for it is the law of God, and all his laws are peaceful. It was the false company of Baal's prophets, that had to shout and make a hideous clamor that their god might hear them. Elijah, the true, was heard and answered, though he spake softly and in the accents of nature. No sound need go forth from the even tenor of the good man's life. It is only vice, only wickedness, only the breaking of the law, that makes disturbance. It is when passion strikes upon opposing principle, as the wind upon the forest oak, that there is a shock, a concussion, and a crash. Peevishness, quarrels, reproaching conscience, sensuality writhing in its remorse, shame, detected fraud, violated bonds, domestic infidelity, all sins, and their consequences—it is these that cause the friction—the wear and tear and waste of life; and were it not for these, all might go on as smoothly as the stars in their courses, as gently as the breath of spring in its invisible pathway over the hill-side. Goodness can afford to be silent. It does not need to make its way by advertising itself, and sounding a trumpet. It can leave those low arts to its enemies, and yet be the noblest power in the universe, and trumph everywhere.

Again, every human being should have his seasons of secluded silence, frequent and sure to him. He cannot live healthily without them. He cannot, without them, have clear-sighted views of his own course of life, the objects he is striving for, the interests of humanity, or any spiritual truth. He cannot well pray without them. He gets above the world by looking at it, a little while, from the distance of solitude. He removes himself from the whirl and play of selfish interests, where his perceptions are bewildered and misled. His eyes are set free from the glare of profit and of pleasure, and he sees vanities as they are, and weighs them in the right balance. He looks deeper than the surface then—he cannot help it—down into the solemn verities of eternity and God, and hears mysterious voices speaking of immortal realities. If he is under the spell of temptation, that delusion, for a moment at least, passes off; better purposes come back to him; he buckles on his Christian armor again, and returns refreshed to the conflict as if an angel from heaven had been strengthening him. It is like going to some shaded cavern, out of the fierce blaze of noon-day. To be constantly in the close atmosphere where a multitude breathe, diseases the mind, as it does the body. Our modern customs leave too little room, I am afraid, for thus replenishing the fountains of holiness. Society and business engross the waking hours, absorbing every active faculty into the vortex of their attraction. It needs a stern self-discipline to stand still, to be silent; to go apart and be alone.

The example of the Saviour is found, in this regard, to be peculiarly instructive. Not only is that beautiful language applicable to him, that declares him to be "meek and lowly of heart," and that "he shall not strive nor cry;" that "the bruised reed he shall not break, and the smoking flax he shall not quench;" but in the actual records of his life we find the truth of this description confirmed. Once and again it is written of him, that when the great themes of his mission pressed upon his mind, "he went up into a mountain apart to pray" and "was there alone." Repeatedly is it said of him, that he went aside privately into desert places. When the crowd thronged upon him, he passed out of the midst of it into retirement. Before his mighty work was begun, he was in the awful meditations of the wilderness forty days; and always he seemed to love the loneliness of Mount Olivet, and the quietude of Bethany, more than the thoroughfares of cities and the busy marts of Jerusalem. What a mild serenity characterized his eloquent instructions, too. Who can ever associate frantic passion with his heavenly teachings; raving excitement with that form of super-human dignity; fanatical and furious outcries with the tones of that celestial voice; or bitternes and anger even with his fearful sentences of holy indignation? All is calmness and tranquillity in the bosom of the Son of God. He uttered truth that flashed and struck upon the world like lightning; but he uttered it with the subdued and majestic earnestness of the divinest of prophets.

I have made these remarks on the subject of religious silence, and religious self-respect and delicacy, because they seem to me to be true, to be scriptural, to be important enough to be regarded both in our intercourse with our fellow-men, and in the culture of our own characters. They are confirmed, I think, by the dictates of sound sense, good taste, common courtesy, and Christian decorum.

HOMO.

THERE'S ROCK AT THE BOTTOM.

When my Willie was sixteen, he accidently dropped a valuable watch into the well. His father was absent from home, and without consulting me, he resolved to recover the treasure. Providing himself with a long-handled rake, he gave it in charge of his sister Jennie, two years younger, and bidding her lower it to him when he called, he stepped into the bucket, and holding fast by the rope, commenced his descent. The bucket descended more rapidly than Willie expected, and struck heavily against the side of the well; the rope broke, and he was thrown into the water.

"Mother, I shall be drowned!" was his despairing cry, which Jennie re-echoed with a wail of anguish. But I knew the depth of the water, and shouted to him as calmly as I could, "Stand upon your feet, Willie; the water isn't over four feet deep."

"But I shall sink in the mud," said the poor boy, still striving to keep himself afloat by clinging desperately to the slippery stones.

"No, Willie, there's rock at the bottom. Let go the stones and stand up."

The assurance of hard foundation and the impossibility of holding much longer to the slimy surface of the stone wall gave him confidence. He felt for the bottom, placed his feet firmly upon it, and to his great joy found that the water scarcely reached his shoulders. I sent Jennie into the house for a new, strong rope, and fastening one end securely, I lowered the other to be tied into the bucket, and we drew him up.

"Oh, mother!" said the dear boy, when he was rescued, "those were precious words to me, 'There's rock at the bottom.' I shall never forget them."

Two years after, in a commercial panic, my husband's property was swept away, and we were reduced to poverty. At first I bore bravely up. I did not prize wealth and luxury for my children. I chiefly mourned for my husband's disappointment and his crushed hopes, and strove by unflagging cheerfulness to chase away the gloom which settled so heavily upon him. I endeavored to assist him, not only by the utmost economy in household expenses, but by devising plans for the future. Willie and Jennie were old enough to earn their support, and even to assist in the education of the young children. I succeeded in putting them in the way to do this. I felt strong and brave, and wondered at my husband's despondency.

But new reverses came. The bank in which Jennie had deposited her quarter's salary, which might possibly meet our necessities, suddenly failed, and her money was lost. I could bear this too; she would soon be able to replace it. Next the school in which she taught was disbanded, and Jennie had to take much lower wages; but she still earned a little, and I said cheerfully,

"We will not murmur, half a loaf is better than no bread."

Next Willie's hand was disabled by an accident, and he lost his situation. My courage began to give way, but rallying myself for one effort, I resolved to brave the reproach of friends and the world's dread laugh, and seek remunerative employment for myself. It sorely tried my woman delicacy, yet it brought the needful aid, and I battled with my wounded sensitiveness and again screwed up my failing courage.

But the last blow came. Sickness suddenly laid me prostrate. "I shall give up now; we must sink together," was the language of my despairing soul.

"Dear mother," said Willie, when he heard my lamentation, "do you remember what you said to me when I was at the bottom of the well? I have often thought of it of late. I know we are in deep waters, but God has promised that they shall not overflow us. And is his word without foundation? Let us plant our feet on his promises and stand firmly. We cannot sink, for there's rock at the bottom.

I heard, and took the lesson to my heart. I saw that I had been clinging to the slippery stones of human strength and self-dependence, and when the providence of God bade me let go my hold, I was in despair. But the bank of heaven had not failed; and though I stood in deep water, it would not overwhelm me, neither would I sink, for "there's rock at the bottom."

So, from the chamber where pain and illness still hold me a prisoner, I send to each burdened and weary child of God who is tempted to feel that all is lost, the key-note of my new and grateful psalm. Whatever your sorrow or strait may be, plant your feet on the rock of ages and with me "thank God and take courage."

BISHOP SOULE ON DANCING.—Once in Alabama, in a parlor filled with an intelligent and refined company, while the Bishop was conversing with a group of friends, another group in a corner was discussing the innocence of modern dancing—most of them in favor of it. At length they agreed to leave it to the Bishop, and approaching, asked his opinion. (Silence.) "Well, I never saw dancing but once, and I must say I was pleased with it. (Great suspense and glances exchanged.) "I have been to Paris, and to London, and over most of our own land, but have never seen the exercise but once, (eager attention.) While I was in Paris, among other things, I saw several monkeys, taught to dance and keep time, and I must confess I was pleased with it, for I thought it became them very much."

VARIETIES.

SELECTED BY W. M.

A convention of Jews has been in session at Philadelphia, nearly every synagogue in the United States being represented. It was resolved to co-operate in the removal of the Jews of the Turkish provinces and the Barbary States to Palestine, and to encourage the development of agriculture and the arts there. A paper read by Rev. Mr. Leeser claimed that the Fallachiaux tribes of Abyssinia, and the people of the interior of China, are the lineal descendants of the lost tribes. As efforts are making to convert them to christianity, a messenger is about to be sent out by the universal Israelitish Alliance of Paris to counteract the movement.

The appropriations made by the Legislature of the State of New York in 1866 for objects and institutions under the control of different religious denominations have been published, and the statement is one which may well awaken the inquiry, Is the Roman Catholic the established religion of New York? The Roman Catholics comprise a comparatively small portion of the entire population of the State, but our Legislature in its munificent concern for the sustentation and propagation of Popery has actually given to the Roman Catholics more than nineteen twentieths of the charitable funds of the State.

One Robert Ottarson, who has been insane for 30 years, but recovered his senses on his death bed, died at Springfield, Pa, last week! On recovering he conversed intelligently about circumstances that transpired the day and week previous to his insanity, while the intervening space was a perfect blank in his memory.

That the advantages of caste privileges and the hardships of expulsion are beginning to lose their influence over the more enlightened natives of India, when they stand directly in the way of moral and intellectual advancement, is abundantly manifested by the many bers proceeding to Europe this summer to visit the Paris Exhibition.

Of Mr. Greeley's visit to Richmond to become one of the bail for Jefferson Davis, a newspaper of that city says that it is the first visit he has paid to the city for thirty-one years. In 1836 he passed through Richmond on his way to Warrenton, N. C., for the purpose of being united in matrimony to a lady, a school-mistress, born in the North, but then engaged in teaching in that place. He was married by a Richmond cl rgyman, and on Sunday last Mr. Greeley heard this clergyman preach in Richmond, and renewed an acquaintance begun so many years ago.

There is considerable excitement in the New Lebanon Shaker Family on account of the marriage of two of their members.

Vermont has but two distilleries, in the place of forty twenty-five years ago.

The effect of the late earthquake extended up the Mississippi valley as far as Dubuque, Iowa.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

ARTICLE I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Chris-alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a wo-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

JACOB GRIM, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. LEET, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
RUFUS WENDELL, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
LEONARD C. THORNE, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy for their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here. It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether n business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"GEO. STORRS,
BOX 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention s paid to all hse matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 179. | NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 3, 1867. | VOL. IV.—NO. 37.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

THE LANGUAGE OF PROPHECY.

One of the principal difficulties in the language of prophecy is the determination of the true limits of the literal, symbolical, and figurative. Perhaps we ought to commence a little earlier, and define the distinction between these three different styles. I would distinguish them thus: If the language is used in its proper sense, and the idea is conveyed immediately, this I understand to be literal; but though the language be used in its proper sense, if a mediate idea be conveyed, this I suppose to be symbolical; lastly, if the idea conveyed is immediate, but the language is not used in its proper sense, this I apprehend is figurative. For example:

When our Lord says, "Foxes have holes and birds have nests," "fox" is used in its proper sense, and there is no mediate idea; thus the language is literal. But when He says, "Go and tell that fox," the language is used in its proper sense, but there is a mediate idea; the idea of a fox arises in the mind, and then by reflexion the attribute of a fox is made characteristic of Herod. But when it is said the floods lift up their voice, or the deep utters its voice, the first idea that arises in the mind is of the ocean, but the language is used improperly; this is figurative.

Symbols are not suited for eloquence, being too cumbrous; the ideas are presented too slowly, which is the very reverse of figurative language; the metaphor in the one instance is applied to the noun, in the other to the adjective; the emotions are immediately roused by the figure, the ingenuity is first exercised in the symbol.

As it is admitted on all sides that no language is so literal as to be entirely devoid of figure, and no prophecies so strictly symbolical as to be without some passages purely literal, it might be supposed that the chief difference amongst students of prophecy, is mainly a question of degree as to how much is literal, symbolical, or figurative. This, however, is not at present the state of the case; that which was only a question of degree has diverged into two distinct and essentially different modes of interpretation, which the advocates of each opinion severally denominate literal and spiritual.

The literal or grammatical method is based upon the assumption that there are certain determinate ideas of things attached to certain words, and consequently, that the words are employed as the medium to convey the ideas which usage and custom have fixed and connected with those words. That it is, therefore, the duty of the interpreter to divest his mind of any preconceived ideas which may influence the meaning he would attach to the words, the ideas not being admitted as ingredients in fixing the meaning of the words, but, on the contrary, the words originating in the mind those ideas which usage has connected with them.

Those portions of the Scripture which are not prophetical convey the same definite ideas which usage has fixed in other writings. And when God has been pleased to reveal to man, and through the instrumentality of man, somewhat respecting future facts, why should we not judge of God's meaning and of the facts which he states, though still future, as we should of man's meaning and of the facts which he states, when writing a history of the past? There is no necessary difference as to the mode of conveying the ideas of the future or the past. A history of the past may be sung in numbers, a prediction of the future may be without poetic ornament of figure; the only essential difference between a record of what has been, and a revelation of what shall be, is the divine foreknowledge, "which vieweth things which be not as though they were."

I will give an illustration: When our Lord spoke of his rising from the dead, the disciples questioned "one with another what the rising from the dead could mean;" and again, when he had most explicitly declared that he was going to suffer, "they understood none of these things." The literalist contends that while these assertions of our Lord were still prophecies, the disciples ought to have received the words according to their literal and grammatical meaning, just as much as that now they have become matter of history, all Christians do so receive them; and that no preconceived ideas respecting Messiah's abiding for ever, should have so possessed their minds as to make the previous idea reflect back upon the meaning of the words, instead of permitting the words in the first instance to impress upon the mind those ideas they were calculated to convey.

The mode of interpretation is no doubt liable to abuse by the extreme of literality; a man not perceiving the difference between the supernatural and the monstrous, may argue that, because a prediction that a virgin should conceive, has been literally fulfilled, therefore there shall be a beast with seven heads and ten horns; but with the generality of mankind "intuitive consciousness will lead us to decide whether resemblance of properties or identity of substance be intended."

As to the less obvious distinctions between literal, symbolical, and figurative, there will be degrees of difference. "Some," says Waterland, "will fancy the plain and obvious sense, unreasonable and absurb;" the man that will fancy that which is plain and obvious to be unreasonable and absurd, must be himself deficient, either in reason or in faith; but we must not run into the error of supposing the obvious sense to be necessarily the literal sense; when our Lord calls Herod a fox, the sense is obvious, but not literal; some put a literal sense upon "This is my body," but there are many who deny that to be the obvious sense. Some have attempted rules for deciding between the literal, figurative, and symbolical. I think there is a certain tact and discernment in seizing the spirit of a passage which is superior to any rules that can rigidly be laid down.

The question of spiritual interpretation is more complicated; its advocates should more rigidly define its nature.

Often there is a covert assumption of superiority in the claim for spiritual interpretation, which surely is not correct; for if the literal be the mind of the spirit, that undoubtedly is the most spiritual: our invention is not more free from dross than God's truth. There is also an injustice in the assumption: "spiritual" is ostensibly opposed to "literal," but the real opposite to spiritual is carnal; thus the claimant to spiritual views, whilst apparently opposing literal, does covertly and unconsciously to his opponent, fix the stigma of carnal on that which is literal.

Sometimes spiritual appears opposed to material, upon which I will quote some excellent observations of Mr. Brown; he speaks of "some tincture of that morbid spiritualism which shrinks from the very touch of materialism, as though separation from it in every form would be the consummation of happiness. May not," says he, "the gnostic element—of the essential sinfulness and vanity of matter—be found lurking beneath it? Certainly, the glorified bodies, both of the Redeemer and the redeemed, derive their elements from the dust of the ground." And if it be no degradation for the Son of God to take it into his own person. . . .if the dust of this ground is capable of becoming a spiritual and glorious meet vehicle for the perfected and beautiful spirit, the sharer of its bliss in the immediate presence and the instrument of all its activities in the service of God and the Lamb, there can be no essential sinfulness and vanity in matter.

I wish I could always approve as fully of Mr. Brown's sentiments; but among the many fallacies which lurk under the term spiritual, as describing a peculiar mode of interpretation, one of its most dangerous forms is, as far as I know, peculiar to Mr. Brown. He supposes that the inspired prophets use an expression in one sense, but that the equally infallible apostles apply another meaning to the passage. If this be a sound canon of interpretation, instead of deriving any aid from the New Testament in fixing the direct and immediate scope of the Old, it would be calculated to mislead us; instead of the context in the Old assisting us in discovering the recondite sense of the quotation in the New Testament, it would blind us.

Sometimes the spiritual amounts to nothing more than the undefined. "A spirit passed before my face". . . . "It stood still, but I could not discern the form thereof: an image [was] before mine eyes." Sometimes the spiritual means the allegorical, analogical, or anagogetical. The spiritual principle is, in fact, multiform, for its real intention and object is evasion. If the literal system is adopted, certain interpretations must be admitted: and this constitutes the essential difference between the two modes; in the spiritual method, the preconceived ideas form an ingredient in fixing the meaning of the words, instead of the words being the means of suggesting, or channel for conveying, the ideas.

Thus the real intention of spiritual interpretation and that which is its essential characteristic, is its real danger, for the same principle may be applied to the setting aside of any truth. There is, in fact, an end put to "the assurance of understanding," for the certainty of interpretation is derived from some necessity of signification, and the necessity of signification in words consists in the connection between the words and ideas which has been fixed and established by usage and custom.

"There cannot be a doubt, that, in proportion as sacred hermeneutics come to be more severely studied, and perversions of the word of God hereditarily kept up under the specious garb of spirituality and a more profound understanding of Scripture, are discovered and exposed, the necessity of abandoning such slippery and untenable grounds will be recognized, and the plain, simple, grammatical, and natural species of interpretation adopted and followed." Henderson, Minor Prophets, p. x.

DEFINITIONS.—The study of unfulfilled prophecy is divided into two distinct heads. One, the doctrine concerning the future; the other, the order and series of those events which occur during this dispensation as introductory to the next.

Passing events leave a very different impression upon the mind according to what the expectation of the final issue may be; they receive their hue from the clouds in the distant horizon. Those who expect the prevalence of the Gospel, see in the efforts of Missionary and Bible Societies, as in the rosy streaks of morn, the dawning of a day, lovely and serene; whereas, others, who believe the year of the redeemed will be ushered in by the day of vengeance of our God, discern that the sky is not only red but lowering, and they expect "a day of darkness and of gloominess, of clouds and thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains." Hence, as the development expected has so great an influence upon the aspect of events which are in progress, the consideration of the end should be the first in order, as it is in importance.

[To be Continued.]

"BEHOLD! HE COMETH WITH CLOUDS."

It is evident that he will come as man; clothed indeed in the perfection of our manhood, but still its reality. It does not require much searching into scripture to establish this. In the first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles we are told that when Jesus had spoken his last words to his disciples, "while they beheld, he was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven, as he went up, behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which said, ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." "This same Jesus," then, who had arisen from the grave, who had been crucified, who had dwelt and ministered among the sons of men; who had been born of a human mother in Bethlehem;—this same Jesus, shall most surely come again "in like manner" as he went. Descending instead of ascending; the clouds unfolding to reveal his manhood, instead of closing round about to hide it from our sight.

But let us follow the Almighty Saviour by the steps of his descent. "The Man Christ Jesus quits the throne of intercession at the right hand of heaven, and advances toward the earth. The glory of the Father's majesty surrounds him. The holy angels bear him company. Thus, to an appointed place in heights above the world, he makes descent, and there a pause ensues. The trumpet sounds in the hearing of the dead in Christ, that they arise from vaulted tomb, and earth and stream, and sea, to meet him. It sounds moreover in the hearing of the living saints, that their frail mortal put on immortality, and that they ascend to be forever with the Lord. And they obey the summons.

But while the multitudes who have arisen and ascended to their Lord, are in his presence, what shall follow? Surely eye of man hath never seen, nor ear heard, nor heart conceived—the joy, the bliss, the glory! O think of the re-union of those loving ones the grave has so long severed! Husbands and wives, parents and children, friends and friends, united now to live and love forever! No more to shed a tear! no more to doubt, or sin, or suffer! No friend to cause another pang of grief to friend! The name of enemy unknown! All perfect peace, rest, joy, praise, glory, everlastingly. And then the brightness! O, the brightness of the hosts of heaven! those holy angels, close attendants on the King of kings, each one so beautiful, so good, so full of love. To have such beings for companions! To converse with them of all the marvels of redeeming grace! To hear their words declare the praises of their Lord and ours! How wonderful! But then again—more glorious still—the vision of the great Almighty King! "The King in his beauty!" "The altogether lovely!" To gaze upon his glory now, would be beyond endurance. We cannot look upon the face of God and live. But then we shall have power to look upon him, and beholding him arrayed in all the brightness of the Father's glory, shall have grace to praise him as the holy angels do, and love him with a love which those alone can exercise who once sin-ruined have been redeemed and saved.

But let us glance for a moment at ourselves as we shall be when thus we look upon, and love and praise him. Ourselves—in new array—how changed! how wholly changed! this frail corruption having put on incorruption, and this weak mortal, immortality, no longer shall we bear the stamp of sin, or its sad consequence, but we shall be like the Lord. It is not said we shall be like the angels, but we shall be like the Lord—like Christ! washed in his blood, clothed in his righteousness, made holy by his Spirit, complete in him. Not only so, but more—we shall be glorified together with him in his own transcendent glory. "Sons, moreover, in his Sonship; Kings, in his Kingship; Priests, in his Priesthood." O what a blissful sequel to the toils and griefs of earth! Can we now see our title clearly to this blessed state? Would this glory be our portion if the Lord were to come now? If not—O why not? Not because of any want of love or grace on God's part. Far from it; for there is a full and free salvation through the faith of Jesus offered to each sinner upon earth. Christ died for all, and God wills all men to be saved. O search the scriptures; see if such a thing can be as a believer in Christ Jesus lost. Nay, you will but search in vain. It cannot be, thank God. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so is the Redeemer lifted up, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." Let us believe, then, fellow travellers to eternity, believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and we shall live, yea, life is ours, a life which cannot end, it is the present—the immediate—portion of the weakest child of faith."—Rev. J. G. Gregory.

CONVOCATIONS AND COUNCILS OF THE CATHOLIC CHURCH.

The immense convocation of Catholic priests in Rome at present to assist at the eighteenth centenary of St. Peter's martyrdom naturally makes the subject of the councils and convocations of the Catholic Church one of interest. The first great councils were epochs in the history of Europe, and their deliberations were regarded with the deepest attention by all classes, whether within or without the pale of the Catholic Church. It would be impossible to point out a society on history's page in which more assemblies have been held, combining in them everything distinguished by science and judgment. General, national, provincial councils and diocesan synods are to be met with on every page of the history of the church. Such an example held up during centuries to the view of the people of Europe had exercised considerable influence on all questions as well as that of religion. In the first ages of christianity councils were much more easily assembled than now, because the church was less numerous, and because the united powers accumulated on the heads of the emperors enabled them to call together a sufficiently great number of bishops to make at once such an impression by their deliberations as that nothing more was required than the assent of the rest.

A council, generally speaking, means, in the ecclesiastical sense of the word, an assembly of bishops legitimately convoked to determine questions relating to the faith, rites and discipline of the church. Councils are either provincial, national or general, according as they are composed of the prelates of a province, a nation, or of all christendom; and their jurisdiction is of corresponding extent. We shall speak only of the general or ecumenical councils. These are councils summoned by the Pope and consisting of all the bishops of christendom, and are designed to adjudge questions of schism and heresy, belief and discipline, which affect the universal church. The first eight General Councils were convoked by the christian emperors, at the request or with the consent of the Pope, because the church did not then extend beyond the limits of the Roman empire. Bishops and their representatives alone have a judicative right in ecumenical councils, although the privilege has often been extended to abbots and the generals of monastic orders. The Doctors of the church and the lower orders of the clergy have only a consultative voice, if they be invited and participate in the deliberations of the council. The Pope in person or by legate presides over the council. In some of the early Eastern councils the emperors presided only in an executive or protective capacity. The decision is usually according to the number of votes cast, although in the council of Constance, Italy, France, Germany and England each voted separately.

General councils do not create new dogmas, but interpret and declare what was originally contained in scripture and tradition, and according to catholic belief are infallible in matters of faith. Their infallibility, however does not extend to questions of discipline, history, politics or science, nor even to the grounds of their decision, nor to collateral observations. The disciplinary ordinances are usually termed canons (canones) and the decisions concerning doctrines, dogmas (dogmata). In the Council of Trent, however, the latter were called canons and the former styled capita or decreta.

The Catholic Church recognizes nineteen general or ecumenical councils. The Council of Jerusalem, held by the apostles A.D. 50 was the first. Then followed the first of Nice, in Bithynia, A.D. 325; first of Constantinople in 381; the first of Ephesus in 431; that of Chalcedon in 451; the second of Constantinople in 553; the third of Constantinople in 680; the second of Nice in 787; the fourth of Constantinople in 869; the four councils of Lateran, at Rome, in 1123, 1139, 1179 and 1215; the first and second of Lyons in 1245 and 1274; that of Vienne, in Dauphiny, in 1311; that of Constance in 1414; that of Basle in 1413 (till its dissolution by the Pope), and that of Trent in 1545. The Councils of Pisa in 1409, of Florence in 1439, and the fifth of Lateran in 1512 are also regarded by some as ecumenical. The Greek Church receives as authoritative the decisions of only the first seven General Councils. The Protestant Churches generally deny the full authority of any of them, and esteem only as ecumenical the six which directly followed the Apostolic Council of Jerusalem.

Ecumenical councils have been described by Catholic writers as "the Parliament or States General of the Church, assembled by the authority and under the presidency of the sovereign," for to the sovereign Pontiff alone belongs essentially the right of convoking General Councils. This does not, however, exclude the moderate and legitimate influence of temporal rulers. The number of prelates present at an ecumenical council varies a great deal. There were one hundred and eighty bishops at Constantinople in 381, one thousand at Rome in 1139 and ninety-five only in the same in 1512, including the cardinals.

The five apostles, Peter, James, John, Paul and Barnabas, with the priests and faithful, constituted the first council known as the Council of Jerusalem. It was called for the purpose of deciding on the obligations of pagan converts and abolishing the distinctions between Jews and Gentiles.

The Council of Trent opened its deliberations December 13, 1545, and was convened by the Sovereign Pontiff Paul III., for the purpose of refuting the doctrines of the reformation. In the first session there were, besides the cardinals, but four archbishops, twenty-two bishops, five or six heads of orders, with a great number of doctors, both secular and regular. It lasted eighteen years, during the successive reigns of four popes. Three patriarchs, twenty-one archbishops, one hundred and sixty-eight bishops and seven generals of orders, were present at the last session of this council.

A convocation of prelates like the present one in Rome differs from a general council in many respects. First, an invitation is sent to each prelate instead of an order; again, the object is not to decide on matters of faith and discipline, but to assist in the celebration of some great Catholic event, such as the canonization of martyrs or the centenary of the martyrdom of the first Pope. The conference of one hundred and ninety-two prelates at Rome in 1854, which proclaimed the dogma of the Immaculate Conception, was not a council; but judging from the importance of their deliberations and their decision on this grave point, it would seem as if a convocation may be resolved into a council at the summons of the Pope. The preparations for the present convocation at the Eternal City are of the grandest kind, and St. Peter's, the greatest of all temples, the imperishable handiwork of Michael Angelo, will be illuminated with myriad lights, shedding an effulgence over the tomb wherein repose the earthly remains of the first Pope. The festival will take place on Saturday, and the services and ceremonies on Sunday will be magnificent and imposing. There are already four hundred Catholic prelates assembled in Rome, and some thousands of priests. From every part of the world flock the faithful, all eager to be present on this eventful occasion. The convocation may not be without fruit in other respects than a religious ceremony, for we understand from reliable authority "that the Pope's object in convoking a council of all the bishops at the canonization is to procure the sanction of the church to an arrangement with Italy. The proceedings will be opened by an address to the Holy Father from the bishops of the whole world, referring to Italy in conciliatory language, and the Pope will thus be authorized to take the step which his heart has long prompted, but from which he has been forcibly kept back."

The bishops of the United States who have already arrived are made the recipients of the most particular attentions.—N. Y. Herald.

"THEN SHALL THE END COME."

The end of what? Thank God, the end of what is only evil; the beginning of what is only good. Not the end of this earth, for this earth is never to be destroyed; on the contrary, it will be snatched from the devil's usurping grasp, and placed in the holy hand of Jesus, and it will be one of the loveliest orbs that sparkle in the everlasting sunshine, and will be vocal with richer music than any orb besides; and sisterhoods of worlds will gaze through everlasting ages upon this once weeping, weary, but then regenerated and right royal earth, and they will say with no feigned lips, "Come, let us rejoice, for our sister earth was lost and is found, she was dead, but is now alive." What, then, will there come the end of? There will come the end of preaching; there will be no more ministers no more preachers, no more sermons; for the whole universe will be a whispering gallery, and all voices will be song, and the key-note of every song will be Christ once crucified, now crowned and glorified forevermore. "They shall no more teach every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord." There will be the end of sacraments. There will be no more baptism, for every heart will be regenerate; there will be no more eating of this bread and drinking of this cup, for we shall see Christ, and the Lord's Supper is to continue only "till I come;" but when He comes it will cease to be. We shall no more see through a glass darkly, but face to face. There will be the end of the aches that make the brow throb, and the greater aches that make the heart break; the end of sickness and sorrow, and sighing, and sin and death; the end that inaugurates that blessed state, the description of which the poet Burns said he never could read without tears, when it tells us, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are all passed away." There shall be no more of these. And there will be no more prayer. Pray while the time for prayer lasts. The prayer we now repeat, "Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name, thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven; give us daily bread, forgive us our trespasses, lead us not into temptation," will be then transposed out of this minor into the major and the more glorious key of praise; and we shall not then pray with bowed knee the Lord's prayer as earnest suppliants, but we shall stand before the Lamb with harps in our hands, arrayed in white robes, and we shall sing the Lord's Praise thus: "Our Father, which art in heaven, hallowed is thy name; thy kingdom is come, thy will is done on earth even as it is done in heaven; our living bread and daily bread are all given us, and our sins and trespasses are all forgiven us; we are led no more into temptation, we are delivered from all evil; and thine, now as then, always and forevermore, is and will be the kingdom, and the power and the glory;" and the "Amen" will be as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunders, and as the voice of a great multitude praising God.—Last Warning Cry, pp. 199–201.

THE SUBSTANCE OF THE GOSPEL.

What a happy thing it is that the gospel comes into so little compass! Often have I felt this when visiting the sick and the dying. When I have found the mind incapable of vigorous, extensive or continous thought, how thankful I have been that the gospel is so short and so simple; that the elementary truths which give peace to the conscience and hope to the heart, can be stated in so few words. There is divine wisdom and divine kindness in this. There are short sentences which contain essentially all that a sinner needs to know to give him a sense of pardon and confidence toward God: "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." "This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners, even the chief." "This is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life; and that life is in his Son. He that hath the Son hath life; he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." These, and others of a like description, are precious sentences. They are what the dying "man of God," Dr. McAll, so emphatically denominated the core, the very core of the gospel. Connected with this is the striking fact that in the hour which is common to all—the hour of nature's last conflict and most pressing exigency, the hour when the mind is shut up to one point, and that point peace with God and hope for eternity—that in that hour all minds come to be so very much on a level in regard to what imparts their confidence. It is the same truth in all its simplicity that gives it to the greatest as well as to the least, and to the least as well as the greatest. It is most instructive and interesting to see how minds of the largest grasp and mightiest power, when they come to this hour of trial and of final decision, when passing through the valley of the shadow of death, anticipating eternity, and conflicting single-handed with the last enemy, have recourse to the same simple elements of divine truth that are the springs of peace to the very weakest of the "babes in Christ." I have been struck with this in the biographies of some the most distinguished of our modern divines. Look at the terms in which they express the ground of their everlasting hopes. Although, from previously knowing the character of their minds, you of course conceive thoughts of a higher order associated with those terms, and although at times there may be coruscations of brilliant sentiment emitted, that indicate the undying light within, yet substantially they are the very same in which "poor Joseph" expressed the ground of his trust: "It is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners;" and why not Joseph? What dying sinner can say more? I mean not the minds are equal—that were folly; but that, as the greatest and the least stand on the same ground of condemnation, they must stand also on the same ground of acceptance; so that he who has traversed the whole round of theological learning, has explored its depths and scaled its heights—has argued with metaphysical acumen, and illustrated with matchless eloquence all its points; has read and has written volumes upon volumes, when he comes to the test of a dying hour, is shut up to all the simplicity of the "faithful saying." This is what he needs, equally with the least; and this is what the least, equally with him, enjoys. And the perfectly childlike submissiveness with which master minds in Israel have avouched their reliance on the rudimental elements of the truth, is among the marks of its divinity. It shows that, in the one point of need, in which all are alike, and which in all cases equally, the gospel is intended to meet, the adaptation of means to the end, is perfect.—Dr. Wardlaw.

"If I had thought it was Jesus."

A few days since a sermon was preached in D——, from the text, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me." The preacher set forth that Christ Jesus, the Lord, is represented in all his disciples. That if a man strike a disciple the Lord feels the blow. That if injustice makes even the humblest christian weep, tears of sorrow course down the Saviour's face. On the other hand, that whatever kindness is bestowed on a disciple, is all the same as if bestowed directly upon the Lord himself. Assuming this to be the doctrine of the text, the preacher exhorted his hearers to visit the poor in the spirit of liberality and kindness that would actuate them as if it were the Saviour who received their benefactions in person.

After the service was closed, a gentleman whose liberality is known in all the churches, remarked:

"A few days since I carried to a poor christian woman a comforter, warm, but well worn, and two loaves of bread—good bread, but a little stale. The weather was very cold, and the comforter was gratefully received. The poor woman was hungry, and the bread was better than she usually obtained. But while listening to the sermon to-day, I thought that had I reflected that it was Jesus I was visiting, in the person of one of his disciples, I would have taken a new comforter and fresh loaves of bread."

The remark is worthy of remembrance by christians when about to go on an errand of mercy, or perform a deed of good will to man.

When the wise men came from the East to visit the new-born Lord of the universe, they brought gold, frankincense and myrrh—rich and costly gifts. Now, we cannot visit the holy manger; we cannot pour costly ointment upon the Saviour's head; but God has placed it in our power to perform services equally acceptable to him. He sits in many a lonely hut with the children of misfortune and misery, and all our visits to him there, and all our benefactions, will be recorded upon his holy heart, and the record will be imperishable.

On the other hand, if any man hopes to secure the favor of God by professions of personal piety, while he is guilty of acts of cruelty, injustice, or neglect—even though the persons suffering thereby may be the least of all human creatures—let him read the concluding passages of the twenty-fifth chapter of Matthew. He will find the grandest and the most forcible exposition of the nature, necessity and importance of practical religion ever recorded in any book.—Religious Telescope.

More Nice than Wise.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterians, recently held, had up before it the case of a minister of their denomination for publishing in a book that christian ministers "are bound to receive into church fellowship every one who gives evidence that he has saving faith in Christ," though he may not be ready to give assent to every article in the standards of the church. This was regarded as conflicting with the discipline of the United Presbyterian Church.

Mr. McCune, the accused, had been tried by Synod and acquited of the charge. An appeal was taken from the Synod "to the General Assembly, and after a protracted and excited discussion, it was decided by a large majority to sustain the appeal, and censure Mr. McCune as guilty of determined opposition to one of the principles of the Church, and guilty of fundamental error in respect to church fellowship. Presbytery was also directed "to admonish him that he must respect the authority of the Church in this matter and abstain from diversive courses, and follow the things that make for peace."

"Hallowed be Thy Name."

If the incommunicable name has by diligent research been found out, a familiar use of it as appears to me must surely incur the Divine displeasure. How impertinent for a child to call its parents John or Mary. How infinitely more impertinent for a mortal man to call our Father in heaven by his name. A liberty never taken by even Jesus himself. I find among some extracts from ancient rabbinical writings this remark, "He shall have no part in the world to come who pronounces the name in the exact form in which it is written." The Jews, I believe, are reverently cautious in this respect, using the name in its form Jehovah (the permanent one), but never (I think) in its other form. The Saxon word God, or good (the Good One) if reverently used will do. J. A. P.

Books, Pamphlets, and Tracts can be had at the Editor's residence; of Geo. W. Young, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 98 White St.; and likewise at 87 Park Row, Room 40.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, JULY 3, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

"The Wills."—The second sermon on this subject, by Br. Day, we have not received, or it has been mislaid so that we cannot find it; hence the subject is not continued this week.

"Eternal Torments, Annihilation."—The article on this subject last week was the conclusion of the letter of Rev. Samuel Bourn, commenced the week previous.

Immortality as an offered benefit, through Jesus Christ, is the most powerful motive to a life of holiness, and devotion to God, that can be thought of. This motive the notion of inherent immortality entirely removes from man, and thus deprives him of a mighty influence for good. This consideration writes condemnation on the popular view of immortality, and makes it justly chargeable with being the betrayer and destroyer of men. It wrests from their hands the most powerful engine that infinite wisdom has provided to lead men to "seek for honor, glory, immortality, eternal life." Can any reflecting mind believe that God is the author of a doctrine whose legitimate result is to abrogate all the promises of a future and endless life? Can we believe that God has sworn by himself that he has "no pleasure in the death of the wicked," and yet has so constituted man that his death is an impossibility? What mockery thus to address man, if he is, by his constitution deathless. Let the truth be proclaimed that deathlessness is an object to be secured and that it can only be secured by a resurrection, and a resurrection can only be obtained through Jesus; and hence a union with him is essential to this end; which end is only arrived at by having our "fruit unto holiness." Such is God's order to arrive at immortality. Let men beware of all attempts to "climb up" some other way, to an endless life, than that which the King of glory has opened; for all such attempts will prove a failure. "There is none other name given under heaven whereby men can have life" except the name of Jesus. All the honor of bestowing eternal life or immortality must be given to him, or we are a "thief and a robber."

A New Proof of Inherent Immortality.

This is an age of discovery. In a Philadelphia paper there is the following announcement:

"Colonel Forney has gone to Halifax, the English carpet-weaving town, and he says, 'to see mere machines performing the work of human beings, assorting delicate threads, producing the most beautiful colors' is 'another proof of the immortality of the soul.'"

There, is not that a new proof of a soul entity, which is immortal? We suppose the "machines" must have immortal souls! How else could they act so wisely and discriminate so as to "assort" so nicely? Truly, we shall doubtless soon learn that these "carpet-weaving machines" are possessed of undying souls. The sun, the moon, and the stars, also, must have the same; else, how could they run their courses so regular through so many thousand years?

Now, we judge, the fact that "mere machines" can be made to perform their work so well without immortal souls, proves that God can make machines to perform more wonderful works without their possessing immortality. He can make machines and endow them with self-propelling powers for their own benefit, which, if used under the divine instruction, he may see fit to bestow on them, as a free gift, perpetual existence; but if they will not accept his teaching and harmonize with his will, he may cut short that existence, and blot them from being.

Such we believe to be the divine purpose in relation to man; and that Col. Forney's inference, from the fine machinery he saw, is about as philosophical as if he had said it was "proof" man is a self-existent being; or, that there is no other God but man himself. When men can invent a machine to keep themselves from dying, then we may give them "credit for inherent immortality. Till then, their boasts of such a possession are vain, and the result of that pride which said, "I will be as God." An unholy ambition to be independent of God lies at the foundation of all those attempts to prove man inherently possessed of immortality. It is to those "who by a patient continuance in well doing seek for honor, glory, and immortality," that God will give "eternal life." All others will come short of immortality, and "utterly perish in their own corruption" and pride.

The following is a specimen of the pride and denunciations of those who hold inherent immortality. May the writer live to be ashamed that he ever gave utterance to such sentiments. He says:

"The immortality of the soul is an acknowledged principle of christian theology, a cardinal feature of religion, a firmly established truth. This sublime truth is the base and battlement of the stupendous structure of christianity. Every page of holy writ overflows with this great truth, and if there be no immortality of the soul, the Bible becomes a falsity, Jesus Christ an impostor, and God the Father a profound myth. This doctrine of immortality cannot be impeached, and the united thunders of infidel sophistry have ever been powerless to scathe or mar its beauty, lessen its magnitude, or diminish its power."—Corn Sab. Rec.

Our readers will see that this writer deals in wholesale assumptions. If "every page of holy writ overflows with this great" lie, will he please furnish one text—always excepting "Ye shall not surely die"—where such an announcement is made? Where does the Bible once say, "The soul is immortal?" Give us one "Thus saith the Lord" for it. Till then the doctrine is "impeached," tried, condemned and rejected by "holy writ" itself. "The soul that sinneth it shall die;" and all the "sophistry" of "orthodoxy" can never reverse the decree of Jehovah thus emphatically proclaimed. Who now are the infidels? Think of it: "I am right, or Christ is an impostor!" Alas, for such!

The Second Death.

"The second death" is a phrase which denotes a death from which there is no recovery—no revival into life again; and has no such sense in Scripture as that of dying twice; and hence the phrase can never be claimed in proof that the wicked dead will live again: they die in their sins—soul and body; or all the life they have perishes by the judgment of God, and "they shall never see light"—they are "like the beasts that perish." See Psa. lxix. throughout. They die a death from which there is no recovery, and hence called the second death.

Prof. C. F. Hudson, in his work, "Debt and Grace," page 178, gives various examples of the use of the phrase "second death," among early Jewish writers. One of those writers says, "We learn from this place (Numb. xiv. 37) that they died the second death." Let us see how that "place" reads: it is as follows, "Even those men that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the Lord."

Does this text sustain the notion that these men died a second time, and after a resurrection from death by the plague, by which they "fell in the wildernes?" Surely a mind perfectly open to conviction must see, the phrase "second death," used by this Jewish writer, means no such thing as twice dying: it is just the reverse, indicating that to die in one's sins is to die the second death, because, "they shall not live in the world to come"—"they shall die the second death so as not to enter into the world to come," as other Jewish writers express it. The writer saith of those wicked men who brought up the evil report of the land, "They died the second death:" not, they shall die it, or they will die it; but "they died" it. The event was past, whatever the prase imports, and therefore cannot embrace life from the dead to die a second time.

In a note on page 178, Prof. Hudson quotes from Julius Africanus (A. D. 221), that "Adam being one hundred and thirty years old begot Seth: and living thereafter eight hundred years he died, to wit, the second death." Did Adam have a resurrection to die the second death? Or, is it not evident this writer counted Adam's death "the second death," because there was no ground to hope he ever could have a resurrection into life; his dispensation ended without having ever made any provision for his personal recovery; and his doom to death was final. Such seems to be the fact: his death was penal, or the punishment justly due him for his sin.

Hence it is manifest, the "early Jewish" writers understood by the second death, a death which excluded a revival into life by a resurrection—"They understood by this death exclusion from life." Dr. Adam Clarke states in his notes on John vi. it was the opinion of the Jews, their fathers who died in the wilderness would never have a resurrection; they were dead past a revival. The doctor did not agree with them in opinion, but that does not alter the fact that such was the Jewish belief.

This truth stands out distinctly, in view of all the facts, that the second death is not dying twice, but is so dying as to have no revival from death. No man "suffers" a penal "death for Adam's sin," though such a sentiment has long been maintained. God "subjected" Adam's posterity to death, not as a penalty, [illegible] but as part of their discipline in their [illegible] condition, with the promise of resurrection from it, to another and better life, if they improved their day of trial; otherwise their death was to become penal to themselves; not by Adam's sin, but by their own; so that they are "twice dead," or have died the second death, by dying in their own sins; and hence death holds them eternally in his power: there is no revival of them into life at the day of resurrection. Not one text from Genesis to Revelation affirms that an unpardoned sinner shall ever live again from the dead. Of this fact we are just as thoroughly convinced as that the phrase "immortal soul" is never found in the Bible. This truth we shall maintain in our writings, and in preaching, go where we may; nor do we expect to abandon it, unless we abandon the whole theory of "Life only through Christ."

The members of Christ's body have a life union with him and in him. They have the Holy Spirit of God dwelling in them; by which they have become "partakers of the divine nature:" a new nature, in embryo, is implanted in them, which forms the basis of the new creation from death; and though their animal life is extinct by dying, their divine life remains untouched by death's power, they "sleep," but it is "in Jesus," to wake at his call. That new life is the "main spring": it never dies, though for a season it "is hid with Christ, in God," but will in due time manifest itself.

Let the wicked, and heartless professors, cry out, if they will—"Let us eat and drink for to-morrow we die." If they are willing to die like brutes, "let them take their course, and choose the road to death." "If there is no resurrection" that can be obtained, then they do well to "live like brutes." But if we may live again, and live eternally, by him who is "the resurrection and the life," is there any occasion for any man's saying—unless he is a brute—that we teach or countenance the doctrine of the Epicurean? No; the imputation is a slander. "Fight the good fight of faith; lay hold on eternal life." That is our cry, as it was the cry of the apostle. He that will not do it, "shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."—John iii. 36.

Will the Wicked Dead be Revived?

It is urged by the affirmative of this question that Math. x. 28, and Lk. xii. 5, together with the idea that the wicked are to be "cast into a furnace of fire," is proof that the dead wicked will live again. In response, we say:

Usually nothing was cast into the literal gehenna that had life. But whatever was the state it was in at the time, it was so dissolved that its reconstruction was impossible; hence to cast into gehenna became a figure of speech to denote destruction without recovery. Jesus taught his "friends" not to fear men who might deprive them of the present life but could not prevent their living again—men could not cast them into gehenna; or prevent their reorganization; but God could, for he only had that power: therefore, fear him and not men. The fear commanded was to be exercised now, not after death: and the fear was, that God would so fix the seal of death upon them that they would not live again—i. e. seal their disorganization so that a future life would be impossible. Men could not do this, but God could; therefore, "my friends," fear not men but God. These solemn warnings were addressed to Christ's "friends," and to them alone; see Lk. xii. 4; and that to preserve them from apostatizing under their persecutions from men. The fear of not attaining to the resurrection life that Christ promised to give his followers "at the last day," is the fear inculcated in Math. x. 28 and Lk. xii. 5. Of this fact we have no doubt: and it relates not to a fear to be realized after death, but in the present time and life.

That the living wicked, who remain unto the coming of the Lord, will be cast into a furnace or lake of fire, we do not question, any more than we question the fact that the living wicked were submerged in a lake or flood of water in Noah's day. That was "the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men," but none were the actual partakers of that lake of water but the then living wicked, whom Peter calls "the world of the ungodly;" and he says, "The world that then was perished;" and he adds, "The heavens and the earth which are now, by" [or according to] "the same word" [or testimony of God] "are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of" [these] "ungodly men," of whom he had spoken in the previous verses, viz., the "scoffers" of "the last days," who scoffingly inquired, "Where is the promise of his coming?" and who, despising the idea of Christ's return from heaven would, at that time, be "walking after their own lust." These will meet with an awful perdition or destruction by the fire of that day, as the sinners of the old world did by water in the days of Noah.

Such we regard as the true teaching of Peter, and he never utters one word in all he saith, of the ungodly who are dead being made alive to come under the fire of that day; but he does state that God "is long suffering to usward, not willing that any should perish;" and that "he knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation," or trial, as Noah, Lot, and others were, while the wicked should not be suffered to escape, as "they escaped not" who mocked in Noah's and Lot's days; for while God delivers his faithful people his knowledge is fully equal to his power to reserve the unjust to the day of judgment to be punished; and the day of judgment spoken of is that judgment in which God executes whatever he has threatened to those living in any age, or under any particular dispensation. This punishment, Peter saith, came on the old world of the ungodly and on Sodom; and that it will come especially on those worst of all sinners—the scoffers of the last days. They may think to escape, but God by the judgments on Sodom and the old world has shown that he knows how to reserve them to the day of their judgment to be punished. They may scoff when the "promise of his coming" is declared, but they shall know, as certainly as the ungodly world of old were made to know, that "God is not mocked," though he "is long-suffering;" for "the day will come as a thief in the night, in the which" these ungodly scoffers will find God's word is no more to be trifled with now than in the days of Noah or of Lot. But whom does all this concern? We answer, in our opinion, and from the best judgment we can form from the word of truth, it concerns the ungodly of "the last days," who are alive at the time; and has nothing to do with the ungodly dead, except as it seals their doom to eternal night and death.

To remove our doubts of the revival into life of the wicked dead, we must see argument more potent than any we have yet seen. In other words, the evidence must be more clear to our understanding before we can believe the coming of Jesus Christ into this world was to bring the greatest curse upon a large portion of Adam's posterity that it is possible to conceive, short of eternal sin and suffering. And it may well be a matter of doubt, if those who hold that the wicked dead are to live again have the truth, if Adam the second did not entail a heavier curse on a very large part of men than Adam the first. But "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." No other life comes by the Son of God. So the word of truth seems to teach us.

Perished—Die.

These two words, as they occur in 1 Cor. xv., the one in verse 18, the other in verse 32, may be likened to the upper and the nether millstone, between which the doctrine of consciousness in death and everlasting torture is ground to powder. Dr. Hawley, having ventured upon the task of vindicating the orthodox view of man's nature and destiny, found it necessary to define his position on the import of the terms in question. Our readers shall see the proof of his utter helplessness; and they may as well conclude—what we have long ago settled upon as a "fixed fact"—that this helplessness will be manifest in every attempt, be its source eminent or obscure, that may be made to reconcile Paul's resurrection argument in the Corinthian epistle with popular theology on the same subject. It was an instructive spectacle, in our Brooklyn debate with Rev. Mr. Henson, to see that gentleman's struggles with the terms we have placed at the head of this article. He was too intelligent not to perceive that they could not properly be evaded. And yet he did not know what to do with them. When pressed by the affirmative as to what would be the doom of the race if Christ had not risen from the dead, he would appear to attend to the point by telling the audience that the whole system of christianity was based on the fact of our Lord's resurrection—that on the contrary supposition (i. e., that of the unrisen Christ) the condition of believers would be the same as that of the heathen world, etc. But at this point we insisted that he should tell us what was that heathen world condition. And the best answer we could draw from our opponent was, that if Christ had not risen man would be obliged to "grope his way in darkness through the world." All very true, brother Henson; but that does not meet the point. Paul undertakes, in 1 Cor. xv. 18, to tell us what happens after the groping tnrough this world is ended, and the term he employs to describe this post-groping state is "perished." Tell us, Brother Henson, what he means by that word. To this demand the best response we could get from our opponent was that he did not know! Well, there are thousands of people to bear witness that an earnest effort was made to enlighten his mind on the subject. We fear, however, that our friend appeared night after night at the Brooklyn Institute not so much to receive light as to maintain orthodoxy at every hazard.

But to Dr. Hawley. His position is a novel one indeed. After he had heard our sermon of May 8th, he assented distinctly to an explanation of the term "perished" in 1 Cor. xv. 18, which is also that of John Wesley, viz., that it means "have lost life and being to-[illegible]." In our later interview, however, he took the ground that such a sense of the word was allowable only on the supposition that the "some among you" of 1 Cor. xv. 12, means Epicurean infidels. What is the right application of that phrase the Dr., as we state in another article, does not know. If it refers to persons who were of the church, then he maintains that the term "perished" describes a miserable immortal existence beyond the grave. Now this attitude of doubt is certainly a very singular one. The term "perished" is made to teach extinction on one supposition, and immortal woe on another, when neither the one supposition nor the other is the hypothesis of which the apostle predicates the perishing of believers. His hypothesis is that of an unrisen Christ; and the meaning of the word "perished" depends not at all upon the personality of the deniers of the great truth contended for in the chapter before us. We will do Dr. H. the credit to admit that to him alone, so far as we know or believe, belongs the distinction of having burdened the interpretation of 1 Cor. xv. 18 with the consideration which we have stated. His position as a man of learning seems to be no certain protection against the assumption of sundry doctrinal positions which crumble before the lightest assault of sound criticism.

We have shown in another article that the deniers against whom Paul writes were of the church, and if Dr. Hawley shall be forced to admit the cogency of our argument founded on Paul's use of the phrase "among you," he will then—unless he modifies the grounds he has assumed—be obliged to affirm that "perished" in verse 18 means a miserable immortal existence, or misery in an immortal existence. But he is prevented from taking this position logically, for the reason that he admits that "to-morrow we die," in verse 32, teaches a cessation of existence. Now, unless he can show that the destinies hypothetically announced in verses 18 and 32 are not predicates of substantially the same supposition, he must perceive the utter fallacy of finding a future life in one passage and extinction of being in the other. Besides all this, he ought to see that since the term "perished" in verse 18 is applied to a personality that can fall asleep, that personality cannot be a deathless entity of any kind. And because this is so, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul cannot be a doctrine of the word of God. It is a true remark of the eminent expositor, Olshausen, that "the apostle by no means recognizes the possibility of existence as a pure spirit without bodily organs; the doctrine of the immortality of the soul and the name are alike unknown to the entire Bible; and indeed with justice, because a personal consciousness in created beings necessarily presupposes the limitations of body." Again he says: "We may observe that the apostle sets completely aside the possibility of a pure spiritual existence; if there is no resurrection of the dead, the destruction of the individual is unavoidable." (Commentary on 1 Cor. xv.)

R. W.

"Some Among You."

This phrase is found in 1 Cor. xv. 12: "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead." Dr. Hawley, of Fort Plain, N. Y., makes a very important interpretation to turn on the question whether the deniers named in this passage were of the Corinthian church or whether they were infidel, Epicurean outsiders; and he nevertheless was unable, in our late interview with him, to determine to his own satisfaction to which class they belonged. He had a few weeks previously (i. e. immediately after hearing our discourse which he subsequently reviewed) affirmed dogmatically that they were infidel Epicureans; but it would seem that when he made this assertion he did it without having given the point much attention. Be this as it may, he was without any positive opinion on the subject very soon afterward. In conversing with him about the matter we stated our belief that the "some among you" of our passage were not outsiders, but of the church; and we also suggested our partial conviction that the apostle's allusions in the former part of the chapter show them to have not been deniers of the resurrection of Christ. This latter opinion of ours was not a matured one, and we are not prepared to affirm it now. But the scriptural proof of our position, viz., that the phrase "some among you," in 1 Cor. xv. 12, refers to persons who were of the church at Corinth crossed our pathway afterwards, at an unexpected moment, when we were consulting Paul's writings on another point. This evidence was found in season for use in our public reply to Dr. H., and we now present it here.

What is called the usus loquendi is often a very important help in settling the meaning of Bible words and phrases. In this instance it is perfectly decisive against the assumption first put forth by Dr. Hawley. Of this every reader can satisfy himself by simply glancing at Paul's application of the expression "among you" in not less than eleven places in 1 Cor. prior to its occurrence in chap. xv. See the following passages, where "among," as in the text we are considering, is uniformly rendered from the Greek preposition en:—1 Cor. i. 10, 11; iii. 3, 18; v. 1; vi. 5, 7; xi. 18, 19 (twice), 30. No one who reads these passages can fail to see that the "some among you" of chap. xv. belongs unerringly to persons connected with the Corinthian church.

R. W.

The more we contemplate the greatness of God, the greater will our love be toward him.

The River of Life.

"And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb." Rev. xxii. 1.

There are some expressions which always give us a pleasurable sensation; or at least move us in the right direction, if indeed they move us at all, such as these, Order, Purity, Love, Holiness, Sanctification. The idea contained in our text is of this character. Let us examine it a little. A river of water, a pure river, a clear river, clear as crystal, and its holy origin too, out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. If this group of excellences has for us no attractiveness, what can move our stupid, sin-bound souls? I find the gospel of God a plan having its foundation in love: God's supreme love to his creature man. Love commences, continues, and consummates the whole, permeating every part, and blending each dispensation of his grace into one beautiful and most transcendently glorious plan for man's exaltation and glorification to a companionship with the angelic retinue who ever see his face and share his refulgent glory.

By what process is man brought to this most desirable position? Jesus saith, "I am the way, the truth and the life." John xiv. 6. How is this? By the doctrine he taught. The words that I speak unto you they are spirit and they are life. John vi. 63. The word, being the seed, must needs find a good soil in order for a profitable harvest; it must be received into the heart, or become incorporated into our nature as the leaven is mixed into the meal that a thorough leavening of the whole lump or mass may be the result.

Some who think superficially, and so think because of false fear, perhaps, induced by erroneous and sectarian teaching (by sectarian I mean all teaching which confines, or inclines the learner more to my theory, or opinion than to the word for a reason of his faith and hope,) see not the importance of every new doctrine which may come up, (new as they call them, though all bible doctrine is old as its author,) they seem not to be aware that truth is like water, composing as a whole one mighty sea, yet divisible into innumerable particles, a greater or less proportion of which we receive according to our capacity of appreciation.

The excellency of Christ's doctrine consists in its purity; while man's are foul and muddy, like the swollen river after a rain: It may be impetuous, and its impetuosity and muddiness generally coincide, while the river of our text, which proceeds from God, is pure; pure as crystal! Much as man has by his unhallowed hands and feet discolored the divine record by mis-translation, interpolation, &c., yet let us remember, when we find it as the Holy Ghost indited it, when we possessing much of the selfsame spirit, and all other aids given us of God for its understanding, search it, we shall find a loving, holy doctrine, pure and clear as crystal. One accustomed to drink of a pure spring turns with disgust from dark muddy waters. So the christian, who has learned to receive Christ's pure words, words which always enlighten, cheer, and warm the heart, has learned to drink from the life river, there to slake his thirst, and his eyes are thereby enlightened more and more, his energies are invigorated, his step quickened to run in the road to glory and to God.

Man is so constituted, and by nature so inclined, as ever to be seeking help from another; so that despite the fearful declaration, "cursed be the man that truseth in man and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord," (Jer. xvii. 3,) he is ever doing this same thing. He seeks help because of a feeling of need, yet he seeks it in another because he walks by sight or sense and not by faith. Jesus says, Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Math. xi. 29.

Having brought Christ, the second Adam, to view, we will, for the better understanding of his work, compare the two Adams and their work together. Paul says, There is a natural body, and there is a spiritual body; the natural first, the spiritual afterwards, 1 Cor. xv. 44–46. The first had his origin in dust, and can never rise above an animal, earthly or dust life. His end also must be the same as all other dust-made creatures or things—dust. But that was not the ultimate of God's purpose; for in or by the second Adam he proposes a second birth to all who comply with certain specified conditions.

The bible is given us to show our relation and its consequences as connected with the earthly father, and also the process of relationship and its results as connected with our heavenly Father, or "the Lord from heaven."

We understand the laws by which man is developed, and through which his individuality is attained; and he stands forth a creature of God, a subject of divine government. Now remember what Christ said to Nicodemus, "ye must be born again." This is a necessity equal with the first, and the process of development not verp discimilar, either. A gross material is the effect of the first birth; a refined spiritual being the result of the second, a manifested son of God being the production or fruit of the Spirit of God. The reception by faith of Jesus as our Saviour, or second father, (by faith, I mean that act of the mind which accepts divine truth relating to this work, first a feeling of its necessity, second a confidence in the ability and willingness of a Christ father to commence and complete this work, and third, an acceptance of the Holy Spirit or divine energy by which this work of salvation is commenced and completed, is what Peter calls being begotten again. 1 Pet. i. 3. James also speaks thus, "Of his own will begot he us with the word of truth.... receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls." Jam. i. 21. "This is the living water" spoken of by Christ at the well of Samaria. John iv. 10; and explained to be "the Spirit" John vii. 39. The operation or working of this is in another place likened to leaven hid or mixed with meal, gradually changing the whole mass, like the holy oil poured on the high priest's head, scenting all his raiment and making the whole room fragrant with its odors.

The operation of this Spirit is known by its medium or rule of operation, the word. This is why Christ prays, "Sanctify them through thy truth, thy word is truth." This word and Spirit blending, is the divine inflatus which imparts spirituality and causes the countenance of its possessor to beam with love, and his lips to utter forth the high praises of his God and Saviour. This principle does not change man physiologically; or in other words, does not make him anything but a man; yet it refines his nature, changing, elevating, and purifying his affections, appropriating all to a holy use which before was devoted to an unholy one; a holy use, because according to the mind of God; and unholy, because after or for a fleshly or selfish purpose only. Hence actions of men after the same change in their character according to the motive or principle inducing that action. As a man thinketh so is he. To the impure all things are impure; the spring issuing through a bed of minerals receives therefrom its mineral impregnation, and is only fit for specific uses, while the pure fountain is ever life-imparting and healthy. As the pure elements of nutrition, properly used, work life and strength, so the bread of God works for he development of the spiritual man. Remember the gospel appliances are all calculated to bring forward this begotten or hidden man of the heart; every promise believed, every duty performed, furthers this blessed work, this is our life business to develop the spiritual nature. They that are after the Spirit do mind the things of the Spirit; and they that are after the flesh the things of the flesh; hence an uncompromising warfare is waged, called in scripture, a fight of faith.

While the works of the flesh are carnal, and end in death; faith works by love, purifying the heart.

This pure river of water of life, this tree of life, Rev. xxii. 14, and this taking of the water life freely, verce 17, are all representations of that pure divine nature, of that fully developed life, or immortality, received by our second Adam when he comes from heaven the second time without sin (a sin offering) unto (or for) salvation.

S. Boynton.

West Batavia, N. Y.

Days of Judgment.

"God hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world by that man which he hath ordained." It is thought that the good and bad deeds of the entire race are referred to that day for adjudication; to which we reply, God has made several such appointments in the past. He appointed one hundred and twenty years to the people of the old world, at the end of which time he entered into judgment with them. God told Abraham that the Egyptians should oppress his children four hundred years, afterward will I judge that nation. He kept his word with Abraham. The Jews were to serve the king of Babylon seventy years, at the end of which time God pledged himself to judge that people. Seventy weeks, or four hundred and ninety years, were determined upon Jerusalem or the Jewish nation as their day of grace. Near the close of that period Jesus Christ stood before that people and declared, "Now is the judgment of this age." Paul adds that wrath came upon them to the uttermost. God hath appointed a day of judgment for Rome. She was to waste the church of Christ many days. The abomination of desolation was to have things her own way for 1,260 years; those days ended A. D. 1792, when God commenced the judgment upon that power. The cup has been held to her lips; she is drinking the dregs thereof, and shall wring them out. God will judge or rule the world by that man Christ Jesus, according to his oath made to David. "Of the fruit of thy body will I sit upon thy throne;" as he has said in another place, "I will restore thy judges as at the first." "When a king shall rule in righteousness and princes decree judgment." "Behold, I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast that no man take thy crown."

W. H. Hanford.

New York, June 26, 1867.

A Pleasant Surprise.

A young man of eighteen or twenty, a student in a university, took a walk one day with a professor, who was commonly called the students' friend, such was his kindness to the young men whom it was his office to instruct. While they were now walking together, and the professor was seeking to lead the conversation to grave subjects, they saw a pair of old shoes lying in the path which they supposed to belong to a poor man who was at work in the field close by, and who had nearly finished his day's work. The young student turned to the professor saying:

"Let us play the old man a trick: we will hide his shoes and conceal ourselves behind those bushes and watch to see his perplexity when he cannot find them."

"My dear friend," answered the professor, "we must never amuse ourselves at the expense of the poor; but you are rich, and you may give yourself a much greater pleasure by means of this poor man. Put a dollar into each shoe, and then we will hide ourselves."

The student did so, and then placed himself with the professor behind the bushes close by, through which they could easily watch the laborer, and see whatever wonder or joy he might express.

The poor man had soon finished his work, and came across the field to the path, where he had left his coat and shoes. While he put on the coat he slipped his foot into one of the shoes; but feeling something hard, he stooped down and found the dollar. Astonishment and wonder were seen upon his countenance; he gazed upon the dollar, turned it round, and looked again and again at it; then he looked round him on all sides, but could see no one. Now he put the money in his pocket, and proceeded to put on the other shoe; but how great was his astonishment when he found the other dollar! His feelings overcame him; he fell upon his knees, looked up to heaven, and uttered a loud and fervent thanksgiving, in which he spoke of his wife, sick and helpless, and his children without bread, whom this timely bounty from some unknown hand would save from perishing.

The young man stood there deeply affected, and tears filled his eyes. "Now," said the professor, are you not much better pleased than if you had played your intended trick?"

"Oh, dearest sir!" answered the youth, "you have taught me a lesson I shall never forget. I feel now the truth of the words which I never before understood, 'It is better to give than to receive.'"

We should never approach the poor but with a wish to do them good.

A Christian Woman.

The following touching, simple, sorrowful memorial of his wife, was written by one of the great statesmen of England—Sir James Mackintosh—in a private letter to a friend: "She was a woman," he writes, "who by tender management of my weaknesses gradually corrected the most pernicious of them. She became prudent from affection; and, though of the most generous nature, she was taught frugality and economy by her love for me. During the most critical period of my life, she preserved order in my affairs, from the care of which she relieved me. She gently reclaimed me from dissipation, she propped my weak and irresolute nature, she urged my indolence to all the exertions that have been useful and creditable to me, and she was perpetually at hand to admonish my heedlessness and improvidence. To her I owe whatever I am,—to her whatever I shall be. In her solicitude for my interest she never for a moment forgot my character. Her feelings were warm and impetuous, but she was placable, tender and constant. Such was she whom I have lost; and I have lost her when a knowledge of her worth had refined my youthful love into friendship, before age had deprived it of much of its original ardor. I seek relief, and I find it, in the consolatory opinion that a benevolent wisdom inflicts the chastisement, as well as bestows the enjoyment of human life; that superintending Goodness will one day enliven the darkness which surrounds our nature and hangs over our prospects; that this dreary and wretched life is not the whole of man; that a being capable of such proficiency in science and virtue, is not like the beasts that perish; that there is a dwelling-place prepared for the spirits of the just; that the ways of God will yet be vindicated to man."

We would say, "That a being capable of such proficiency" should make himself so much "like the beasts that perish," as men often do, is deeply to be lamented, when they might rise, through a "resurrection from the dead, to be the children of God," and to die no more, but "be as the angels of God in heaven." "That there is a dwelling-place" preparing for "the just" is an undoubted truth. How happy those, who, like the "wife" spoken of in the foregoing, have used all their influence and power to help others to the attainment of the inheritance of the saints glorified in Christ, by the resurrection or change coming "at the last day." May it be our happy lot to be such helpers and to be thus helped.

Harmony of Redemption in the Bible.

The very fact that the Bible has but one great subject running through all its histories and prophecies—that salvation by blood is the focal point in which all its various lines of light converge, is to me one of the strongest evidences that it came from God. When I consider that the writers lived hundreds and thousands of years apart, and they were found in all walks of life, and that they wrote in different languages, I can find no way to account for the unity which pervades it but by admitting that these various writers were all moved and guided by the same high intelligence. No matter who held the pen, whether Moses in Midian, or David in the mountains of Israel, or Ezekiel lying on the river's bank, or Daniel in the palaces of Babylon, or Paul in a prison at Rome, or John in the solitude of the bleak isle of Patmos, the records are all essentially the same, and blend together as one great whole. Just as the various notes and chords of the musician's oratorio express the one great thought of the composer, so the great hymn of revelation presents but one central idea; whatever chords in the harp of inspiration are touched by the chosen hands, they ultimately settled upon the key-note, "Salvation through the blood of the Lamb."

An International Congress will soon meet in Paris for the purpose of fixing a uniform standard of gold and silver coinage in Europe. It will be presided over by Prince Napoleon.

Letters and Extracts.

From J. Holt.

Fayetteville, West Va., June 20, 1867.

Br. Storrs:—I left Mode, Ill., April 15th, and arrived here May 4th, myself and wife. Thank the Lord for his kindness. I find some who contend against our faith of Life only through Christ, and death as the wages of sin. Some said my faith would ruin me. Do they suppose God cannot uphold those who put their trust in him? They thought I could not get a school; that being the employment by which I have had to obtain my living. I told them I would not forsake the Bible for any man, or any of the things of this life; for to follow the truth is the road to life eternal, and to follow man or their traditions is death. I have been contending for the faith as delivered to the saints; and glory to God, the gospel light is beginning to shine here in its purity, so that some begin to say, "Let God be true and every man a liar." I tried to start a Sunday school in a church, but they would not let me have the house, as I did not go with their ideas about the destiny of the wicked: but the people have me teach Sunday school in their dwellings, and I have good attendance and help in teaching, and I hope it will increase, and that God will enable me to carry on the work to the glory of his name. I wish my Herald of Life, changed from Mode, Ill., to this place. By the time this year is up, I think I shall send you some new subscribers. I long to see the paper again that I may hear from the Brethren and get words of encouragement. May the Lord bless those who are ministering the word of truth unto the people; may that word be proclaimed in all its purity and fulness to all the world. May we all receive an immortal crown at the coming of our elder Brother, Jesus the Life-giver. Yours, in hope of eternal life.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The government is just now engaged in one of our periodic Indian wars. This time it is of a very serious character, embracing nearly all the tribes in the great far West, who have united in a desperate effort to stay the improvements pushing out through their grounds. They have been provoked into this opposition by the bad treatment to which they have been subjected, says Gen. Sherman, commanding the department covering that region, by the traders and speculators on Indian misery and suffering. A large number of massacres have already been reported, of emigrants and parties of soldiers. A report was current at Fort Harker last week that General Custer, with a small body of cavalry, had been overpowered by a large force of Indians, and the General killed. The report is not well authenticated, but some credence is placed in it on account of so little having been heard of Custer's command for some time.

The Treasury Department has given notice that seven-thirty notes can now be exchanged for five-twenty bonds issued under act of March 3, 1865.

The reports are still favorable for the greatest crop ever harvested in this country. Business men are therefore looking forward hopefully for a resumption of active trade the coming season.

FOREIGN.

The most important event of the week in Europe is the great conclave of Catholic dignitaries at Rome. On Saturday last the ceremony of commemorating the martyrdom of Paul and Peter took place, at which the Pope, 500 Cardinals, Archbishops and Bishops, and 40,000 priests were in attendance, besides a concourse of 100,000 spectators. It was a brilliant display of Catholic pomp. But nothing came of it in the way of disaster, as many were led to expect. Too much importance is attached to the city of Rome by many writers on prophecy. While it is the central spot where a great decaying system of superstition has its head, yet if it would meet with the fate laid out for it by those writers, and it should be consumed and sunk down to where the fires of Vesuvius start from, the world would not be so distressed as they suppose. A large number of beggarly priests and a horde of poor ignorant creatures might regret such a calamity, and the tender-hearted be pained; but the kings of the earth, the merchants of the earth, every ship-builder, and all sailors and all that trade by sea, could not mourn over it as do those represented by the destruction of Babylon—that must be an entirely different affair.

The Mexicans, notwithstanding the great efforts made by every civilized nation to save him, executed Maximilian on the 19th of June. His tragic fate is being warmly discussed, some bewailing it as barbarous cruelty, others deeming it political justice. But as pity is awakened in the breasts of so many for the fallen monarch it must in the end bring loss of good will to the Mexican republic. The people there are a degraded and superstitious, and therefore cruel and vindictive, race, and their forbearance in such a case as this would have relieved them of much of the odium under which they are held in this country and elsewhere. Beside being possessed of many estimable characteristics, Maximilian had the semblance of justification for his assumption of authority in Mexico. He was solicited by a deputation of notables who claimed to represent all the leading interests of their country, and was assured by them if he would leave his home in Europe the people would receive him as a blessed deliverer from the state of anarchy and misrule under which they had so long groaned. On this ground, as he publicly announced in reply, he would accept the call provided the people would ratify their offer. After a form this was all gone through with. He dauntlessly carried out his part of the stipulation under many terrible trials, and especially the desertion of Napoleon who was mainly instrumental in getting him to accept the dangerous mission. He was finally betrayed and sold by one of his own generals—a fair specimen of the whole tribe of Mexican officials and leaders. Whether the terrible retribution for his assumed crime will be accepted as a sufficient warning by others, or whether it will not provoke anger and renewed agression is yet to be seen.

The prizes of the International Exposition were distributed on Friday last at Paris. The Americans came in for a very large share. When the initiatory ceremonies were concluded, the emperor rose from the throne and made a speech, in the course of which he said: "Peoples and kings have come here to crown the ideas of peace and conciliation. France is proud to be great, prosperous and free; yet she is not unnerved by her material joys. The thoughtful can see the national fibres vibrate for the honor of France. But this noble susceptibility should not create fear for the world's repose, as we here prove our anxiety for peace." The Emperor closed his speech by saying: "This Exposition marks an era of harmony and progress, and the triumph of grand moral principles, which with justice can alone establish thrones, and ennoble humanity." Great enthusiasm followed the Emperor's speech.

The affairs in the East continue very stormy. Accounts of battles in Candia, at one time favorable to the insurgents then to the Turks, are daily received. The trouble is growing every day worse for the Ottoman Empire. England has at last consented to interfere in behalf of the christians. Servia is again in rebellion, too, to complicate the misfortunes of the Sultan.

The credit of Austria is rapidly rising in the financial world, owing to the reconciliation of the government with the Magyars, and to the introduction of thoroughly liberal reforms. It is a very common belief that Baron von Beust, the now Prime minister, to whom the great improvement in the condition of Austria is due, will prove the Austrian Bismarck, and reorganize the tottering empire on a sound and lasting basis.

Garibaldi has recently shown fresh signs of life on the Roman question. Several letters have been published addressed to different societies and personal friends, written within a month past, in which he renews the expression of his undying hostility to Rome and the priesthood in Italy generally. With the latter he will have no truce, no compromise. To use his own words, he would have the people "utterly sweep away the abominations of the priestly shop." In one letter he exclaims, "When shall this people cease to kneel at the feet of impostors, and when shall they lose the fear of hell and become worthy of the great destiny to which Providence has called them?"

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—Albert White, Geo. H. Fisher, Peter Bogardus, Wm. V. Glenn, Mrs. R. Harrison, W. N. Houghtaling, A. B. Loomis, W. F. Gardner, C. C. Tuck, Joseph Laciar, Jas. H. Morgan.

Two Dollars each from—Jas. W. Purdy, J. Roberts, John Reynolds.

Various Sums.

B. H. Couch, 50 cts; Zalman Grovier, $2 50; Julia A. Pearce, $5.

Pledged for Hanford's Mission West.

Previously pledged	$30
R. E. Ladd, Springfield, Mass	10
Wm. Roworth, Brooklyn, N. Y.	5
Thos. M. Redhead, " "	5
W. M., New York	5
Jacob Grim, Philadelphia, paid	5
W. Houghtaling, Seymour, Conn., paid	1

Advertisements.

Meadville Theological School.

THE NEXT TERM begins September 2d, 1867. The Faculty of instruction consists of four resident and four non-resident Professors, and a Tutor. The object is to educate young men for the Christian Ministry. Beneficiary aid is given to indigent students. The tuition, use of library, and text books are free to all. The school was founded by the Unitarian and Christian denominations, but is open to all who believe in the divine origin of Christianity. The library consists of nine thousand five hundred volumes. Application may be made to Rev. A. A. Livermore, President of the Board of Instruction, Meadville, Pa.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE,
LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS,
GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW,
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
Office Hours, From 8 to 9 A. M. / " 1 to 2 P. M. / " 6 to 7 P. M. NEW YORK

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 Chambers St., NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(Room 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
[illegible]
[illegible] Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

Six Sermons on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by Geo. Storrs; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

The Watch Tower: or, Man in Death; and the Hope for a Future Life.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

Life from the Dead; or, The Righteous only will live again. By Geo. Storrs. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

Life only in Christ.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the Editor of the Herald of Life. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

Bible vs. Tradition: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. Earth, not heaven, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. The Soul Saved or Lost. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5, Moral Depravity: by Geo. Storrs Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. Doom of the Ungodly: or, The Wicked Dead remain eternally under death's dominion. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. The Wages of Sin: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. Letter to a Clergyman; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. Finley, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense They will be sold at $8 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. The Essential Baptism; by the Editor of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

Man's Nature and Destiny; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by Geo. Storrs. Price, 5 cents.

The Atonement, by Geo. Storrs, and The Gospel Hope, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, New York.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our Catalogue our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance Bible vs. Tradition, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the Herald of Life, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues, are thereby revoked.

Poetry.

WAITING FOR CHRIST.

(From the German of Hiller.)

We wait for Thee, all-glorious One!
We look for thine appearing;
We bear thy name, and on the throne
We see thy presence cheering.
Faith even now
Uplifts its brow
And sees the Lord descending,
And with him bliss attending.

We wait for Thee, through days forlorn,
In patient self-denial;
We know that thou our guilt hast borne
Upon the cross of trial.
And well may we
Submit with thee
To bear the cross and love it,
Until thy hand remove it.

We wait for Thee; already thou
Hast all our heart's submission;
And though the spirit sees thee now,
We long for open vision;
When ours shall be
Sweet rest with thee,
And pure, unfading pleasure,
And life in endless measure.

We wait for Thee with certain hope—
The time will soon be over;
With childlike longing we look up,
Thy glory to discover.
O bliss! to share
Thy triumph there,
When home, with joy and singing,
The Lord his saints is bringing.

Children's Department.

A PROVERB ILLUSTRATED.

"Willows are weak; but they bind other wood."

There was a tumult in the city, and darkness and sin; for those who had bread gave it with malignant pride, and those who were starving ate it and cursed them.

The proud ones were led by a rich weakling, who knew nothing, and scorned the wise if they were poor. And he pampered his dogs and kicked the dying philosopher at his gate. He laughed loudly, and flung coin to the foolish, and they called him "My lord omnipotent," not knowing exactly what that meant, but that the title could not belong to a poor man was certain.

And so it was that among the poor of the city, there was the deepest hatred against those who wasted or withheld the treasure according to the moment's fancy; and they had sworn that they would not sleep until they had made a feast, with music and dancing, in the storehouses of their oppressors.

When a rumor of it reached the ears of the Weakling, he laughed a scornful laugh; but his knees shook.

Far away in a garret of the city, a woman was praying. It was a sad story, and the Weakling was to blame.

Her father had been a prosperous citizen and a God-fearing man, and he had influence in the city. And that proud one, moved by jealousy, had stirred up the rich against him, and they brought against him untrue accusations. His defence they would not allow to be heard openly, but they had him driven from the city, and he had been heard of no more. Two daughters bore his name, and they went with their father to the seashore and there took leave of him, for those cruel ones would not let them go with him into exile. When they returned, poor and desolate, to the city, where had been their stately home, they came to this tiny garret. The neighbors, to comfort them, would say, "Ah! you will get used to this. You will make new friends and be happy." Then Sara, the elder, stood erect, pale and motionless. The fire of her black eyes was quenched by no "foolish tear." No complaint lengthened the long day. But on St. Peter's eve, she said, "I may be broken; I cannot bend." And that night she died. Thus Monica was left alone. But she had a golden secret which enabled her to bend and not be broken. She visited the sick and the prisoners. She sought out the erring, and told to them glad tidings. She shared her scanty food with the starving, and her tears flowed with those of the sorrowful. For all her prayers ascended to him for whose sake she did it, him whom she loved much, and he gladdened her heart with the assurance, "Thou hast done it unto me." Thus she was "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing: as poor, yet making many rich" (in bidding them take of the unsearchable riches of Christ); "as having nothing, yet possessing all things." To every sorrow, every joy, every duty, she bent.

And now she was praying; her heart was burdened. She had influenced individuals, but how should she sway the multitude. She had never thought herself "sufficient" for the least of these things; her "sufficiency" had been of God. Yet now, in the face of so great a need, she had forgotten that He is all-sufficient, and was burdened with the overwhelming sense of her own weakness.

"Ah! Lord God," she had been saying, "I cannot speak, for I am a child." But the Lord said unto her, "Say not, I am a child, for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. Be not afraid of them, for I am with thee to deliver thee."

Then she cried, and her inmost soul listened, "Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth." And as she arose, she was saying aloud, "I am the vine, ye are the branches; without me ye can do nothing." And again, "When I am weak, then am I strong." "Most gladly [illegible] the power of Christ may rest upon me."

* * *

In the market place the bell was ringing, and the citizens came flocking there. In an hour the barns would be in their power. There stood Monica, and she was singing this psalm,—

"Praise ye the Lord. Praise the Lord, O my soul. While I live will I praise the Lord: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being. Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish. Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God: which made heaven and earth, the sea and all that therein is; which keepeth truth for ever: which executeth judgment for the oppressed: which giveth food to the hungry. The Lord looseth the prisoners: the Lord openeth the eyes of the blind: the Lord raiseth them that are bowed down: the Lord loveth the righteous: the Lord preserveth the strangers; He relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down. The Lord shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the Lord."

And before she ended the whole multitude was singing with her. Then, in a clear voice, she read these words, "Thus saith the Lord Jesus, Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin.... If God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith.... Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you." "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."

There was silence for a little space. Then said one of the citizens, "What shall we do, Monica? We see plainly that you would not have us seize upon the storehouses."

"No, Gaspard; for he has said, 'Thou shalt not steal.'"

"What, then, can we do? If we cannot work we must starve."

"It were better to starve than to do wrong. Shall we who know in whose hand is all power, and that He is love, disobey his command, and not rather trust his promise? Hear what He says, 'Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.'"

"Who will give it up for Monica?" shouted the old man.

"I will," chorused a hundred voices. "I will, for Monica shared her last loaf with me." "I will, for Monica wept with me when I lost my little babe, which few thought worth minding about." "I will, for Monica helped me when others scorned." "I will, for Monica told me about One who helpeth all our infirmities, and he helps me now."

But when Monica's voice could be heard, this was what she said: "Not for my sake, I pray you, but for his who is love, and who worketh in poor weak ones both to will and to do, of his good pleasure. For His sake give up this wild scheme of sin and hatred, considering how great things He hath for Christ's sake forgiven us. But we must go and speak to these great ones."

Then cried they all, "Monica, will you go?"

Then Monica put away the remembrance of the cruel wrong, and went and stood before the Weakling. And she told him that the men would gladly work if he would give them bread for wages. Then he cowered; and she said, "They will do you no harm, I will answer for it, though you are in their power. Give them only what they ask."

And he said, "They will scorn me."

Then she pitied his degradation, and said, "They scorn you now. Give them love instead of hatred, and they will scorn you no more: they will give you their confidence and their respect. They scorn you now in your power, but when love and power are united they will revere you. The Omnipotent One is love. For his mercy's sake, who still loves you, whilst he has power to destroy you as you deserve, begin now, and the reward of loving, you will find to be—increased willingness and power to do so."

* * * * *

So the citizens worked each day, and at evening, in the market place, he stood and gave to them the money that they had earned. And Monica came there with her townfolk to receive the mony due for her works. But to each she gave, and from all received, of the priceless heavenly riches of love.

By the prince there stood one day an old man. He had come, he said, from a land of exile. And as Monica drew near, and beheld his out-stretched arms, she knew that her father was not dead, and that the prince had brought him home again.

"Ah! my child," he said, "I have had tidings of you even in that far-off land—tidings which rejoiced my heart. I worked daily in the forest, and I thought all the long day of my child, and prayed that I might see her again. And as often as I made up my bundles at eve, I remembered the work my daughter was doing, and said, 'Yes, willows are weak, but they bind other wood.'"

What is the secret of strength? Pliability! Adaptation to circumstances and duties. And what is the secret of this? LOVE; the sap which flows through the weakest twigs, and makes them strong to bind, tender to hold. This sap is derived from the root, and flows to the branches; and those that are most full [illegible] bind together diverse [illegible] of wood, rugged, gnarled, smooth and tender.

Those whom Love encircles are brought near to each other. She lays the weak and the sorrowful, the poor, and the erring, side by side in her bosom; and they clasp each other's hands as she folds her sheltering arms around them.—Selected.

PROPHECY.

While so many in this degenerate age seem to regard the study of prophecy as not only "uninteresting and unimportant, but improper, presumptuous and injurious," we have reason to rejoice that not a few now rising up, of a very different spirit, whose fervent prayer often ascends on high—like that of the Psalmist of old, "Lord, open thou mine eyes that I may behold wonderous things out of thy Law."

An over-confident objector boldly asserts that "the days of miracles being past, it is worse than useless to be looking for these wonderful things for which the strict constructionists are so fondly longing." But this is merely begging the question? For what authority is there for saying that "the days of miracles are over?" Are we not informed in terms the most explicit though general,—in addition to the many stupendous signs and wonders specifically predicted,—that so marvellous will be the miracles performed on the restoration of Israel, that those formerly wrought shall "no more be remembered;" and that "the nations shall see and be confounded at all their might!" Surely, then, such objectors "do greatly err, not knowing the the scriptures nor the power of God." "Oh that God would speak," says the Patriarch of Ur, "and show them the secrets of wisdom, that they are double to that which is!" And, strange to say, many of those who thus discredit a literal construction of prophecy, under the pretext that miracles are forever ended, fully believe in that most stupendous of all miracles—the resurrection and rapture of the saints,—for, few indeed are there, nowadays, of the Sadducean non-resurrrection school of Hymeneus and Philetus.

It is also seriously, however strangely, alleged in opposition to the study of prophecy, that in consequence of the inherent obscurity with which it is charged, "so little can be really understood, that it must necessarily be devoid of all practical utility." But has not this objection been urged by skeptics of every hue, in all ages, against the whole Bible? Never, however, was there a greater mistake. Such studies, by acquainting the mind with the nature of the "things to come,"—even should they impart to us no tangible and satisfactory information, still give us a realizing sense of invisible things, strengthening faith, confirming hope, weaning us from earthly trifles and fleshly lusts, and securing a closer walk with God. No surer preventive of worldly mindedness, frivolity, lukewarmness, and indeed all the fruits of the flesh, the allurements of the world, could well be devised than the elevating reflections enkindled by a knowledge of "the things that shall be hereafter." The soul-elevating influence of a knowledge of "the powers of the world to come," is peculiarly well calculated to invigorate the church and restore it to its former state of purity, zeal, and efficiency. Let any one read the Bible with the confident assurance that the Lord really means what he says, and will perform what be promises; and if that blessed book does not afford him a hundred fold more delight as well as a thousand fold more information than all the productions of men, then let me be accounted both a simpleton and a knave. Indeed, what could possibly tend to cheer our pathway through this benighted world more than the illumination shed by the "sure word of prophecy that shineth as a light in a dark place till the day down, and the day star arise in our hearts."

To neglect the subject of prophecy, therefore, is to neglect the cause of one's own best interests and highest enjoyments; and of course involves no little culpability. For so unambiguously do the "signs of the times" indicate the near approach of "the time of Jacob's trouble," that however leniently the Lord may be disposed to wink at the ignorance and inattention of Christians of prior days, the farther neglect of this important study in the present day cannot but be regarded as culpable in a high degree. Not only are we encouraged by "the blessed Comforter," the divine Author of all prophetic communications, to take heed to prophecy, even to the visionary prefigurations contained in the most obscure of all prophetic books, but are plainly admonished that "if any man shall take away from the words of the book of prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the Book of Life, and out of the Holy City, and from the things that are written in the book." (Rev. xxii. 19.) Now, if it be thus hazardous to subtract from the "words of the book of this prophecy,"—the apparently most unimportant and unpractical of them all,—how fearfully dangerous must it be to neglect the whole of it! And does it not look too much like taking away the whole of it when we thus ignore and virtually nullify it?

It is charged upon those who give respectful heed to prophecy, that "sooner or later they become unsettled, both in the theory and practice of the gospel:" but does not the prophet-apostle Paul (and surely he ought to be good authority), inform us in closing his Epistle to the Romans, that, on the contrary, we are "established by the scriptures of the prophets, as well as by the gospel?"

"Let us not peer into these things," says another objector, "for God in his good time will reveal them by his Spirit." But did he thus reveal and herald forth the former advent of his Son just before the expiration of the [illegible] why should he give us any farther explanation of the prophecies relating to the on-coming Advent, or of the accomplishment of any other prophecy whatever? Instead of thus waiting in supine indifference, are we not bound to imitate the examples of the worthies of old, "searching diligently what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ did signify when it testified these things?"

Many there are, perplexed by the antagonistic claims of rival schemes, and disgusted by the absurdities, inconsistencies, and extravagances of incompetent commentators, are conscientiously deterred from entering upon a subject apparently so hopelessly abstruse and inexplicable, as if that were a sufficient justification for such neglect. For what subject would ever be examined, were that an accepted rule of action! Besides, the promised blessing is not made dependent upon our comprehension of them but attention to them.

But most of those whose attitude is that either of indifference or of opposition to the claims of prophecy, take refuge under cover of the objection that "inasmuch as the views of the wisest and best of critics and commentators in all ages are so discordant and unsatisfactory, prophecy must necessarily be a subject too difficult for ordinary apprehension." But if this allegation be at all true in relation to prophetic subjects, is it not equally so in relation to all the contents of the Bible? a conclusion surely from which every rational mind will instinctively recoil; for what subject is there in the whole range of divine communications upon which sectarian commentators and interpreters have not disagreed, and palmed off speculations the most absurd and dangerous as well as diverse and unsatisfactory? How diverse, unsatisfactory, absurd, and even injurious, for example, are many of the views advanced on such plain topics as the ordinances themselves,—the so-called "sacraments." If we wait for unanimity of sentiment in relation to any one oracle of eternal truth whatever, before we give heed to it, never will it be heeded. But surely to make either prophecy or the student of prophecy responsible for the non sequiturs and fanciful interpretations of even the most learned of critics and interpreters, if given to speculation, is as unfair as it is illogical,—how much more unjust, then, to lay to their charge the wild vagaries and ridiculous crudities of mountebank interpreters, deluded speculators, and hyper-spiritualizing allegorizers!—Selected.

ROME STILL THE BEAST.

The Roman Catholic organ, Universe, of Philadelphia—a sort of semi-barbarian sheet—is jubilant over the Protestants who have gone over to Ritualism, it says:

"This tendency to the Pope, far, far from decreasing, is growing very rapidly. A new, a long and a bold step is made by it every twenty-four hours. It wears a seven mile boot, and is giving constant use to that boot in kicking Protestantism dead, and in marching gayly to the Eternal City. Dr. Dix, of New York, appears to be the captain in the movement in this country. He plays Catholic every Sunday and every festival with great ability, and with admirable success."

The Flora McFlimsey church the Universe acknowledges tends to the Pope, and no one wide awake would doubt that observation. But such as leave the chaste plainness of pure christianity for outward demonstrations of pomp and show, are of no more account to evangelical christendom than would be so many Roman Catholics. Such are neither ornaments to the church nor desirable members to have within its pale.

Rome receives them with open arms, and we can well imagine the beautiful addition they will make to the church of the Eternal City. The Universe is welcome to this class of people, for being no benefit to us they are quite well adapted to adorn Catholicism. The Universe thinks they will sweep Protestanism away, as when Ritualism seizes a Protestant "it never lets him go." But it ought to be remembered that it is only the weak it seizes, that never for a moment is it to the rest but an abomination to look upon. The Roman Catholics have tried the effect of the stake and sword to demolish the Protestant religion, but now seem to have more faith in this new heresy in the churches themselves; they "shout to the leaders of this movement to hasten their work and reach the end speedily."

So elated with the idea of having "fashionable people" to fill up St. Peter in lieu of the lower classes, with their humble Peter's pence to fill up the coffers of the church, that it exclaims—"All the polite, well-educated fashionable people in New York attend the Roman Catholic church. We happen to know some of the wealthiest congregations in New York, of which two are on and near Fifth Avenue, and not a member has once thought of marrying Flora McFlimsey. But the Universe is dreaming now, and visions become reality.

"Even the Methodists are tainted with the 'new paganism.' In a new Wesleyan church in Cambridge, Maryland, they have Latin crosses, Maltese crosses, I. H. S.'s, and other Catholic symbols, and they chant the Te Deum, the Gloria Patri, and other hymns. This is acknowledging the Pope, and throwing abomination upon abomination on the founder of Methodism. Where is the ghost of Wesley? We should be sorry to make any objection to the proceeding."

Perhaps if Universe looks a little nearer home it will find reason to call out, "Where is the ghost of St. Peter?" or greater than he, "St. Mary?" The next day after the proclamation of liberty in Italy, and celibacy was no longer a law, "twenty-five priests" so departed from the faith of the Pope that they forthwith took wives. The greatest of great men in the Roman Catholic church, who drew up with so much care the article defending the "Immaculate Conception," was con[illegible] many priests—these heretics, how they would have fared under St. Peter's temporal power! In South America "five hundred" of the more faithful were expatriated at one time for being obnoxious to the common people. What Papal Rome gains in one place she loses in another, and she will probably never rise in numbers above her present level. The "polite, fashionable, well-educated people in New York" cannot save St. Peter from sinking.

But let us see now what is "sport" for Catholics:

"It is rare sport for Catholics to see multitudes of men like Pusey, Dix, and Hopkins, assisted by multitudes of admiring people, throwing stones, and abjurgation, and spittle on all that to Protestantism is dear. It is common, constant sport too. There need be no apprehension that the thing will be given up. Ritualism is a power which, when it once seizes a Protestant, never lets him go, but lashes him on every day to new action in its favor."

It is sport to see the principles of Protestants and all they hold dear "spit upon;" so it was from the beginning, as the martyrs' blood testifies, and so it will be to the end. Sin in any form is to some like a "sweet morsel under the tongue." It was "sport" to the soldiers to crucify the Man Christ Jesus; and to the tempter to deceive the mother of all living, but they and he shall one day "behold him whom they have pierced." Rev. i. 7.

For the benefit of the Universe we will say that the most evangelical class of christians are those who have not the "mark of the beast," and whose spirit is the same with the souls crying under the altar, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth." Rev. vi. 9.

There is no trouble in seeing that the church of Rome is apostate as clearly now as Paul saw it prophetically; for its abominations are most plainly defined—when in the face of the whole world it can utter such unblushing sentiments as these, and affirm that "no form of Protestant worship has any right, either by nature or by theology, to a moment's existence within the jurisdiction of St Peter." "A Presbyterian" house of worship in Rome was an "outrage." We say, Alas for civilization and humanity—Rome is "still the beast."—Advent Herald.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

We shall never have done with the vexed question as to whether the church of God should keep sacred the First-day, the Seventh-day, or No-day. That one day in seven ought to be observed in solemn assembly and religious worship, and comparative rest from secular toil, is the general conviction of christendom. And the day so observed by ninety-eight one-hundredths of the christian world since the time of the apostles is the first day of the week. No small attention did we for ten years devote to an investigation of this subject. The largest Sabbatical library in the world was collected by us, and is now in the hands of the New York Sabbath Committee. It embraced four hundred and twelve separate works in this special line of doctrine. Our purpose in gathering it was to form a complete Sabbatical Cyclopedia; but the task was too great for our health and we abandoned it.

Since reading on the subject, we have had but one unvaried opinion touching holy time; and that opinion is, that under the gospel dispensation no one day is divinely sanctified or appointed as sacred and sabbatical time, above another. But an opinion that gained sanction in the christian world very near the times of the apostles, and which is confirmed by universal church custom and national legislative enactments, induces us to favor the first day of the week as the proper one for partial rest, assembly, and religious worship. And in this view our conscience is at rest, and none the less is our judgment convinced. In this opinion we follow the entire body of first christians, from Ignatius to Gregory the Great, with the exception only of the christian Israelites, who fondly clung to the old Sabbath and observed seventh day. And the great body of the Waldenses and Anglican and Continental Reformers also held our view. So they read the scriptures, regarding them as teaching the utter abrogation of the sabbatical rest of the seventh day as observed by the Hebrew church before the cross. Of this there is ample proof.

But while the early church and reformers eschewed the seventh and preferred the first day instead, none of them (save a very few) transferred the exact obligations and nature of the old Sabbath to the new day of assembly and worship, but regarded it as a gladsome church festival-day, a day made sacred not by divine law or transfer of fourth commandment authority, but by pleasant memories of a resurrected Christ, by the proprieties of hallowed convocation and sacred worship on some premeditated day, and by general ecclesiastical consent and approval of christians; while neither Puritanism, nor rigidity of practice, nor sanctimonious ascetism obtained among them in regard to it.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—The foregoing is by Eld. D. T. Taylor, extracted from the Crisis. Our views harmonize with Br. T.'s on this subject. The best thing we have yet seen on the question is a sermon by Rev. H. H. DOBNEY, England; which we published in the BIBLE EXAMINER in 1861.

"None ever saw this world as it was in its first creation, but only Adam and his wife; neither shall any ever see it until the manifestation of the children of God, that is, until the redemption or resurrection of the saints .... Adam, therefore, as a type of Christ, reigned in the Church almost a thousand years. The world, therefore, beginning thus, doth show us how it will end, viz., by the reign of the second Adam, as it began with the reign of the first. These long-lived men, therefore, show us the glory that the Church shall have in the latter day, even in the seven-thousandth year of the world, that Sabbath when Christ shall set up his kingdom on earth. According to that which is written: 'They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.' .... Hence, therefore, in the first place, the dragon is chained for these thousand years."—Bunyan.

A WORD IN SEASON.

The following is from the American Baptist, and is worthy of serious consideration by all:

THEATRICAL EXHIBITIONS IN THE CHURCH.

We do not, as a society, profess to believe in the catholic dogma that "the end sanctifies the means." All such worldly methods as theatres, fairs, games of chance, lotteries, etc., to raise money for religious purposes, are inconsistent with the genius of christianity, as taught by Christ and the apostles. It is true that by being conformed to the things of this world, and imitating the devices of Satan we can draw money from the pockets of the worldly man to apply to religious purposes, but at the same time we give him no moral equivalent. He does not give his money because he loves the cause of Christ, but merely to see the amusements of the exhibition as he would at any other theatre. If he gets his pay in fun, it is immaterial what becomes of his money afterward. You have robbed him of his money but have not benefitted his soul. By taking such a course to raise funds you place the church on a level with the theatre, and it will be very absurd to protest against your members attending the theatre when at the same time you countenance and imitate it in the church. Aside from the immoral influence such exibitions have upon the minds of the impenitent, the members themselves always suffer a corresponding decline in their spirituality, and every pastor will bear me out in saying that it generally takes months of hard pastoral labor to bring the church back after having gone through such a retrograde movement as a religious theatre. If there is any place where Shakespeare ought to be performed, it is in the theatre and not in the church of our blessed Lord, who says, "Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise," This conformity to the things of the world in order to raise money has had a very bad tendency in alienating the minds of God's people from the true object of the gospel, the salvation of immortal souls. It is not always the church which raises the most money that does the most good in the world, but the church whose members are striving to do their Master's will in a humble, spiritnal manner, and to keep out of the church every unworthy and unhallowed means of supplying its treasury.

In connection with this subject I wish to remark that the practice of taking up collections in the sanctuary on the sabbath has obviously a bad influence on the congregation. It is necessary that we have money to defray the expenses of the church, but this should be done in an unbobtrusive manner. Would it not be better to let the executive committee attend to this, and solicit individual donations, or else lay a tax on the members sufficient to meet the expenses?

OUR MOTHER.—Alas, how little do we appreciate a mother's tenderness while living! How heedless are we in youth of all her anxieties and kindnesses! But when she is dead and gone; when the cares and coldness of the world come withering to our hearts; when we experience how hard it is to find true sympathy, how few love us for ourselves, how few will befriend us in our misfortunes; then it is, that we think of the mother, the good mother we have lost.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar FOR SIX MONTHS; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy for their services.

The Postage on the HERALD OF LIFE, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

ALL LETTERS relating to the HERALD OF LIFE, whether a business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"GEO. STORRS,
BOX 4658,
NEW YORK."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

ALL NAMES of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Poetry.

WAITING FOR CHRIST.

(From the German of Hiller.)

We wait for Thee, all-glorious One!
We look for thine appearing;
We bear thy name, and on the throne
We see thy presence cheering.
Faith even now
Uplifts its brow
And sees the Lord descending,
And with him bliss unending.

We wait for Thee, through days forlorn,
In patient self-denial;
We know that thou our guilt hast borne
Upon the cross of trial.
And well may we
Submit with thee
To bear the cross and love it,
Until thy hand remove it.

We wait for Thee; already thou
Hast all our heart's submission;
And though the spirit sees thee now,
We long for open vision;
When ours shall be
Sweet rest with thee,
And pure, unfading pleasure,
And life in endless measure.

We wait for Thee with certain hope—
The time will soon be over;
With childlike longing we look up,
Thy glory to discover.
O bliss! to share
Thy triumph there,
When home, with joy and singing,
The Lord his saints is bringing.

Children's Department.

A PROVERB ILLUSTRATED.

"Willows are weak; but they bind other wood."

There was a tumult in the city, and darkness and sin; for those who had bread gave it with malignant pride, and those who were starving ate it and cursed them.

The proud ones were led by a rich weakling, who knew nothing, and scorned the wise if they were poor. And he pampered his dogs and kicked the dying philosopher at his gate. He laughed loudly, and flung coin to the foolish, and they called him "My lord omnipotent," not knowing exactly what that meant, but that the title could not belong to a poor man was certain.

And so it was that among the poor of the city, there was the deepest hatred against those who wasted or withheld the treasure according to the moment's fancy; and they had sworn that they would not sleep until they had made a feast, with music and dancing, in the storehouses of their oppressors.

When a rumor of it reached the ears of the Weakling, he laughed a scornful laugh; but his knees shook.

Far away in a garret of the city, a woman was praying. It was a sad story, and the Weakling was to blame.

Her father had been a prosperous citizen and a God-fearing man, and he had influence in the city. And that proud one, moved by jealousy, had stirred up the rich against him, and they brought against him untrue accusations. His defence they would not allow to be heard openly, but they had him driven from the city, and he had been heard of no more. Two daughters bore his name, and they went with their father to the seashore and there took leave of him, for those cruel ones would not let them go with him into exile. When they returned, poor and desolate, to the city, where had been their stately home, they came to this tiny garret. The neighbors, to comfort them, would say, "Ah! you will get used to this. You will make new friends and be happy." Then Sara, the elder, stood erect, pale and motionless. The fire of her black eyes was quenched by no "foolish tear." No complaint lengthened the long day. But on St. Peter's eve, she said, "I may be broken; I cannot bend." And that night she died. Thus Monica was left alone. But she had a golden secret which enabled her to bend and not be broken. She visited the sick and the prisoners. She sought out the erring, and told to them glad tidings. She shared her scanty food with the starving, and her tears flowed with those of the sorrowful. For all her prayers ascended to him for whose sake she did it, him whom she loved much, and he gladdened her heart with the assurance, "Thou hast done it unto me." Thus she was "as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing: as poor, yet making many rich" (in bidding them take of the unsearchable riches of Christ); "as having nothing, yet possessing all things." To every sorrow, every joy, every duty, she bent.

And now she was praying; her heart was burdened. She had influenced individuals, but how should she sway the multitude. She had never thought herself "sufficient" for the least of these things; her "sufficiency" had been of God. Yet now, in the face of so great a need, she had forgotten that He is all-sufficient, and was burdened with the overwhelming sense of her own weakness.

"Ah! Lord God," she had been saying, "I cannot speak, for I am a child." But the Lord said unto her, "Say not, I am a child, for thou shalt go to all that I shall send thee, and whatsoever I command thee thou shalt speak. Be not afraid of them, for I am with thee to deliver thee."

Then she cried, and her inmost soul listened, "Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth." And as she arose, she was saying aloud, "I am the vine, ye are the branches; without me ye can do nothing." And again, "When I am weak, then am I strong." "Most gladly therefore will I glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me."

In the market place the bell was ringing, and the citizens came flocking there. In an hour the barns would be in their power. There stood Monica, and she was singing this psalm,—

"Praise ye the Lord. Praise the Lord, O my soul. While I live will I praise the Lord: I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being. Put not your trust in princes, nor in the son of man, in whom there is no help. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish. Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God: which made heaven and earth, the sea and all that therein is; which keepeth truth for ever: which executeth judgment for the oppressed: which giveth food to the hungry. The Lord looseth the prisoners: the Lord openeth the eyes of the blind: the Lord raiseth them that are bowed down: the Lord loveth the righteous; the Lord preserveth the strangers; He relieveth the fatherless and widow: but the way of the wicked he turneth upside down. The Lord shall reign for ever, even thy God, O Zion, unto all generations. Praise ye the Lord."

And before she ended the whole multitude was singing with her. Then, in a clear voice, she read these words, "Thus saith the Lord Jesus, Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" "Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin.... If God so clothe the grass of the field, which to-day is, and to-morrow is cast into the oven, shall He not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith....Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you." "Casting all your care upon Him, for He careth for you."

There was silence for a little space. Then said one of the citizens, "What shall we do, Monica? We see plainly that you would not have us seize upon the storehouses."

"No, Gaspard; for he has said, 'Thou shalt not steal.'"

"What, then, can we do? If we cannot work we must starve."

"It were better to starve than to do wrong. Shall we who know in whose hand is all power, and that He is love, disobey his command, and not rather trust his promise? Hear what He says, 'Trust in the Lord and do good; so shalt thou dwell in the land, and verily thou shalt be fed.'"

"Who will give it up for Monica?" shouted the old man.

"I will," chorused a hundred voices. "I will, for Monica shared her last loaf with me." "I will, for Monica wept with me when I lost my little babe, which few thought worth minding about." "I will, for Monica helped me when others scorned." "I will, for Monica told me about One who helpeth all our infirmities, and he helps me now."

But when Monica's voice could be heard, this was what she said: "Not for my sake, I pray you, but for his who is love, and who worketh in poor weak ones both to will and to do, of his good pleasure. For His sake give up this wild scheme of sin and hatred, considering how great things He hath for Christ's sake forgiven us. But we must go and speak to these great ones."

Then cried they all, "Monica, will you go?"

Then Monica put away the remembrance of the cruel wrong, and went and stood before the Weakling. And she told him that the men would gladly work if he would give them bread for wages. Then he cowered; and she said, "They will do you no harm, I will answer for it, though you are in their power. Give them only what they ask."

And he said, "They will scorn me."

Then she pitied his degradation, and said, "They scorn you now. Give them love instead of hatred, and they will scorn you no more: they will give you their confidence and their respect. They scorn you now in your power, but when love and power are united they will revere you. The Omnipotent One is love. For his mercy's sake, who still loves you, whilst he has power to destroy you as you deserve, begin now, and the reward of loving, you will find to be—increased willingness and power to do so."

* * * * *

So the citizens worked each day, and at evening, in the market place, he stood and gave to them the money that they had earned. And Monica came there with her townfolk to receive the mony due for her works. But to each she gave, and from all received, of the priceless heavenly riches of love.

By the prince there stood one day an old man. He had come, he said, from a land of exile. And as Monica drew near, and beheld his out-stretched arms, she knew that her father was not dead, and that the prince had brought him home again.

"Ah! my child," he said, "I have had tidings of you even in that far-off land—tidings which rejoiced my heart. I worked daily in the forest, and I thought all the long day of my child, and prayed that I might see her again. And as often as I made up my bundles at eve, I remembered the work my daughter was doing, and said, 'Yes, willows are weak, but they bind other wood.'"

What is the secret of strength? Pliability! Adaptation to circumstances and duties. And what is the secret of this? Love; the sap which flows through the weakest twigs, and makes them strong to bind, tender to hold. This sap is derived from the root, and those that are most full of it bind together diverse kinds of wood, rugged, gnarled, smooth and tender.

Those whom Love encircles are brought near to each other. She lays the weak and the sorrowful, the poor, and the erring, side by side in her bosom; and they clasp each other's hands as she folds her sheltering arms around them.—Selected.

PROPHECY.

While so many in this degenerate age seem to regard the study of prophecy as not only "uninteresting and unimportant, but improper, presumptuous and injurious," we have reason to rejoice that not a few now rising up, of a very different spirit, whose fervent prayer often ascends on high—like that of the Psalmist of old, "Lord, open thou mine eyes that I may behold wonderous things out of thy Law."

An over-confident objector boldly asserts that "the days of miracles being past, it is worse than useless to be looking for these wonderful things for which the strict constructionists are so fondly longing." But this is merely begging the question? For what authority is there for saying that "the days of miracles are over?" Are we not informed in terms the most explicit though general,—in addition to the many stupendous signs and wonders specifically predicted,—that so marvellous will be the miracles performed on the restoration of Israel, that those formerly wrought shall "no more be remembered;" and that "the nations shall see and be confounded at all their might!" Surely, then, such objectors "do greatly err, not knowing the the scriptures nor the power of God." "Oh that God would speak," says the Patriarch of Ur, "and show them the secrets of wisdom, that they are double to that which is!" And, strange to say, many of those who thus discredit a literal construction of prophecy, under the pretext that miracles are forever ended, fully believe in that most stupendous of all miracles—the resurrection and rapture of the saints,—for, few indeed are there, now-adays, of the Sadducean non-resurrrection school of Hymeneus and Philetus.

It is also seriously, however strangely, alleged in opposition to the study of prophecy, that in consequence of the inherent obscurity with which it is charged, "so little can be really understood, that it must necessarily be devoid of all practical utility." But has not this objection been urged by skeptics of every hue, in all ages, against the whole Bible? Never, however, was there a greater mistake. Such studies, by acquainting the mind with the nature of the "things to come,"—even should they impart to us no tangible and satisfactory information, still give us a realizing sense of invisible things, strengthening faith, confirming hope, weaning us from earthly trifles and fleshly lusts, and securing a closer walk with God. No surer preventive of worldly mindedness, frivolity, lukewarmness, and indeed all the fruits of the flesh, the allurements of the world, could well be devised than the elevating reflections enkindled by a knowledge of "the things that shall be hereafter." The soul-elevating influence of a knowledge of "the powers of the world to come," is peculiarly well calculated to invigorate the church and restore it to its former state of purity, zeal, and efficiency. Let any one read the Bible with the confident assurance that the Lord really means what he says, and will perform what he promises; and if that blessed book does not afford him a hundred fold more delight as well as a thousand fold more information than all the productions of men, then let me be accounted both a simpleton and a knave. Indeed, what could possibly tend to cheer our pathway through this benighted world more than the illumination shed by the "sure word of prophecy that shineth as a light in a dark place till the day down, and the day star arise in our hearts."

To neglect the subject of prophecy, therefore, is to neglect the cause of one's own best interests and highest enjoyments; and of course involves no little culpability. For so unambiguously do the "signs of the times" indicate the near approach of "the time of Jacob's trouble," that however leniently the Lord may be disposed to wink at the ignorance and inattention of Christians of prior days, the farther neglect of this important study in the present day cannot but be regarded as culpable in a high degree. Not only are we encouraged by "the blessed Comforter," the divine Author of all prophetic communications, to take heed to prophecy, even to the visionary prefigurations contained in the most obscure of all prophetic books, but are plainly admonished that "if any man shall take away from the words of the book of prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the Book of Life, and out of the Holy City, and from the things that are written in the book." (Rev. xxii. 19.) Now, if it be thus hazardous to subtract from the "words of the book of this prophecy,"—the apparently most unimportant and unpractical of them all,—how fearfully dangerous must it be to neglect the whole of it! And does it not look too much like taking away the whole of it when we thus ignore and virtually nullify it?

It is charged upon those who give respectful heed to prophecy, that "sooner or later they become unsettled, both in the theory and practice of the gospel:" but does not the prophet-apostle Paul (and surely he ought to be good authority), inform us in closing his Epistle to the Romans, that, on the contrary, we are "established by the scriptures of the prophets, as well as by the gospel?"

"Let us not peer into these things," says another objector, "for God in his good time will reveal them by his Spirit." But did he thus reveal and herald forth the former advent of his Son just before the expiration of the time so long appointed for his coming? Then why should he give us any farther explanation of the prophecies relating to the on-coming Advent, or of the accomplishment of any other prophecy whatever? Instead of thus waiting in supine indifference, are we not bound to imitate the examples of the worthies of old, "searching diligently what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ did signify when it testified these things?"

Many there are, perplexed by the antagonistic claims of rival schemes, and disgusted by the absurdities, inconsistencies, and extravagances of incompetent commentators, are conscientiously deterred from entering upon a subject apparently so hopelessly abstruse and inexplicable, as if that were a sufficient justification for such neglect. For what subject would ever be examined, were that an accepted rule of action! Besides, the promised blessing is not made dependent upon our comprehension of them but attention to them.

But most of those whose attitude is that either of indifference or of opposition to the claims of prophecy, take refuge under cover of the objection that "inasmuch as the views of the wisest and best of critics and commentators in all ages are so discordant and unsatisfactory, prophecy must necessarily be a subject too difficult for ordinary apprehension." But if this allegation be at all true in relation to prophetic subjects, is it not equally so in relation to all the contents of the Bible? a conclusion surely from which every rational mind will instinctively recoil; for what subject is there in the whole range of divine communications upon which sectarian commentators and interpreters have not disagreed, and palmed off speculations the most absurd and dangerous as well as diverse and unsatisfactory? How diverse, unsatisfactory, absurd, and even injurious, for example, are many of the views advanced on such plain topics as the ordinances themselves,—the so-called "sacraments." If we wait for unanimity of sentiment in relation to any one oracle of eternal truth whatever, before we give heed to it, never will it be heeded. But surely to make either prophecy or the student of prophecy responsible for the non sequiturs and fanciful interpretations of even the most learned of critics and interpreters, if given to speculation, is as unfair as it is illogical,—how much more unjust, then, to lay to their charge the wild vagaries and ridiculous crudities of mountebank interpreters, deluded speculators, and hyper-spiritualizing allegorizers!—Selected.

ROME STILL THE BEAST.

The Roman Catholic organ, Universe, of Philadelphia—a sort of semi-barbarian sheet—is jubilant over the Protestants who have gone over to Ritualism, it says:

"This tendency to the Pope, far, far from decreasing, is growing very rapidly. A new, a long and a bold step is made by it every twenty-four hours. It wears a seven mile boot, and is giving constant use to that boot in kicking Protestantism dead, and in marching gayly to the Eternal City. Dr. Dix, of New York, appears to be the captain in the movement in this country. He plays Catholic every Sunday and every festival with great ability, and with admirable success."

The Flora McFlimsey church the Universe acknowledges tends to the Pope, and no one wide awake would doubt that observation. But such as leave the chaste plainness of pure christianity for outward demonstrations of pomp and show, are of no more account to evangelical christendom than would be so many Roman Catholics. Such are neither ornaments to the church nor desirable members to have within its pale.

Rome receives them with open arms, and we can well imagine the beautiful addition they will make to the church of the Eternal City. The Universe is welcome to this class of people, for being no benefit to us they are quite well adapted to adorn Catholicism. The Universe thinks they will sweep Protestanism away, as when Ritualism seizes a Protestant "it never lets him go." But it ought to be remembered that it is only the weak it seizes, that never for a moment is it to the rest but an abomination to look upon. The Roman Catholics have tried the effect of the stake and sword to demolish the Protestant religion, but now seem to have more faith in this new heresy in the churches themselves; they "shout to the leaders of this movement to hasten their work and reach the end speedily."

So elated with the idea of having "fashionable people" to fill up St. Peter in lieu of the lower classes, with their humble Peter's pence to fill up the coffers of the church, that it exclaims—"All the polite, well-educated fashionable people in New York attend the Roman Catholic church. We happen to know some of the wealthiest congregations in New York, of which two are on and near Fifth Avenue, and not a member has once thought of marrying Flora McFlimsey. But the Universe is dreaming now, and visions become reality.

"Even the Methodists are tainted with the 'new paganism.' In a new Wesleyan church in Cambridge, Maryland, they have Latin crosses, Maltese crosses, I. H. S.'s, and other Catholic symbols, and they chant the Te Deum, the Gloria Patri, and other hymns. This is acknowledging the Pope, and throwing abomination upon abomination on the founder of Methodism. Where is the ghost of Wesley? We should be sorry to make any objection to the proceeding."

Perhaps if Universe looks a little nearer home it will find reason to call out, "Where is the ghost of St. Peter?" or greater than he, "St. Mary?" The next day after the proclamation of liberty in Italy, and celibacy was no longer a law, "twenty-five priests" so departed from the faith of the Pope that they forthwith took wives. The greatest of great men in the Roman Catholic church, who drew up with so much care the article defending the "Immaculate Conception," was constrained to leave the city, and with him went many priests—these heretics, how they would have fared under St. Peter's temporal power! In South America "five hundred" of the more faithful were expatriated at one time for being obnoxious to the common people. What Papal Rome gains in one place she loses in another, and she will probably never rise in numbers above her present level. The "polite, fashionable, well-educated people in New York" cannot save St. Peter from sinking.

But let us see now what is "sport" for Catholics:

"It is rare sport for Catholics to see multitudes of men like Pusey, Dix, and Hopkins, assisted by multitudes of admiring people, throwing stones, and abjurgation, and spittle on all that to Protestantism is dear. It is common, constant sport too. There need be no apprehension that the thing will be given up. Ritualism is a power which, when it once seizes a Protestant, never lets him go, but lashes him on every day to new action in its favor."

It is sport to see the principles of Protestants and all they hold dear "spit upon;" so it was from the beginning, as the martyrs' blood testifies, and so it will be to the end. Sin in any form is to some like a "sweet morsel under the tongue." It was "sport" to the soldiers to crucify the Man Christ Jesus; and to the tempter to deceive the mother of all living, but they and he shall one day "behold him whom they have pierced." Rev. i. 7.

For the benefit of the Universe we will say that the most evangelical class of christians are those who have not the "mark of the beast," and whose spirit is the same with the souls crying under the altar, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth." Rev. vi. 9.

There is no trouble in seeing that the church of Rome is apostate as clearly now as Paul saw it prophetically; for its abominations are most plainly defined—when in the face of the whole world it can utter such unblushing sentiments as these, and affirm that "no form of Protestant worship has any right, either by nature or by theology, to a moment's existence within the jurisdiction of St Peter." "A Presbyterian" house of worship in Rome was an "outrage." We say, Alas for civilization and humanity—Rome is "still the beast."—Advent Herald.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

We shall never have done with the vexed question as to whether the church of God should keep sacred the First-day, the Seventh-day, or No-day. That one day in seven ought to be observed in solemn assembly and religious worship, and comparative rest from secular toil, is the general conviction of christendom. And the day so observed by ninety-eight one-hundredths of the christian world since the time of the apostles is the first day of the week. No small attention did we for ten years devote to an investigation of this subject. The largest Sabbatical library in the world was collected by us, and is now in the hands of the New York Sabbath Committee. It embraced four hundred and twelve separate works in this special line of doctrine. Our purpose in gathering it was to form a complete Sabbatical Cyclopedia; but the task was too great for our health and we abandoned it.

Since reading on the subject, we have had but one unvaried opinion touching holy time; and that opinion is, that under the gospel dispensation no one day is divinely sanctified or appointed as sacred and sabbatical time, above another. But an opinion that gained sanction in the christian world very near the times of the apostles, and which is confirmed by universal church custom and national legislative enactments, induces us to favor the first day of the week as the proper one for partial rest, assembly, and religious worship. And in this view our conscience is at rest, and none the less is our judgment convinced. In this opinion we follow the entire body of first christians, from Ignatius to Gregory the Great, with the exception only of the christian Israelites, who fondly clung to the old Sabbath and observed seventh day. And the great body of the Waldenses and Anglican and Continental Reformers also held our view. So they read the scriptures, regarding them as teaching the utter abrogation of the sabbatical rest of the seventh day as observed by the Hebrew church before the cross. Of this there is ample proof.

But while the early church and reformers eschewed the seventh and preferred the first day instead, none of them (save a very few) transferred the exact obligations and nature of the old Sabbath to the new day of assembly and worship, but regarded it as a gladsome church festival-day, a day made sacred not by divine law or transfer of fourth commandment authority, but by pleasant memories of a resurrected Christ, by the proprieties of hallowed convocation and sacred worship on some premeditated day, and by general ecclesiastical consent and approval of christians; while neither Puritanism, nor rigidity of practice, nor sanctimonious ascetism obtained among them in regard to it.

Note by the Editor:—The foregoing is by Eld. D. T. Taylor, extracted from the Crisis. Our views harmonize with Br. T.'s on this subject. The best thing we have yet seen on the question is a sermon by Rev. H. H. Dobney, England; which we published in the Bible Examiner in 1861.

"None ever saw this world as it was in its first creation, but only Adam and his wife; neither shall any ever see it until the manifestation of the children of God, that is, until the redemption or resurrection of the saints ....Adam, therefore, as a type of Christ, reigned in the Church almost a thousand years. The world, therefore, beginning thus, doth show us how it will end, viz., by the reign of the second Adam, as it began with the reign of the first. These long-lived men, therefore, show us the glory that the Church shall have in the latter day, even in the seven-thousandth year of the world, that Sabbath when Christ shall set up his kingdom on earth. According to that which is written: 'They lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years.'....Hence, therefore, in the first place, the dragon is chained for these thousand years."—Bunyan.

A WORD IN SEASON.

The following is from the American Baptist, and is worthy of serious consideration by all:

THEATRICAL EXHIBITIONS IN THE CHURCH.

We do not, as a society, profess to believe in the catholic dogma that "the end sanctifies the means." All such worldly methods as theatres, fairs, games of chance, lotteries, etc., to raise money for religious purposes, are inconsistent with the genius of christianity, as taught by Christ and the apostles. It is true that by being conformed to the things of this world, and imitating the devices of Satan we can draw money from the pockets of the worldly man to apply to religious purposes, but at the same time we give him no moral equivalent. He does not give his money because he loves the cause of Christ, but merely to see the amusements of the exhibition as he would at any other theatre. If he gets his pay in fun, it is immaterial what becomes of his money afterward. You have robbed him of his money but have not benefitted his soul. By taking such a course to raise funds you place the church on a level with the theatre, and it will be very absurd to protest against your members attending the theatre when at the same time you countenance and imitate it in the church. Aside from the immoral influence such exibitions have upon the minds of the impenitent, the members themselves always suffer a corresponding decline in their spirituality, and every pastor will bear me out in saying that it generally takes months of hard pastoral labor to bring the church back after having gone through such a retrograde movement as a religious theatre. If there is any place where Shakespeare ought to be performed, it is in the theatre and not in the church of our blessed Lord, who says, "Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise," This conformity to the things of the world in order to raise money has had a very bad tendency in alienating the minds of God's people from the true object of the gospel, the salvation of immortal souls. It is not always the church which raises the most money that does the most good in the world, but the church whose members are striving to do their Master's will in a humble, spiritual manner, and to keep out of the church every unworthy and unhallowed means of supplying its treasury.

In connection with this subject I wish to remark that the practice of taking up collections in the sanctuary on the sabbath has obviously a bad influence on the congregation. It is necessary that we have money to defray the expenses of the church, but this should be done in an unbobtrusive manner. Would it not be better to let the executive committee attend to this, and solicit individual donations, or else lay a tax on the members sufficient to meet the expenses?

Our Mother.—Alas, how little do we appreciate a mother's tenderness while living! How heedless are we in youth of all her anxieties and kindnesses! But when she is dead and gone; when the cares and coldness of the world come withering to our hearts; when we experience how hard it is to find true sympathy, how few love us for ourselves, how few will befriend us in our misfortunes; then it is, that we think of the mother, the good mother we have lost.

Our Israelitish Origin.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. Wilson, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For ourself, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subscribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy for their services.

The Postage on the Herald of Life, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore, the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All Letters relating to the Herald of Life, whether on business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
New York."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

All names of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office, County, and State must be given and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 180. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 38.

THE HERALD OF LIFE
IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY
"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"
AT
No. 37 Park Row,
(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.
GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

DESIRE FOR IMMORTALITY.

It is perhaps safe to say that a very large portion of the animal creation, with the habits of which we are to any considerable extent acquainted, possess, in some degree, love of life. With those lower in the scale than man, however, this love is not, it may be presumed, affected by any acquired knowledge respecting the conditions of life and death, but is simply instinctive, and that they might not fail to accomplish the object of their being, was obviously intended by the Creator to serve as a protection to individual species, insuring its existence against the ravages of hostility. Man was created for ends far higher and more glorious than any other creature. One of the sublime purposes of his creation is attainment unto eternal life, which is placed within his reach; and unto him is revealed the medium by which it may be secured. But as it is a condition only obtainable by obedience to laws which ofttimes require him to act contrary to the inclinations of his nature, lest he should be slothful, satiate himself with the existence already given, and make no effort to procure the better, the instinctive love of life which he possesses in common with other animals is strengthened and intensified by the action of certain qualities with which he is endowed and a strong desire for immortality thereby engendered.

The frequency with which advocates of the immortal soul theory draw for evidence of the substantiability of their pet doctrine upon the fact of this love of life, and longing, with which God has been pleased to bless us, for something better and more enduring than this state of being affords, shows something of the absurdities with which they plunge in their endeavors to bolster up a falling fabric. Is desire for a thing proof that we do or will possess it? Let us see. A man has an intense desire to gain a certain position of honor: is the existence of that desire evidence that his wish will be gratified? Certainly not. Thousands of men have desired to become governors of states, for instance, who never rose to the political distinction of village postmaster, nor that of delegate to a county convention. Most people desire wealth, but is it any assurance that they will ever be rich? According to the argument upon this point, of those religionists who claim this longing for immortality as proof that we do or will possess it, a great majority of people ought to be millionaires, for they certainly appear to very much more desire wealth than they do immortality. Desire is based upon belief in the existence and attainability of the object wished for; and though that belief is perhaps generally well founded it may be utterly groundless, its subject existing only in fancy. Desire for a thing, therefore, however strong, is not even proof that the thing has or ever will have existence. But on the other hand this longing for immortality is proof that we are not immortal. No man continues to long for a thing after it is obtained; for the longing is then swallowed up in the satisfaction consequent upon possession, and no longer exists. So if man was immortal he could not long for immortality. In discussing the question of a future state, theologians consider only the assumption of inherent immortality on the one hand and non-existence after death on the other; entirely overlooking, or purposely ignoring, the bible doctrine of an immortal life to be conferred at a future time upon them only "who by patient continuance in well doing seek" for it, and in connection with which their "longing" looms up in power and beauty as an incentive to faithful compliance with the terms upon which that life may be obtained.

That learned and justly eminent commentator, Dr. Adam Clarke, first lauds, then quotes, the following well known lines of Mr. Addison:

"Whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortality?
Or whence this secret dread, and inward horror,
Of falling into naught? Why shrinks the soul
Back on herself, and startles at destruction?
* * * * *
The soul, secured in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger and defies its point.
The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter and the crush of worlds."

We have seen "whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire, this longing after immortality;" seen that it is a kind and merciful provision by him to whose goodness and love it gives perpetual attestation; for without it few, if any, would take the cross to secure the crown. Does not the dread of destruction prove that the subject of that emotion has faith in the possibility of becoming its victim? Most assuredly. The dread, too, is just in proportion to the strength of the faith. Well might Dr. Adam Clarke, and all other theologians of the so-called orthodox school, ask "whence this secret dread and inward horror of falling into naught?" Like the "desire" and the "longing," it is God-given, and assists man to shun so dire a condition; one which is unequivocally recognized by the word of God. The psalmist-prophet beheld how the wicked prospered and flourished, having "more than heart could wish," and comprehended it not until he "understood their end," that God casts "them down into destruction." To Jehovah he says, "Thou art God; thou turnest man to destruction." Paul declares of the "enemies of the cross of Christ," "whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame," that their "end is destruction;" and says that when some who love not the Lord nor desire his coming "shall say, peace and saf ty; then sudden destruction cometh upon them." There is, then, some danger of "falling into naught;" and, consequently, good reason why all, not secure in the promise of eternal life through Jesus Christ should shrink back upon themselves and startle at destruction; for its dark and terrible mouth is ever open to receive into its relentless grasp all them who are in the broad way which leads down to it. God has declared that he takes no pleasure in the death of them that die, but would that all should come to him and live; and he has, accordingly employed every means, consistent with his own glory, to swell the number of the redeemed.

But what a picture is presented in the foregoing lines endorsed by Dr. Clarke. A soul is so conscious of its immortality that it smiles at the drawn dagger and defies its point, and yet it shrinks back upon itself and startles at destruction! Could any mind, unwarped and unclouded by that uncouth Pagan fable, have conceived such nonsense? And yet it is not more at variance with either itself or truth than very much that is constantly being said and written.

Immortality is no speculation, but a sublime and more than plainly revealed fact, because demonstrated by our Lord Jesus Christ who was himself once dead, but is now, because raised from the dead, "alive for evermore," and he is the "first fruits of them that slept;" the pledge and sample of the resurrection harvest. Pledge, because he hath possession of the "keys of hell (hades, grave) and of death," and will at the appointed time, unlock the gates thereof and bring out all them whose names are written in the "book of life;" whose lives are hid with him in God. Sample, because all them that are made alive will, like the pledge, come forth to immortality and glory. There will then be no "secret dread, and inward horror, of falling into naught," no shrinking back and startling at destruction; but, redeemed from death, and brought into "fullness of joy" and "pleasure forevermore," delivered from that enemy, through fear of which we are all our lifetime "subject to bondage," we shall "flourish in immortal youth," unhurt by aught that may exist throughout all God's broad universe, though it be the "war of elements, the wreck of matter, or the crush of worlds."

L. C. THORNE.

PRAYER OF JESUS ON THE CROSS.

Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.—Luke xxiii. 34.

We have just done contemplating the agony of Jesus in the garden, and those "prayers and supplications, with strong cryings and tears," unto him who alone was able to help. Consequent upon these, and, doubtless, in answer to them, there seems to have been a remission of his sufferings. But that remission was but temporary, only sufficient for the powers of nature to rally, and for faith and fortitude to acquire further needful strength. Such was the tenderness of the Redeemer's spirit; such his keen sensibility to suffering, that had he not been favored with some alleviation, the lamp of life would probably have been extinguished ere the purposes of infinite wisdom had been accomplished.

That unknown and amazing agony ceased. But the tragical scenes of that eventful night went on; each one contributing to, and urging forward, the momentous catastrophe which was to follow. Jesus is betrayed—mocked—arraigned—scourged—crowned with thorns, and condemned to the death of the cross.

To that cross he is at length nailed; and there on the accursed tree, the Saviour of the world now hangs....

While the measure of his sufferings was fast filling up, and it would seem impossible that he should not be wholly absorbed in his own intense pangs, his eye fell upon one—she was a spectator of the scene; she was poor, homeless, friendless, wretched, forlorn. For the moment he forgot his own agony; and, with all the tenderness and sympathy of an affectionate son, he commended her to the care and kindness of the "beloved disciple," who was also near. "Woman," said he, "behold thy son. Disciple, behold thy mother."

When or where, in the annals of filial love, was there a parallel to this? And yet, in that bosom whence proceeded that filial love, there was a deeper, holier current; a tide flowing forth, and having for its object those who were now mocking his agonies and thirsting for his blood. "Father," said he—though that Father's face was hid from him, and he might no longer pray for himself nor for a mitigation of his own personal sufferings—yet he might pray for his murderers, for the mockers of his pangs—and he does pray: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Hark, how he prays! The charming sound
Dwells on his dying lips;
And every groan and gaping wound
Cries, "Father! let the rebels live!"

The "Evangelical Prophet" had, seven hundred years before, foretold that he would "make intercession for the transgressors, (Isa. liii. 12;) and here that prophecy is fulfilled. He had himself inculcated the love of enemies—the forgiveness of injuries—and prayer for those who should despitefully use and persecute; and the rule which he had prescribed for others, he now illustrates by his own noble and sublime example.

The question has been raised: Whom did Jesus embrace in his supplication for forgiveness? Two distinct classes were accessory to his crucifixion—Romans and Jews. The former were the immediate agents; the latter the instigators. Both, however, were ignorant of the enormity of their guilt. Paul says, "that had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." This ignorance Jesus urges as a reason why God should pardon them. In respect to the Romans, they were really ignorant that he was the Son of God; nor had they, perhaps, any means of distinguishing between him and the malefactors who were crucified with him. But the Jews were better informed; at least, they knew that he was innocent, and they might have learned his true character. The prejudices, under the influence of which they regarded him, had the effect to render them incapable of fairly estimating the evidence which he adduced that he was the true Son of God. They were, therefore guilty, especially the rulers, who were better situated to inform themselves as to his true character. All, indeed, might have arrived at the truth—for the light shone bright than light, because their deeds were evil.

It was however, a time of love and compassion when Jesus was on the cross. It was right that this "morn of mercy" should be signalized by the voice of prayer, ascending from him who was expiating human guilt. It was a glorious act thus to antedate—if we may so speak—the application of his blood to wash out the deep moral stains of those who were about to shed it. It was a pledge and presage of the efficacy of the atoning work of Jesus. If he could ask such blessings on the heads of murderers amid the agonies of crucifixion—how might he not be supposed to intercede when the bitterness of death should have passed, and the glorious work of expiation should have been accomplished!

To men of the world, such kindness and compassion may seem inexplicable. They are governed by no such motives: are influenced by no such love: can feel no such duty. But here they may learn from the example of Jesus what his religion inculcates. It is difficult so to act. That may well be granted. It is difficult. To bear reproaches and persecutions with patience; to bless those who are seeking our ruin; and, more than all, to pray in kindness and sincerity for them, is difficult. But Jesus did it; Stephen did it; Paul did it; and thousands, governed by the same love, have thus honored the sublime and glorious inculcation of the gospel.

What a different world had this proved had the example of Jesus been strictly followed, since he presented it on the cross! Ah! those fires of revenge, intense and consuming, had never burned; those persecutions, those murders, those midnight assassinations, had never polluted the pages of our history. Those wars which have made wives widows and children orphans, had never been waged. The walls of a thousand dungeons had not reverberated with the clanking of the chains of the incarcerated victims of revenge; nor had they started at their curses upon the guilty authors of their sufferings.

Well, disciples of Jesus, let the world pass on and continue its revengeful fires, if it please. Let passion rage; let anger burn; but let us, taking a lesson from the precepts and example of Jesus, like him pity; like him pray; like him forgive. Is this difficult? Yes, difficult, but not impossible. By grace we can accomplish it; by grace we can do all duty and practice all self-denial. Let this prayer daily, hourly ascend to him who has set a sublime and glorious example, and he will help us to follow it.

Make us, by thy transforming grace,
Dear Saviour, daily more like thee;
Thy fair example may we trace
To teach us what we ought to be.
Oh, how benevolent and kind!
How mild!—how ready to forgive!
Be this the temper of our mind,
And these the rules by which we live.

—Bible History of Prayer.

THE LANGUAGE OF PROPHECY.

[Concluded from last week.]

It would be difficult to state all the different shades of opinion which are entertained respecting the future, but they may be classed under two principal heads:—

Some expect a universal spread of the Gospel for a thousand years before the close of this dispensation, at the expiration of which they place the general resurrection and the day of judgment, when Jesus will come and cast the wicked into hell, take the righteous back with Him to heaven, and annihilate the earth.

The opposite opinion is that we are to expect the advent of our Lord at any time; that when He comes, He takes the throne of David, and reigns upon earth for a thousand years; that the saints rise and reign with him; during which time the power of Satan is entirely controlled; though at the end of the thousand years, the evil one will be loosed for a short time; after which the wicked shall be raised and judged; the saints removed to heaven, and the earth destroyed.

The "universal spread of the Gospel" corresponds with the language of the prophet, who says, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." When it is said, this shall be for a thousand years, I do not believe the advocates of this view insist that it shall be for that exact time, neither more nor less; for some make it to mean much more, others perhaps comprise the progress of the Gospel in this period. By saying it will be "before the close of this dispensation," I understand it to be supposed that this state of things will be brought about by means similar to those at present in operation; such as the preaching of the word and the distribution of the Scriptures; but that these efforts will be more enlarged, and probably much more extensively blessed, by an increased out-pouring of the Holy Spirit; the change, however, being more or less gradual, not marked by a sudden and definite transition from one state to another, and without the intervention of any miraculous agency.

With regard to the second opinion, I must define what I understand by "expecting," or "looking for," that event; and lastly, the entire expression, "Expecting the coming of the Lord at any time."

By the expression, "the coming of the Lord," I understand the removal of the Lord, in his bodily presence, from the heavens to this earth. When the angel declares that the same Jesus who was taken into heaven, should so come, in like manner as the apostles had seen Him go into heaven, we must understand "going" and "coming" in an analogous sense, namely, the removal of the Lord's bodily presence from one place to another. If, then, it undoubtedly sometimes has this meaning, why should not the word "coming," when applied to Christ, be as uniformly understood in its simple meaning as when applied to others? If any other than the common and natural sense of the words be affirmed, that uncommon meaning must be an exception, and it rests with those who maintain the peculiar view to prove each particular instance.

When it is said, "certain came to Antioch from Judea," it is not thought necessary to prove that this denoted the removal of men in their bodily presence from one place to another. So in saying "we look for Christ from heaven," it is not necessary to prove that this expression implies a removal of his bodily presence from heaven to this earth.

Paul gave directions to Silas and Timotheus to come to him, and he waited for them at Athens; it would be unnecessary to set about proving that he expected their bodily presence; so, when it is said that we wait for God's Son from heaven, we need not prove that we mean the removal of his bodily presence from heaven to this earth.

I must next define what I understand by the expressions "expecting," or "looking for," and "waiting for." They do not only imply loving the appearing, but they embrace something more; we might say, by way of illustration, that Rhoda loved the appearing of Peter, but she did not expect him, therefore she opened not the gate for gladness; but "the people [gladly] received Christ, for they were waiting for him."

That this is the natural and proper meaning of the expressions, may be gathered from their use on other occasions. The impotent folk around Bethesda were waiting for the moving of the waters; doubtless they wished for the appearance of the angel, but had they known that he would not have descended for a thousand years, they would not have been waiting. St. Paul, in like manner, "looked for," or expected Timothy to come with the brethren.

Nor are we to suppose the sense of these expressions altered when applied to the advent of Christ. When Simeon waited for the consolation of Israel, it is clear that he supposed the advent was possible at any moment. In like manner when "all the people were in expectation, and mused in their hearts whether John was the Christ," surely it implies they were in expectation, because they supposed that the advent of Christ drew near. John sent to ask Jesus whether he was the Christ, or whether the should look for another; John looked for the Messiah, knowing that the time of his advent was at hand. So I understand, with respect to the second coming, the expressions "waiting for," and "looking for," do not admit of a meaning which would put the possibility of Messiah's return beyond the period of a natural life; but "expecting" implies not only a possibility, but a probability within that time.

When it is said, "We may be expecting the coming of the Lord at any time," I conceive we must distinguish "the coming of the Lord;" from expressions denoting the moment of the revelation of Jesus Christ, or of the rapture of the saints; doubtless these events are part of the coming, but they are momentary. The coming, I apprehend, embraces a series of events.

This may be illustrated by the circumstances of the first advent. From what day should we date that event? Either from the annunciation to Zacharias, or to the Virgin; from the birth of John, or the day in which the Saviour was born; from the commencement of John's ministry, or the time when "Jesus himself began, being about thirty years of age?" Some might urge the time of the conception, or, at any rate, of the birth of Christ, and they might quote in support the prophecy of Isaiah, "Behold the Virgin shall conceive and bring forth a son." And surely they would say, when embraced by Simeon in the temple, according to revelation, and worshipped by the magi as true-born king of the Jews, it must be acknowledged that the Lord Christ was come. Yet against this it might be advanced that the advent could not be dated before the ministry of John, because John was to "go before him," that is, in his ministry; for it was to be "in the spirit and power of Elias to turn the hearts of the fathers," &c. John, therefore, in his ministry, speaks of Christ's advent as yet future. And as to the prophecies, it appears clear that when Daniel speaks of Messiah the Prince, he refers to his entrance upon his public ministry.

How are we to reconcile these things? I think the fair answer would be, that the whole series of events must be embraced in "the coming of Christ." The first of them cannot be excluded from that category, yet the advent was not complete before the last. In some instances one event might be referred to, as when our Lord said, "The law and the prophets were until John;" that I apprehend related to the commencement of John's ministry; on other occasions there seems a delay until after the ministry of John was concluded; as, for example, when it is said, "Now, when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee," in order to fulfil Isa. ix. 1, 2.

In like manner, with respect to the second advent, it need not be limited to the moment in which the Lord shall be revealed as a flash of lightning, but may embrace a series of events issuing inevitably in that awful and glorious result. When that series shall commence is uncertain and contingent, and therefore known to no one but the Father; but this much negative information we may have: until the series does commence, we may know that the brightness of Christ's presence is not impending; and, on the other hand, when that series does begin, we may expect that all will be quickly accomplished, although the particular hour when the elect shall be caught up to meet the Lord will even then be unknown. When, therefore, it is said that we are to expect the coming of Christ at any time, I conceive the commencement of a series of events, having relation to the progress of the Lord, and terminating in the revelation of Jesus Christ, is intended.

Now to revert to the two opinions as thus defined, the former has the advantage of not militating directly against any article of our creeds; but this arises rather from ambiguity than from correctness; for though probably there is error in both of these statements, the latter appears to be nearer the truth than the former, because the whole difference may be resolved into the order of events; and in this respect I conceive the second view to be correct. The advocates of both opinions expect glorious things in the latter days; they both acknowledge that Jesus Christ will return to this earth some time or other; but the one party are "waiting for the coming of our Lord"—they are, in the first place, "expecting the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour," and a restitution of all things consequent upon that event; whereas the others are expecting that the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord for a thousand years before the day of the Lord: they, therefore, deny the pre-millennial advent of Christ; for one cannot believe two things which are essentially opposed to each other. It would be an abuse of the rational intellect to suppose a man could be in constant expectation of the Lord's advent, and, at the same time, be looking for a thousand years of blessedness to precede that event. A man could not sincerely contemplate the probability of both hypotheses being correct, for one expectation is utterly destructive of the other. We will then assume, as a matter of course, that one who looks for a spiritual millennium is not waiting for the appearing of Jesus Christ.

There are, therefore, two great heads of inquiry—is a spiritual millennium consistent with the character of this present dispensation?—or, on the other hand, is the speedy coming of our Lord a scriptural expectation? Selected.

BELSHAZZAR IN PARIS.

If we may trust the glowing account that has been brought us by the Cable of the ceremony at the distribution of prizes at the Paris Exposition by the French Emperor—few more splendid pageants can have been witnessed by the present generation. Seventy-one thousand people assembled in the great central hall of the building, crowded every passage of approach, and loaded every balcony, and the surge of an ocean of outsiders beat for long hours against the walls of the Imperial Gasometer. When the magnificent procession, with its high-stepping horses, its gilded carriages, its mounted soldiery, its generals in uniform, its ladies arrayed like the lilies of the field, and Solomon to boot, its princes and potentates, had reached the Hall of Ceremony it would seem that everything this earth has of luxury and grandeur was centered in that single spot. High on a throne of royal state, which far outshone the wealth of Ormus or of Ind, the Emperor exalted sat. On one side was the Empress in white satin and silver lace, with pearls and diamonds about her throat, and one great gem that told her beats of heart in flashes of an imperial ray. On the other, sat Haroun al Raschid, or what is left of him, and about the skirts of these three lights of empire there gathered a crowd of princes, princelings, nobles, dignitaries, statesmen, officials, lackeys, and so on, till, at a vast remove, one began to feel the existence of the swarming people of Paris and the world. And while the eye took in this manifold spectacle, there burst into sound the hitherto dumb, expectant instruments of the band of twelve hundred—violin, and harp, and trumpet, on a background of rolling organ harmony, fringed with the jangling music of joy-bells. Then, when silence fell again, the Emperor stood up in his high place, and made a speech, so pure, and good, and wise, that one marvels as he reads it whether the old legends may not be true that tell how a man's own spirit was sometimes rapt out of his body, for a season, while an angel or a demon took the vacant place and blessed or cursed out of the unaccustomed lips.

One curious incident that occurred just at this moment the Cable, doubtless for fear of injuring the harmony of the narrative, omits to mention. When Mr. Hughes, the inventor of the Printing Telegraph, was called up to receive his prize, the Emperor took his hand, making him an exception to all the other recipients of medals. Mr. Hughes, as he touched the Imperial finger, slipped into the august palm of his serene Highness a little bit of paper containing the last message received by the Cable and printed by the machine for which he was just being decorated. It contained these words: "Maximilian is shot. His last words were, 'Poor Carlotta!'" His Royal Serenity read the telegram, and immediately gave evidence of a fearful agitation. His cheek blanched, his hands trembled, and the diamonds on the Imperial garter quivered so in the sunlight that a shout arose from the admiring multitude. What the Emperor thought is, of course, not to be exactly known. But we may conjecture that he heard over all the shouts and music, above the booming of guns and the salvos of artillery, the single shot that was death to his insane ambition as to his deluded dupe, the single cry as of a woman—young, beautiful, and good—answering to the last cry of her young husband—"Poor Carlotta!" "Poor Maximilian!"

Where, in all this tumult of rejoicing, this whirl of splendor, this pomp of luxury, were the victims of his crafty and wicked lust of power. For the rest of his life he drags the bodies of these dead about with him. Wherever he goes that pale face shall look at him as from out the cell where, in madness and utterest desolation, she is to drag out the remnant of life. When he looks into the face, still comely, of that wife of his he shall see, not her eyes, but another's, full of reproach too bitter and too silent to bear. He shall live; but, hard heart, dull conscience, low mind that he has—the heart shall feel, and the conscience shall prick, and the mind shall know that these victims are with him to the end. That shot he shall forever hear, and that cry. His judgment day is come, and all the pomp and splendor that he can gather about him shall not avail to hide him from himself.—N. Y. Tribune, July 4.

How long may it take a man to embrace Christ as his Saviour? As long as it takes a drowing man to let go a straw and lay hold of an offered rope.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 180. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 10, 1867. VOL. IV.—NO. 38.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

DESIRE FOR IMMORTALITY.

It is perhaps safe to say that a very large portion of the animal creation, with the habits of which we are to any considerable extent acquainted, possess, in some degree, love of life. With those lower in the scale than man, however, this love is not, it may be presumed, affected by any acquired knowledge respecting the conditions of life and death, but is simply instinctive, and that they might not fail to accomplish the object of their being, was obviously intended by the Creator to serve as a protection to individual species, insuring its existence against the ravages of hostility. Man was created for ends far higher and more glorious than any other creature. One of the sublime purposes of his creation is attainment unto eternal life, which is placed within his reach; and unto him is revealed the medium by which it may be secured. But as it is a condition only obtainable by obedience to laws which ofttimes require him to act contrary to the inclinations of his nature, lest he should be slothful, satiate himself with the existence already given, and make no effort to procure the better, the instinctive love of life which he possesses in common with other animals is strengthened and intensified by the action of certain qualities with which he is endowed and a strong desire for immortality thereby engendered.

The frequency with which advocates of the immortal soul theory draw for evidence of the substantiability of their pet doctrine upon the fact of this love of life, and longing, with which God has been pleased to bless us, for something better and more enduring than this state of being affords, shows something of the absurdities with which they plunge in their endeavors to bolster up a falling fabric. Is desire for a thing proof that we do or will possess it? Let us see. A man has an intense desire to gain a certain position of honor: is the existence of that desire evidence that his wish will be gratified? Certainly not. Thousands of men have desired to become governors of states, for instance, who never rose to the political distinction of village postmaster, nor that of delegate to a county convention. Most people desire wealth, but is it any assurance that they will ever be rich? According to the argument upon this point, of those religionists who claim this longing for immortality as proof that we do or will possess it, a great majority of people ought to be millionaires, for they certainly appear to very much more desire wealth than they do immortality. Desire is based upon belief in the existence and attainability of the object wished for; and though that belief is perhaps generally well founded it may be utterly groundless, its subject existing only in fancy. Desire for a thing, therefore, however strong, is not even proof that the thing has or ever will have existence. But on the other hand this longing for immortality is proof that we are not immortal. No man continues to long for a thing after it is obtained; for the longing is then swallowed up in the satisfaction consequent upon possession, and no longer exists. So if man was immortal he could not long for immortality. In discussing the question of a future state, theologians consider only the assumption of inherent immortality on the one hand and non-existence after death on the other; entirely overlooking, or purposely ignoring, the bible doctrine of an immortal life to be conferred at a future time upon them only "who by patient continuance in well doing seek" for it, and in connection with which their "longing" looms up in power and beauty as an incentive to faithful compliance with the terms upon which that life may be obtained.

That learned and justly eminent commentator, Dr. Adam Clarke, first lauds, then quotes, the following well known lines of Mr. Addison:

"Whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortality?
Or whence this secret dread, and inward horror,
Of falling into naught? Why shrinks the soul
Back on herself, and startles at destruction?

* * * * *

The soul, secured in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger and defies its point.
The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter and the crush of worlds."

We have seen "whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire, this longing after immortality;" seen that it is a kind and merciful provision by him to whose goodness and love it gives perpetual attestation; for without it few, if any, would take the cross to secure the crown. Does not the dread of destruction prove that the subject of that emotion has faith in the possibility of becoming its victim? Most assuredly. The dread, too, is just in proportion to the strength of the faith. Well might Dr. Adam Clarke, and all other theologians of the so-called orthodox school, ask "whence this secret dread and inward horror of falling into naught?" Like the "desire" and the "longing," it is God-given, and assists man to shun so dire a condition; one which is unequivocally recognized by the word of God. The psalmist-prophet beheld how the wicked prospered and flourished, having "more than heart could wish," and comprehended it not until he "understood their end," that God casts "them down into destruction." To Jehovah he says, "Thou art God; thou turnest man to destruction." Paul declares of the "enemies of the cross of Christ," "whose God is their belly, and whose glory is in their shame," that their "end is destruction;" and says that when some who love not the Lord nor desire his coming "shall say, peace and saf ty; then sudden destruction cometh upon them." There is, then, some danger of "falling into naught;" and, consequently, good reason why all, not secure in the promise of eternal life through Jesus Christ should shrink back upon themselves and startle at destruction; for its dark and terrible mouth is ever open to receive into its relentless grasp all them who are in the broad way which leads down to it. God has declared that he takes no pleasure in the death of them that die, but would that all should come to him and live; and he has, accordingly employed every means, consistent with his own glory, to swell the number of the redeemed.

But what a picture is presented in the foregoing lines endorsed by Dr. Clarke. A soul is so conscious of its immortality that it smiles at the drawn dagger and defies its point, and yet it shrinks back upon itself and startles at destruction! Could any mind, unwarped and unclouded by that uncouth Pagan fable, have conceived such nonsense? And yet it is not more at variance with either itself or truth than very much that is constantly being said and written.

Immortality is no speculation, but a sublime and more than plainly revealed fact, because demonstrated by our Lord Jesus Christ who was himself once dead, but is now, because raised from the dead, "alive forevermore," and he is the "first fruits of them that slept;" the pledge and sample of the resurrection harvest. Pledge, because he hath possession of the "keys of hell (hades, grave) and of death," and will at the appointed time, unlock the gates thereof and bring out all them whose names are written in the "book of life;" whose lives are hid with him in God. Sample, because all them that are made alive will, like the pledge, come forth to immortality and glory. There will then be no "secret dread, and inward horror, of falling into naught," no shrinking back and startling at destruction; but, redeemed from death, and brought into "fullness of joy" and "pleasure forevermore," delivered from that enemy, through fear of which we are all our lifetime "subject to bondage," we shall "flourish in immortal youth," unhurt by aught that may exist throughout all God's broad universe, though it be the "war of elements, the wreck of matter, or the crush of worlds."

L. C. THORNE.

PRAYER OF JESUS ON THE CROSS.

Then said Jesus, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.—Luke xxiii. 34.

We have just done contemplating the agony of Jesus in the garden, and those "prayers and supplications, with strong cryings and tears," unto him who alone was able to help. Consequent upon these, and, doubtless, in answer to them, there seems to have been a remission of his sufferings. But that remission was but temporary, only sufficient for the powers of nature to rally, and for faith and fortitude to acquire further needful strength. Such was the tenderness of the Redeemer's spirit; such his keen sensibility to suffering, that had he not been favored with some alleviation, the lamp of life would probably have been extinguished ere the purposes of infinite wisdom had been accomplished.

That unknown and amazing agony ceased. But the tragical scenes of that eventful night went on; each one contributing to, and urging forward, the momentous catastrophe which was to follow. Jesus is betrayed—mocked—arraigned—scourged—crowned with thorns, and condemned to the death of the cross.

To that cross he is at length nailed; and there on the accursed tree, the Saviour of the world now hangs....

While the measure of his sufferings was fast filling up, and it would seem impossible that he should not be wholly absorbed in his own intense pangs, his eye fell upon one—she was a spectator of the scene; she was poor, homeless, friendless, wretched, forlorn. For the moment he forgot his own agony; and, with all the tenderness and sympathy of an affectionate son, he commended her to the care and kindness of the "beloved disciple," who was also near. "Woman," said he, "behold thy son. Disciple, behold thy mother."

When or where, in the annals of filial love, was there a parallel to this? And yet, in that bosom whence proceeded that filial love, there was a deeper, holier current; a tide flowing forth, and having for its object those who were now mocking his agonies and thirsting for his blood. "Father," said he—though that Father's face was hid from him, and he might no longer pray for himself nor for a mitigation of his own personal sufferings—yet he might pray for his murderers, for the mockers of his pangs—and he does pray: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do."

Hark, how he prays! The charming sound
Dwells on his dying lips;
And every groan and gaping wound
Cries, "Father! let the rebels live!"

The "Evangelical Prophet" had, seven hundred years before, foretold that he would "make intercession for the transgressors, (Isa. liii. 12;) and here that prophecy is fulfilled. He had himself inculcated the love of enemies—the forgiveness of injuries—and prayer for those who should despitefully use and persecute; and the rule which he had prescribed for others, he now illustrates by his own noble and sublime example.

The question has been raised: Whom did Jesus embrace in his supplication for forgiveness? Two distinct classes were accessory to his crucifixion—Romans and Jews. The former were the immediate agents; the latter the instigators. Both, however, were ignorant of the enormity of their guilt. Paul says, "that had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory." This ignorance Jesus urges as a reason why God should pardon them. In respect to the Romans, they were really ignorant that he was the Son of God; nor had they, perhaps, any means of distinguishing between him and the malefactors who were crucified with him. But the Jews were better informed; at least, they knew that he was innocent, and they might have learned his true character. The prejudices, under the influence of which they regarded him, had the effect to render them incapable of fairly estimating the evidence which he adduced that he was the true Son of God. They were, therefore guilty, especially the rulers, who were better situated to inform themselves as to his true character. All, indeed, might have arrived at the truth—for the light shone bright and glorious, but they loved darkness better than light, because their deeds were evil.

It was however, a time of love and compassion when Jesus was on the cross. It was right that this "morn of mercy" should be signalized by the voice of prayer, ascending from him who was expiating human guilt. It was a glorious act thus to antedate—if we may so speak—the application of his blood to wash out the deep moral stains of those who were about to shed it. It was a pledge and presage of the efficacy of the atoning work of Jesus. If he could ask such blessings on the heads of murderers amid the agonies of crucifixion—how might he not be supposed to intercede when the bitterness of death should have passed, and the glorious work of expiation should have been accomplished!

To men of the world, such kindness and compassion may seem inexplicable. They are governed by no such motives: are influenced by no such love: can feel no such duty. But here they may learn from the example of Jesus what his religion inculcates. It is difficult so to act. That may well be granted. It is difficult. To bear reproaches and persecutions with patience; to bless those who are seeking our ruin; and, more than all, to pray in kindness and sincerity for them, is difficult. But Jesus did it; Stephen did it; Paul did it; and thousands, governed by the same love, have thus honored the sublime and glorious inculcation of the gospel.

What a different world had this proved had the example of Jesus been strictly followed, since he presented it on the cross! Ah! those fires of revenge, intense and consuming, had never burned; those persecutions, those murders, those midnight assassinations, had never polluted the pages of our history. Those wars which have made wives widows and children orphans, had never been waged. The walls of a thousand dungeons had not reverberated with the clanking of the chains of the incarcerated victims of revenge; nor had they started at their curses upon the guilty authors of their sufferings.

Well, disciples of Jesus, let the world pass on and continue its revengeful fires, if it please. Let passion rage; let anger burn; but let us, taking a lesson from the precepts and example of Jesus, like him pity; like him pray; like him forgive. Is this difficult? Yes, difficult, but not impossible. By grace we can accomplish it; by grace we can do all duty and practice all self-denial. Let this prayer daily, hourly ascend to him who has set a sublime and glorious example, and he will help us to follow it.

Make us, by thy transforming grace,
Dear Saviour, daily more like thee;
Thy fair example may we trace
To teach us what we ought to be.
Oh, how benevolent and kind!
How mild!—how ready to forgive!
Be this the temper of our mind,
And these the rules by which we live.

—Bible History of Prayer.

THE LANGUAGE OF PROPHECY.

[Concluded from last week.]

It would be difficult to state all the different shades of opinion which are entertained respecting the future, but they may be classed under two principal heads:—

Some expect a universal spread of the Gospel for a thousand years before the close of this dispensation, at the expiration of which they place the general resurrection and the day of judgment, when Jesus will come and cast the wicked into hell, take the righteous back with Him to heaven, and annihilate the earth.

The opposite opinion is that we are to expect the advent of our Lord at any time; that when He comes, He takes the throne of David, and reigns upon earth for a thousand years; that the saints rise and reign with him; during which time the power of Satan is entirely controlled; though at the end of the thousand years, the evil one will be loosed for a short time; after which the wicked shall be raised and judged; the saints removed to heaven, and the earth destroyed.

The "universal spread of the Gospel" corresponds with the language of the prophet, who says, "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea." When it is said, this shall be for a thousand years, I do not believe the advocates of this view insist that it shall be for that exact time, neither more nor less; for some make it to mean much more, others perhaps comprise the progress of the Gospel in this period. By saying it will be "before the close of this dispensation," I understand it to be supposed that this state of things will be brought about by means similar to those at present in operation; such as the preaching of the word and the distribution of the Scriptures; but that these efforts will be more enlarged, and probably much more extensively blessed, by an increased out-pouring of the Holy Spirit; the change, however, being more or less gradual, not marked by a sudden and definite transition from one state to another, and without the intervention of any miraculous agency.

With regard to the second opinion, I must define what I understand by the expression, "The coming of the Lord;" as also the "expecting," or "looking for," that event; and lastly, the entire expression, "Expecting the coming of the Lord at any time."

By the expression, "the coming of the Lord," I understand the removal of the Lord, in his bodily presence, from the heavens to this earth. When the angel declares that the same Jesus who was taken into heaven, should so come, in like manner as the apostles had seen Him go into heaven, we must understand "going" and "coming" in an analogous sense, namely, the removal of the Lord's bodily presence from one place to another. If, then, it undoubtedly sometimes has this meaning, why should not the word "coming," when applied to Christ, be as uniformly understood in its simple meaning as when applied to others? If any other than the common and natural sense of the words be affirmed, that uncommon meaning must be an exception, and it rests with those who maintain the peculiar view to prove each particular instance.

When it is said, "certain came to Antioch from Judea," it is not thought necessary to prove that this denoted the removal of men in their bodily presence from one place to another. So in saying "we look for Christ from heaven," it is not necessary to prove that this expression implies a removal of his bodily presence from heaven to this earth.

Paul gave directions to Silas and Timotheus to come to him, and he waited for them at Athens; it would be unnecessary to set about proving that he expected their bodily presence; so, when it is said that we wait for God's Son from heaven, we need not prove that we mean the removal of his bodily presence from heaven to this earth.

I must next define what I understand by the expressions "expecting," or "looking for," and "waiting for." They do not only imply loving the appearing, but they embrace something more; we might say, by way of illustration, that Rhoda loved the appearing of Peter, but she did not expect him, therefore she opened not the gate for gladness; but "the people [gladly] received Christ, for they were waiting for him."

That this is the natural and proper meaning of the expressions, may be gathered from their use on other occasions. The impotent folk around Bethesda were waiting for the moving of the waters; doubtless they wished for the appearance of the angel, but had they known that he would not have descended for a thousand years, they would not have been waiting. St. Paul, in like manner, "looked for," or expected Timothy to come with the brethren.

Nor are we to suppose the sense of these expressions altered when applied to the advent of Christ. When Simeon waited for the consolation of Israel, it is clear that he supposed the advent was possible at any moment. In like manner when "all the people were in expectation, and mused in their hearts whether John was the Christ," surely it implies they were in expectation, because they supposed that the advent of Christ drew near. John sent to ask Jesus whether he was the Christ, or whether the should look for another; John looked for the Messiah, knowing that the time of his advent was at hand. So I understand, with respect to the second coming, the expressions "waiting for," and "looking for," do not admit of a meaning which would put the possibility of Messiah's return beyond the period of a natural life; but "expecting" implies not only a possibility, but a probability within that time.

When it is said, "We may be expecting the coming of the Lord at any time," I conceive we must distinguish "the coming of the Lord;" from expressions denoting the moment of the revelation of Jesus Christ, or of the rapture of the saints; doubtless these events are part of the coming, but they are momentary. The coming, I apprehend, embraces a series of events.

This may be illustrated by the circumstances of the first advent. From what day should we date that event? Either from the annunciation to Zacharias, or to the Virgin; from the birth of John, or the day in which the Saviour was born; from the commencement of John's ministry, or the time when "Jesus himself began, being about thirty years of age?" Some might urge the time of the conception, or, at any rate, of the birth of Christ, and they might quote in support the prophecy of Isaiah, "Behold the Virgin shall conceive and bring forth a son." And surely they would say, when embraced by Simeon in the temple, according to revelation, and worshipped by the magi as true-born king of the Jews, it must be acknowledged that the Lord Christ was come. Yet against this it might be advanced that the advent could not be dated before the ministry of John, because John was to "go before him," that is, in his ministry; for it was to be "in the spirit and power of Elias to turn the hearts of the fathers," &c. John, therefore, in his ministry, speaks of Christ's advent as yet future. And as to the prophecies, it appears clear that when Daniel speaks of Messiah the Prince, he refers to his entrance upon his public ministry.

How are we to reconcile these things? I think the fair answer would be, that the whole series of events must be embraced in "the coming of Christ." The first of them cannot be excluded from that category, yet the advent was not complete before the last. In some instances one event might be referred to, as when our Lord said, "The law and the prophets were until John;" that I apprehend related to the commencement of John's ministry; on other occasions there seems a delay until after the ministry of John was concluded; as, for example, when it is said, "Now, when Jesus had heard that John was cast into prison, he departed into Galilee," in order to fulfil Isa. ix. 1, 2.

In like manner, with respect to the second advent, it need not be limited to the moment in which the Lord shall be revealed as a flash of lightning, but may embrace a series of events issuing inevitably in that awful and glorious result. When that series shall commence is uncertain and contingent, and therefore known to no one but the Father; but this much negative information we may have: until the series does commence, we may know that the brightness of Christ's presence is not impending; and, on the other hand, when that series does begin, we may expect that all will be quickly accomplished, although the particular hour when the elect shall be caught up to meet the Lord will even then be unknown. When, therefore, it is said that we are to expect the coming of Christ at any time, I conceive the commencement of a series of events, having relation to the progress of the Lord, and terminating in the revelation of Jesus Christ, is intended.

Now to revert to the two opinions as thus defined, the former has the advantage of not militating directly against any article of our creeds; but this arises rather from ambiguity than from correctness; for though probably there is error in both of these statements, the latter appears to be nearer the truth than the former, because the whole difference may be resolved into the order of events; and in this respect I conceive the second view to be correct. The advocates of both opinions expect glorious things in the latter days; they both acknowledge that Jesus Christ will return to this earth some time or other; but the one party are "waiting for the coming of our Lord"—they are, in the first place, "expecting the glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour," and a restitution of all things consequent upon that event; whereas the others are expecting that the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the Lord for a thousand years before the day of the Lord: they, therefore, deny the pre-millennial advent of Christ; for one cannot believe two things which are essentially opposed to each other. It would be an abuse of the rational intellect to suppose a man could be in constant expectation of the Lord's advent, and, at the same time, be looking for a thousand years of blessedness to precede that event. A man could not sincerely contemplate the probability of both hypotheses being correct, for one expectation is utterly destructive of the other. We will then assume, as a matter of course, that one who looks for a spiritual millennium is not waiting for the appearing of Jesus Christ.

There are, therefore, two great heads of inquiry—is a spiritual millennium consistent with the character of this present dispensation?—or, on the other hand, is the speedy coming of our Lord a scriptural expectation?

Selected.

BELSHAZZAR IN PARIS.

If we may trust the glowing account that has been brought us by the Cable of the ceremony at the distribution of prizes at the Paris Exposition by the French Emperor—few more splendid pageants can have been witnessed by the present generation. Seventy-one thousand people assembled in the great central hall of the building, crowded every passage of approach, and loaded every balcony, and the surge of an ocean of outsiders beat for long hours against the walls of the Imperial Gasometer. When the magnificent procession, with its high-stepping horses, its gilded carriages, its mounted soldiery, its generals in uniform, its ladies arrayed like the lilies of the field, and Solomon to boot, its princes and potentates, had reached the Hall of Ceremony it would seem that everything this earth has of luxury and grandeur was centered in that single spot. High on a throne of royal state, which far outshone the wealth of Ormus or of Ind, the Emperor exalted sat. On one side was the Empress in white satin and silver lace, with pearls and diamonds about her throat, and one great gem that told her beats of heart in flashes of an imperial ray. On the other, sat Haroun al Raschid, or what is left of him, and about the skirts of these three lights of empire there gathered a crowd of princes, princelings, nobles, dignitaries, statesmen, officials, lackeys, and so on, till, at a vast remove, one began to feel the existence of the swarming people of Paris and the world. And while the eye took in this manifold spectacle, there burst into sound the hitherto dumb, expectant instruments of the band of twelve hundred musicians; a wonderful embroidery of flute, and violin, and harp, and trumpet, on a background of rolling organ harmony, fringed with the jangling music of joy-bells. Then, when silence fell again, the Emperor stood up in his high place, and made a speech, so pure, and good, and wise, that one marvels as he reads it whether the old legends may not be true that tell how a man's own spirit was sometimes rapt out of his body, for a season, while an angel or a demon took the vacant place and blessed or cursed out of the unaccustomed lips.

One curious incident that occurred just at this moment the Cable, doubtless for fear of injuring the harmony of the narrative, omits to mention. When Mr. Hughes, the inventor of the Printing Telegraph, was called up to receive his prize, the Emperor took his hand, making him an exception to all the other recipients of medals. Mr. Hughes, as he touched the Imperial finger, slipped into the august palm of his serene Highness a little bit of paper containing the last message received by the Cable and printed by the machine for which he was just being decorated. It contained these words: "Maximilian is shot. His last words were, 'Poor Carlotta!'" His Royal Serenity read the telegram, and immediately gave evidence of a fearful agitation. His cheek blanched, his hands trembled, and the diamonds on the Imperial garter quivered so in the sunlight that a shout arose from the admiring multitude. What the Emperor thought is, of course, not to be exactly known. But we may conjecture that he heard over all the shouts and music, above the booming of guns and the salvos of artillery, the single shot that was death to his insane ambition as to his deluded dupe, the single cry as of a woman—young, beautiful, and good—answering to the last cry of her young husband—"Poor Carlotta!" "Poor Maximilian!"

Where, in all this tumult of rejoicing, this whirl of splendor, this pomp of luxury, were the victims of his crafty and wicked lust of power. For the rest of his life he drags the bodies of these dead about with him. Wherever he goes that pale face shall look at him as from out the cell where, in madness and utterest desolation, she is to drag out the remnant of life. When he looks into the face, still comely, of that wife of his he shall see, not her eyes, but another's, full of reproach too bitter and too silent to bear. He shall live; but, hard heart, dull conscience, low mind that he has—the heart shall feel, and the conscience shall prick, and the mind shall know that these victims are with him to the end. That shot he shall forever hear, and that cry. His judgment day is come, and all the pomp and splendor that he can gather about him shall not avail to hide him from himself.—N. Y. Tribune, July 4.

How long may it take a man to embrace Christ as his Saviour? As long as it takes a drowing man to let go a straw and lay hold of an offered rope.

Witness for God.

The following interesting circumstance recently occurred at the Chester races in England. It is copied from The Revival. The writer says:

I was privileged to be a witness for the Lord to the thousands assembling at Chester on the cup day, and he gave me the desire of my heart in being able to take with me a banner, on which was painted these words, in large letters:

"THUS SAITH THE LORD:"
"What shall it profit a man if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"
"PREPARE TO MEET THY GOD."

On the other side:

"THUS SAITH THE LORD:"
The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."
"BEHOLD, I COME QUICKLY."

It was a yard and a half long, and forty inches wide. Near the race-course, I met brother Moorfield, of Kendel, distributing tracts, and speaking the word of God to the multitude passing. I remained near him with the banner, which could be easily read some distance off. I stood so as not to be the cause of any obstruction, and the pole was sufficiently high for persons to pass underneath. I had not long held it up (not half an hour,) when a young man came up and said, "You have stopped me, sir. I did not think before I saw those words. I have come by train to the races; but I can't go; I must turn back. He at once turned back, and we saw no more of him, as neither of us was able to leave our post to follow him. It was very manifest the Lord's arrow had taken a firm hold, and I have no doubt he will never forget the words he did not expect to see going to the races; and may God grant it may issue in his salvation. Shortly after, another young man stood for a minute or so before the banner, with a carpet-bag in his hand. He then said "he intended going to the races, and had come by the train for that purpose, but he should turn back; the banner had stopped him." He also at once turned back, thanking us for being there. We thanked God for these two cases known to us, and took courage; but we feel sure this was not all the good accomplished by the simple exhibition of the word of God.

After brother Moorfield left, I had much opposition; a drunken man knocked the banner out of my hand, and tore it from the rods; a policeman prevented his doing more mischief. It was easily mended again. Two others evidently desired to injure me, but they went off, doing no harm. Men hate the truth of God as much as ever, and the sneers and sayings of both rich and poor made this manifest; while others stood as if they were struck, and knew not whether to turn back or not. About 5.30 a policeman came and said (in a very rough tone of voice, which manifested that he loved not the truth,) "Get away with this thing." I refused to do so, and he took me to the police-station, I carrying my banner with me through thousands of persons. Other policemen had been supporting me through the day; also, the cab inspector, who was for some time near on his duty. I was not long detained at the station, and but for being so weary, and needing refreshment, should have again held up my banner. I returned at night to Liverpool, weary in body, but thanking God for being counted a fool for Christ. I hope this will be an encouragement to others to do likewise. Brethren, pray for us!

The Lowly Calling.

Protestants are wont to hold up the ostentation of the Pope and his cardinals as unseemly for servants of Christ. This would be proper were it not that Protestants are equally guilty. We give as a picture of the former a scene in Rome as witnessed by an American.

"I think the sight of the gorgeous carriages was as interesting as any part of the affair. All those belonging to the cardinals are red, profusely gilded, with flunkies in cocked hats, two in front and footmen behind. The manner in which their horses are harnessed is very handsome, loaded as they are with gorgeous purple and gold and bright steel. The horses themselves are very fine, generally black with magnificent manes and tails. I have not seen finer animals anywhere."

Now for a case of Protestant corruption taken from the London Times, and we think if it does not go a great way beyond the above, it will certainly match it.

"The next presentation to the Vicarage of Chievely for sale, subject to the life of the present incumbent, now in his sixty-first year, with elegant parsonage, gardens, pleasure grounds and offices, in a neighborhood distinguished by the amenities of polished society, and constituting a rich vineyard of the christian virtues, with ample means for works of benevolence toward less fortunate folds as derived from two hundred and eighteen acres of glebe with the tithes of adjoining parishes, extending over nine thousand acres, making the gross income and value to fluctuate, according to averages, between £1,600 and £1,800 per annum, with extremely moderate outgoings. Can be viewed only by permission of the incumbent; and for particulars apply to Mr. Donkin, Byewell, Felton, Northumberland."

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND TRACTS can be had at the Editor's residence; of GEO. W. YOUNG, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 37 Park Row, Room 40.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, JULY 10, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not; he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will rest where it ought.

False Teaching.

DR. D. W. CLARK (now one of the bishops of the M. E. Church) a few years since, prior to the issue of his work "Man all Soul," in speaking of the ideas that prevailed, anciently, that the spirits of the dead hovered around the graves of their bodies, says:

"A similar feeling still exists among the less intelligent people even in christian countries. Hence the half-defined, the half-believed idea of the ghost of the murdered man or of the suicide haunting the place where the crime was perpetrated. Hence also that feeling when we approach the place where the bodies of our departed friends slumber as though they themselves were there. Hence it is common for persons of all grades of cultivation to seek beneath the willow where they lie a kind of lonely fellowship with their beloved dead. There is a sweet hope, at least, that there they are nearer to them than in all the world beside; and he is regarded as a cold and heartless intruder who would argue away from them the cherished dream. 'She goeth to the grave to weep there.' Sweet mourner! Though we would not rudely drive her away from the spot which has embalmed all she held dear on earth, or forbid her to water with her tears the earth which she expects will some day yield her back her own again, yet we would whisper softly and tenderly, 'He is not here. Why seek ye the living among the dead?'"

The most remarkable part of the preceding extract is, that the "Rev. D. D." should give countenance to such a perversion of scripture. To prove that the dead are not dead, or that their spirits are alive, the words of the angel at the tomb of Jesus are garbled. Why did the angel say, "He is not here?" and why did he seem to upbraid them with the question, "Why seek ye the living among the dead?" The Doctor seems to wish to make the impression that this language is appropriate to use to all persons who think their friends are dead because they are laid in the grave.

Let us look at the facts withheld by Mr. Clark. What are they? Jesus was dead—for "Christ died—and he was buried," so saith the scriptures; and not till "the third day," did he live again, and then he "rose from the dead:" now he is alive forevermore. When the angel said, "He is not here," he spoke truth, because Jesus had arisen from the dead. But would it have been truth if he had spoken in this manner the day previous? Certainly not; it would have been untrue. Jesus, before his resurrection was "among the dead." Such is the testimony of the Bible; and to say the contrary is to be "infidel." The question of the angel to the woman at the sepulchre shows the fact beyond reasonable controversy, that had it not been for Christ's resurrection he would still have been "among the dead;" and that consequently without a resurrection men remain among the dead, and are not among the living. A most fatal text this for the learned divine who garbled it to make it speak in favor of the heathen offspring, the "soul's immortality."

And then, whom should his garbled extract have been "whispered softly" to? Only think, gentle reader, to Mary, the sister of Lazarus! for, "she goeth unto the grave to weep there." She, however, met Jesus, and said to him, "If thou hadst been here my brother had not died." She is on her way to the grave, is she, Doctor, to weep there over Lazarus? "Sweet mourner!" Why did not Jesus "whisper softly and tenderly" to mourning Mary and Martha, and say of Lazarus, "He is not here. Why seek ye the living among the dead?" What soft words these would have been! How consoling, but for the fact that they would have been words of falsehood! Lazarus was there; and he was "among the dead." Jesus comforted these sisters with the only true words of comfort concerning "meeting again" those who had died in Christ—"Thy brother shall rise again;" not, "Thy brother has gone to heaven—he is alive:" No, such words would have been words palpably false. "Lazarus is dead," said Jesus to his disciples, and when he cried, "Lazarus, come forth," he did not "whisper softly—'He is not here, why seek ye the living among the dead?'" No; he really seemed to think Lazarus was there! and he spoke accordingly; and strange to tell, "he that was dead came forth bound hand and foot with grave clothes!"

This whole transaction, together with the events at Jesus' own tomb, stamp forever the whole fable of a conscious entity surviving in death as an error. Are not the abettors of such an error the real "infidels?" They have substituted the traditions of men for the truth of God, and virtually deny the "resurrection of the dead"—the great cardinal doctrine of revelation. The scriptures are garbled by them; the context and the general teachings of the Bible are set at naught to sustain their theory of the "soul's immortality."

Materialism.

There are two kinds of materialism. There is a materialism which denies all spiritual existence. That materialism, of course, is highly fatal to any just views of God, and must reject the possibility of a future life to man; hence it rejects the resurrection altogether. With such materialism we have no sympathy. But, shall we therefore reject the scripture doctrine that the Lord God formed man, and every other creature that lives by breathing, on earth, "out of the dust of the ground." That is, he formed man of matter—made him a material being; and the apostle declares, "The first man is of the earth, earthy"—1 Cor. xv. 47. And Jesus our Lord declares in the most solemn manner, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh:" John iii. 6. Hence the necessity of being born again of the Spirit. Till that birth takes place—or, at least, till we are begotten again by the Spirit of God—men, any men, all men, are animal, material, and only such. But every creature on earth, that lives by breathing, has sensation and various degrees of intelligence, according to the organism that God has seen fit to give them. It is the material organism which determines the degree of intelligence of which each creature is capable. If this is not so, let it be shown by reason, philosophy, or scripture; especially the latter.

It is at the resurrection, the followers of Christ become spiritual, in the full scripture sense of the term. But then they are not immaterial, but are in possession of "a spiritual body:" 1 Cor. xv. 44. They are bodies, though spiritual. This fact, at least, demonstrates that immateriality is not essential to spiritual. Hence a denial of immateriality is not a denial of scripture spirituality, though it may be a denial of scholastic spirituality.

A QUESTION.—What is the difference between being born of the Spirit and being born of God? R. W. NEALE.

We know of no difference; but there is a difference between being begotten "of the Spirit and being born of God." The first is a work done in us in this life, and prepares us to be born into the life to come, or the resurrection from the dead, by which we become "the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." Such "cannot die any more."

Made Alive in Christ.

Our paper, as the only organ in the world for the view that the finally impenitent will never be revived from death, should continually attract to itself the best things that can be found which prove, illustrate, or favor the doctrine of Life only in Christ. And the more we extend our investigations, the more fully persuaded are we that the exegetical writings of orthodox theologians—not only of the present day, but running back into the past ages of the church—contain numberless things of this character, which we ought not willingly to leave in obscurity. Many minds are mightily influenced by the consideration that the truth on the leading questions of theology is likely to be that which has been for ages generally believed. Now while it is always well to insist that this idea shall be subordinated to the naked question, What do the scriptures teach?—it is also well to show, when we can, that the sentiments which earn us the reproach of being heretical, are but the consistent and harmonious embodiment of much that is found in the productions of eminent men whose piety or soundness in the faith was never called in question. There are many half utterances of truth on the question of human destiny which, if brought freshly before the public eye, will tend to multiply whole utterances of truth in the future.

DR. E. J. RUCKERT, a German theologian of note, published at Leipsic, in 1836, his Commentary on the first Epistle to the Corinthians. Three years later (in 1839), Professors B. B. Edwards and E. A. Park, of Andover Theological Seminary, published a volume of "Selections from German Literature." This work we met yesterday for the first time. In it we find a translation of Dr. Ruckert's Commentary of chap. xv. of I Corinthians. We transcribe the portion devoted to vs. 21, 22, commending the same to the reader's careful attention:

"For, since by man was death, so by man was the resurrection of the dead; for as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive.

"That Paul here designs an illustration is evident from the particle 'for.' The principal proposition, 'Christ is now raised,' cannot be referred to. It is manifestly that which is in apposition, namely, 'that he might become the first fruits of them who slept.' But the subject is illustrated by means of a parallel, which the apostle draws in the same manner as in Rom. v. 12. seq., between Adam, the author of sin and death, and Christ, the destroyer of sin and the restorer to life. Both Adam and Christ he places here, as well as there, at the head of two series or races, the representatives, as it were, and the leaders. The second, Christ, abolishes what the first introduces, restoring back to man what the first Adam took from him. 'By man was death.' This is more fully expressed and illustrated, Rom. v. 12. 'By one man sin came into the world, and death by sin.' The death here is to be understood simply, or at least principally, in a physical sense. In the subsequent member of the sentence the conjunction kai has obviously the meaning 'also,' or 'even so.' The 'man' is Christ, who in order to preserve the parallel must here be necessarily designated as a man. 'Resurrection of the dead,' is not in itself altogether the right expression to indicate the antithesis. It would be either 'life,' or 'a return to life,' if we regard death as the loss of life. While Paul, as already remarked, recognizes a return to a life which was lost, only through the medium of the resurrection, consequently both ideas with him are perfectly equivalent, so that the deficiency in the antithesis, on this ground, disappears. The relation between the former and the latter members of the sentence is pointed out by epeidee, 'since indeed,' 'because now,' a particle, both of time and causality, in which the meaning seems to lie, that as it had been man who had destroyed life, so also it must be man who should restore it. This is illustrated in the following verse (not in the light of a demonstrative proof which could not here be given), by the introduction of some new marks or indications. The first is the similar position of the two persons, Adam and Christ as the leaders of their respective races, and the consequences in relation to the authors, expressed by the particles 'as,' and 'so.' The second mark is in the preposition 'in.' 'In Adam,' says he, 'all die.' This can mean nothing else, than that this happens by virtue of the connection in which they, the all, stand to him; inasmuch as they are of his race; thus what necessarily befals him must likewise befal them, namely, mortality. Thus it remains undetermined whether Paul has considered this relationship as a merely physical one, through descent, or a moral one, as men are all sinners like Adam, or both in connection. 'Even so now,' he proceeds, 'in Christ all shall be made alive.' Here the use of the future tense, which exhibits the consequences as yet to be expected, shows that the apostle contemplates a restoration to life, (which is also indicated by the connection) which is not a species of moral restoration but of a physical. In order, however, that the similarity pointed out by the particles may find a place, the clause, 'in Christ,' will not simply signify, 'through Christ,' that it is he who awakens all, but, that it is by virtue of the connection in which they stand to Christ, so far as they are spiritual, (and no other relation to Christ can be thought of), they belong to his race or generation, they must with him, also live as he himself does; they must return to life in the same way that he did. Thus, as Paul finds the ground of all the happiness which comes to man, only in communion with Christ, so he places the hope of a future life in Christ alone, and thereby what he there asserts is in full agreement with Rom. viii. 10. seq. But what follows from it? That the resurrection which he expects, can refer only to those who stand in such union with him as that upon which he enlarges in verse 35 seq., where he speaks of the mode of the resurrection; it can relate only to those. Thereby he has settled, as it seems to me, the controversy, not yet decided, respecting the extent of the meaning of 'all,' [pantes] in this passage. Those who are not united to Christ can expect no resurrection. Paul does not mention such in his Epistles. They belong only to the first series, only to the race of Adam; as such they are obnoxious to death: as sinners they go to destruction. An existence after this life he may have assigned to them, also a kind of resurrection perhaps, in reference to the judgment, which he calls the resurrection in Acts xxiv. 15, where nothing depends on an accurate definition; not using the term there in the special and higher sense in which he has employed in his Epistles. Here the 'all' are certainly believers only."

We need hardly add that we do not endorse every expression in the foregoing exposition. But we rejoice to find Dr. Ruckert saying of Paul, that "he places the hope of a future life in Christ alone," and that "Those who are not united to Christ can expect no resurrection." Our author seems to have firmly grasped the fact that "believers only" can be included in the declaration, "in Christ shall all be made alive."

In reference to Acts xxiv. 15, we of course believe that Dr. Ruckert did not properly understand it. Rightly interpreted, it offers no obstacle to a full reception of the blessed truth of Life only in Christ. But we cannot dwell upon it now. R. W.

OUR SUNLIGHT.—Mrs. Hemans in her last days, when among the mountain scenery of Wicklow, during a storm was struck by an effect in the hills produced by a rainbow diving down into a gloomy pass which it seemed really to flood with its glowing colors. "I could not help thinking," said the dying poetess, "that it was like our religion, piercing and carrying brightness into the depths of sorrow and the tomb." All the rest of the scene around that one illuminated spot was wrapped in the profoundest darkness.

Slow Growth of Character.

A mature christian character is not an instantaneous creation, but a growth, a development. "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." As the mind has to be cultivated, so the character must be perfected by degrees. Indeed, as a perfect character is the noblest thing under the sun, it is the longest in maturing. Even death does not finish the work. The higher development of character will still go on with the expansion of the mind eternally. We cannot then become perfect in a day. Leviathan is not so tamed. A man who has been accustomed all his life to act from selfish calculations, does not begin at once to act from motives purely good or religious. Nor is christian perfection a mere rhapsody of the mind, to be attained by an act of contemplation. We need something more than the wings of faith, or of imagination, to bear us to the summit of the mount. The Celestial City is on the top of a hill, and we must go up on foot. We must walk the heavenly road. We cannot fly. Step by step, picking stones out of the road, and singing as we go, must we climb the mount of God.

Letters and Extracts.

An Interesting Letter.

A little more than two years ago the writer of the following letter came into our office as a compositor; a man retiring in his manners, steady in his habits, but an entire stranger to us. He was recently from Canada, and we employed him for a few days to fill a vacancy by reason of the absence of another compositor. We became so well pleased with his work and his steady demeanor that we gave him, shortly after, steady employment, and he remained with us for more than a year. We regretted to part with him; but he felt it his duty to return to Canada, which he did last October. We heard not a word from him till this letter came to hand. He writes as follows:

GUELPH, CANADA, JUNE 27, 1867.

DEAR FRIEND:—It is several months since I took my leave of you in New York to return to my home in the far north; and that I have not written to you sooner is not owing to my forgetfulness. I cherish the remembrance of the pleasant association which I enjoyed for a season while employed in your office. Permit me to remark that I have considered my apparently chance introduction to your office by Mr. Macdonald, as a means ordered by a God of love to bring light into a mind very dark indeed. It was only by having the simple and beautiful doctrines of the Bible placed before me, day after day, in reasoning that I could not controvert, that I was ever led to see Christ in the position which he truly occupies, and to hold the Bible in much higher appreciation than I could have ever done as a Presbyterian. I thank God for the happy circumstances which brought me into contact with you and so many of the brotherhood who so trustingly rely upon the gospel hope; and I pray that it may be the savor of life to me. I have none here to commune with: and am brought in daily connection with sectarianism of the most inconsistent type; but my Bible is an infallible guide; from its pages I learn the doctrine of No life out of Christ; and by its light I can still see the way of life. I have not the gift of tongues nor eloquence to proclaim what I would wish my countrymen to know; neither have I the means or position to exert any public influence; but in my humble sphere I will gladly set the light before any earnest seeker I may find. Father Chiniquy, the reformed French Canadian priest, paid a visit to this town a short time since and delivered a discourse which roused Romanists and Protestants for a few days from the extreme apathy which characterizes the people here on doctrinal questions; but this could not last long where neither party cared particularly what the other believed. With how much more force does the literal word address itself to the understanding. I regretted to hear of the death of your son, last winter. When I visit the Sunters I see the paper. The Sunters hold to the belief of a resurrection of the culpably wicked, or something of that kind. In fact I think they have no very clearly defined belief. I would rather deal with the thorough-going orthodoxy. They are intelligent people, and I am astonished that they cannot comprehend. It appears to me that a love of Christ must be a ruling motive of the heart before the mind can fully grasp the truth. I am closely employed in the Mercury printing office here, and have but little time to myself; but expect in two years to be settled on a little farm I have bought, and have more time and opportunities of doing some good. I hope you may be spared for years of usefulness yet. You have been a blessing to many. I pray God to bless and prosper the work. Remember me to Frank Fielding; and believe me to be yours in the blessed hope of a resurrection from the dead.

WM. R. M'CARTER.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—We did not know for months that our friend was a member of the Presbyterian church; nor did we employ any means to proselyte him to our faith; yet the subject was constantly before his mind in his work as a compositor, and sometimes he would ask us a question on some point; by such means he seems to have been led to the more thorough study of his Bible, and finally settled in his faith of No life out of Christ.

When he left us, he took with him some of all our works, and had the paper sent to a friend in Sunter, C. W., of which he speaks in his letter; but where his own location was to be he did not know, nor did we learn till now. To us his letter is extremely interesting; for we are rejoiced to know that a humble stranger, loving Christ, was led to our office to receive a great blessing, as he evidently feels it to be. To God be all the praise; but it encourages us to labor on and wait patiently for the fruits to appear. Let all, who love the truth contine to sow the seed, kindly and lovingly, in all places; but make no attempts to force it upon any mind, as that has a tendency to repel from, rather than to draw men to the truth. "Speak the truth in love" is wise counsel. Let all strive to follow it. We are responsible for what we teach, and for the spirit in which we teach; but not for the reception or rejection which others give the truth. Leave that with God.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

MILTON, Fulton Co., Ill., July 4, 1867.

DEAR HERALD OF LIFE READERS:—Providentially I am in a place of perfect repose, in a beautiful valley with a ridge of romantic hills on the east and west sides, with what is called the Big Creek running through the most fertilized soil in the United States, with plenty of fish sporting in the purling stream, while the nimble squirrel is skipping about in the large forest trees, and the beautiful quail is perched on the fences, singing "wheat's ripe," together with all kinds of warbling songsters conjointly praising the Being that created all things for his own glory. These things led us to the thought, that if some parts of the earth are so beautiful even now, what will it be when all things are made new, and the whole earth is filled with the glory of God? when the immortal saints shall possess the kingdom, and the meek shall inherit the earth? May the Lord hasten it. Amen.

Well, the prospect out here is truly flattering. Converts to the truth are on the increase. Glory to God for the truth of no life future to the wicked. Tell us not that it is a dangerous doctrine, for some considerable experience has proved the contrary. Many are being moved to read the scriptures that were completely hardened by hearing hell-fire torments preached so much. Some that had started to serve the Lord, and read their Bibles, told us that hell fire and eternal conscious misery was preached so much that it had almost driven them to despair, for they could not so understand the Bible. All was dark and mysterious; therefore they stopped reading the Bible and went to reading novels. But since they have heard the glorious truth they have resumed their Bibles and thrown away their novels, saying that they could find plenty of interest in reading the Bible now. We shall preach here next Sunday, and then return to Otto and labor in that vicinity this month: after that go to Totten Prairie the first Friday Saturday and Sunday in August, so that Br. Hanford will know where to join us; hope he will get here before he sees this. May the Lord direct.

From La Fayette Norris.

CAMPTON, IOWA, June 23, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—Enclosed please find 25 cts for the general fund. I don't know but you are getting tired of receiving such small contributions; but I feel it is about all I can do this summer; for I am earning but little money.

A niece to whom I sent the HERALD six months writes me thus: "I have resolved to join the Methodist church. I have been thinking of it for some time past, and no one has greater desire to become a christian than I have. Reading the HERALD OF LIFE wakened me up to my duty. It made me think more about religion than I had ever done before." This language made me both to rejoice and to be sorrowful. To rejoice in the knowledge that I had been the humble instrument of leading one mind to her Saviour; and to be sorrowful that she should turn her back on the very paper that first awakened a desire in her mind to be a christian, and conclude to join a church that is doing all it can to hinder the spread of the truth; and would, if it could, trample that very paper in the dust. But I shall keep on sowing, and leave the result with God. A few minds in this vicinity are beginning to think for themselves, and hence have found that these sectarian organizations are not essential to the christian; and that the Spirit baptism is the only essential baptism. Judge HALSTED's work gave me a desire to see the Douay Bible, and hence I borrowed one of a Catholic neighbor. And I must say that in many things I consider it better than the Protestant Bible. It uniformly translates the Hebrew "sheol" by the word hell. This I think is better than the way the Protestant Bible translates it, i. e., half the time grave and half the time hell. I think less of King James' translation than ever. They had a dogma to maintain, and they did it at the expense of honesty and truth. Again the Catholic commentators are right in saying that sheol means the state of the dead; but very wrong in saying it was a state of consciousness. Their Bible will not bear them out in this last idea. I wish to give a few verses from the Douay Bible for the benefit of those who have never read it. John viii. 51. "Amen, amen, I say to you, if any man keep my words he shall not see death forever." John xi. 25, "And every one that liveth and believeth in me shall not die forever." Jeremias (Jeremiah) li. 39, 57. "In their heat I will set them drink: and I will make them drunk, that they may slumber, and sleep an everlasting sleep, and awake no more, saith the Lord." "And I will make her princes drunk, and her wise men, and her captains, and her rulers, and her valiant men; and they shall sleep an everlasting sleep, and shall awake no more, saith the King, whose name is the LORD of hosts." Isaias (Isaiah) ix. 6, last part: "And his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, God the Mighty, the Father of the world to come, the Prince of peace." Psa. xxxvi. 20 (E. V. 37.) "And the enemies of the Lord, presently after they shall be honored and exalted, shall come to nothing, and vanish like smoke." These are passages that I do not think so much of; but which is the nearest right, that or the Protestant Bible, I only know in so far as I have studied the criticisms of learned men. I think every one ought to read the Douay Bible; it will destroy the hallucination that the Protestant Bible is the only pure word of God; while at the same time they are so generally alike in meaning that a greater reverence will be had for the original scriptures. I hope Br. Wendell will come to Manchester. There is quite a large band of Adventists at that place; a few who are firm believers of life in Christ alone, and the rest of the Crisis organization. And many of these last are undecided which to believe, the resurrection or the non-resurrection of the wicked. I think we could and would do something to help Br. Wendell on his way. I desire to know beforehand, so that we can prepare. My love to all the earnest readers of the HERALD OF LIFE.

From your brother in Christ.

From Dr. John Duncan.

MODE, SHELBY CO., ILLS., June 24, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—To-day finds me well; truly thankful to the LIFE-GIVER for all blessings on us both past and present, and ask a continuance of the same for the future. I wish to say, through the two-winged angel, that we want preaching here, regular, from some of our brothers that can set life and death before the people, such as Brs. Walter, Lewis, and Campbell. It is a general inquiry where I go, When are some of your preachers coming? We want to hear them. And I will say to them, come on: you will be gladly received. The life theme is, or should be, more interesting than all others; for the day is far spent, the harvest is fully ripe, and the laborers are few. Let us see who will come. We were expecting Br. Campbell. The people are all anxious to hear him: sorry, indeed, he is chilling again; hope for better health soon for him. This coming month and the next would be great for a grove and tent meeting. We look for Brs. Walter and Lewis out here soon. Yours in hope of living again.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Our friends in this section have tried hard to help the West: but it must be remembered that not less than $2,000 per year has to be raised by donations to keep up our paper and other printing. More than half of this sum is actually paid by a few friends in this city. Outside of the city of New York, and its immediate vicinity, we have very little aid in this work, as we have but few friends who have means. Still, the brn. here are willing to help a working man to go into the West. After he is there, we think the West should see his needs supplied. If they cannot do this, they will be under the necessity of waiting till the HERALD OF LIFE becomes a self-sustaining paper—as our friends here feel that this paper demands first of all their support—before much can be done by us for the West. If friends in that section would hasten that time, let them put forth their strength to increase the circulation of the HERALD OF LIFE. That course will help themselves and help the friends here, by relieving them from the heavy drafts on them to keep the life-blood at this centre in a healthy state. Take courage all. Every unpopular cause has to struggle hard at first. Let us look to God for the needed help.

From Eld. Samuel L. Walter.

GRAFTON, ILL., July 1, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I am at this place again; in good health. It is very warm and dry, as they want it for the harvesting of the wheat. The harvesting of the good things that earth produces, as the reward of their toil, engrosses all their attention, leaving them no time to think what seed they are sowing. It is to be feared, they are "sowing to the flesh," and will "reap corruption;" hence, not life; because life is not corruptible; it may cease, because we are by nature corruptible and dying creatures; the organism that possesses life may be corrupt, and corrupting, till it terminates in that state of "decomposition and corruption, which is naturally endless," as says Dr. A. Clarke, "but for the work of Christ."

But there are some that are "sowing to the Spirit, and shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting," or obtain, that more "abundant life," not corruption; but the condition of the "angels," they will die no more, but "are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." That will be a crop worth sowing for. The Lord help us all to sow so that we may "reap life everlasting."

I was at Lebanon on the 16th of June; and preached to them on the Ridge three times: had a good hearing, and quite a large congregation in the Grove at 4 o'clock P. M. At Hickory Church house, in the morning, I saw a development of that same little horn with eyes, and a mouth speaking great things. In that very Christian church, which, about three or four months ago, said "they had no other creed than the Bible, and had agreed to let any Br. preach that happened to be there, when their preacher was not present, and that they receive truth and reject error."

The Elders are determined that no one shall preach to them who will not have the wicked dead made alive again; or "die that death that never dies." The plea is that, if they let me preach for them, I will break up their church. I suppose that it stands on such a sandy, or insecure foundation it will not stand the Light of God's word to shine upon it; and that if it does, it will fall. I think they will pull it down with their own hands. One of the Elders made an invidious thrust at me in the church before the whole congregation, by crying out—"I move that we get a new translation of the Bible for Br. Walter." I asked him what it was he said. He replied, that, I had, in speaking after the minister by his request, said that the word salvation would be more correctly rendered life." I replied, that I had heard five or six salvations made of the one salvation; and if it was invariably rendered life it would be definite. To make salvation mean life, is too much for them. I told him they ought not to say one word; for Alexander Campbell had translated the New Testament, and rendered the word "baptizo," which is "dip," by the term "immerse," as that suited him. I said to the Bro. that preached, that he altered the text from "lively hope" to "a living hope." I told him that "lively hope" conveys no definite idea to the mind; and that was the reason he altered it to "living hope;" but that was not what Peter meant; it was a "hope of living" again from the dead. It was "begotten by the resurrection," etc. He admitted that I was right. Thus they destroy themselves; they will break up their "confederation:" the people will think for themselves.

At Lebanon the stationed preacher, in what is called the Free Methodist, has embraced the doctrine of No life out of Christ; and he is taken no more notice of, in the church, than any other sinner, though he is a member of the conference. The minister they have to fill his place, takes no notice of him. He says, "I go to church, they take no more notice of me than they would of any other sinner. Then that minister goes to the Methodist E Church, and they take no more notice of him than of any other sinner. Then the Methodist E. minister goes to the Episcopalian church, and they take no more notice of him than of any other sinner. Then the Episcopalian minister goes to the Catholic church, and they take no more notice of him than of any other sinner. So they are all Popes." Thank the Lord, they have not the power, or away would go our heads, if we dare to stand up for the truth.

In my last I tried to ask this question, not where Dr. A. Clarke said that the Jews did not believe that their fathers, that fell in the wilderness, would not be raised, but where is his authority for saying it? I should like it if you could give me, or tell me where I could get the proof that the Jews did not believe that the Gentiles would have a resurrection. That has been questioned. I want the proof.

I am pleased to see an interest for the West, and that a Br. as highly spoken of as Br. Hanford is, is willing to come. I hope that interest will be in keeping to the end proposed, that of making the Br. and his family comfortable. It will not do to say to him and family, "Be ye fed and clothed," and you not put your hands into your pockets to take the Lord's money and give it back to the Lord, by giving to one of his faithful servants. Don't be afraid to give. God's servants have given up all; they trust the Lord. What have you to fear if you trust in the Lord? "They that trust in the Lord shall be as mount Zion, that cannot be removed." "Have faith in God," ye his servants. God can take up a mountain and hurl it into the depths of the sea; and will do it when faith like that of Abraham is manifested, when he said to his servants, "Tarry ye here, whilst I and the lad go yonder and worship and come again." Don't be afraid that God will let you or your children want any good thing. The Bro. does not preach for money, though he wants money to pay his way. You need not be afraid to give him, for fear you will give him his reward. His reward is life, at the last day. And take care, ye who are afraid to give, lest ye lose the luxury of doing good, and fail to hear the Lord say to you, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of my brethren, ye have done it unto me." Then all will be right. The Lord regards what is done to his servants as done to him.

I think the brethren at Chicago would do well to have Br. R. Wendell give them some lectures in that city, when he goes to Minnesota. Write to him, Brn. Van Doren and McElwain. It would do you good, and you would get good interest for your investment in the cause of truth. Don't fail to have him come, after the anniversary, so that he be untrammelled. I am going North this week. I am waiting to hear from Fulton Co. so as to decide. Yours in hope of Life Eternal.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Dr. Adam Clarke, in his note on John vi. 39, says, "The Jews believed that the wicked should have no resurrection: and that the principle which led to the resurrection of the body of the righteous, was the indwelling Spirit of God. This is positively asserted in the Sir Hashirim Rabba. See Schoetgen." Again Dr. Clarke says, on verse 49, "It was an opinion of the Jews themselves, that their fathers who perished in the wilderness, should never have a resurrection."

For these statements we suppose Dr. Clarke is good authority. He has not given any other authority than that mentioned above. In Dr. Bloomfield's Critical Notes on the New Testament, John vi. 39, he says: "By anastesso (at which repeat 'ina, and take anastesso in the subjunctive) is meant (as almost always in Scripture as well as the Rabbinical writers) the resurrection of the blessed to eternal happiness."

Now if the Jews did not believe the wicked should have a resurrection, as Dr. Clarke says was "positively asserted in the Sir Hashirim Rabba," then they could not believe in the "resurrection of the Gentiles;" for they counted all such wicked.

From Ruth N. Parker.

RUTLAND, VT., July 1, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I have returned to this place. My brother has laid his wife in the grave to wait the resurrection morn, and then she will come forth to immortal life. O, what a blessed hope we have in our Saviour. If it was not for this hope we should be of all men most miserable; but this hope cheers me in my pilgrim walk; but I feel that my work is about done for this world, for disease has laid his hand upon me heavily. I have been sick for five months, and I do not expect to be any better, as it is an affection of the lungs; but I have the hope of the gospel to sustain me. Although death can lay his hand on us, he cannot hold us long; for Jesus will come and redeem his people from the power of the enemy. O, my heart is full of thanks to God for his goodness to me; and I feel thankful to you for the paper, and to those brethren that paid for it last year. I feel that it is safe to trust in God, for his promises are sure. He will not leave nor forsake his people. I wish I could send you some money to pay for the paper; but I cannot. You can do as you think best about sending it longer. I do not know as you can read this, for my hand trembles so I can hardly write.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Sister Parker is the widow of a soldier, and is alone in our views in Rutland. The past year she has been living in Manchester, N. H. We shall continue to send her the paper now that she has returned to Vt. May the mercy of our LIFE-GIVER be hers.

MRS. R. W. PIERCE, Milwaukee, Wis., sends $5 and writes:—"It has been a long time since I have written; but you have not been forgotten by any means. I have been sick, and we have changed our residence, so that my cares have been very great. I sometimes feel that my journey is nearly done. But then, I am willing to suffer the loss of all things, and bear all things, if I can but win Christ. My BIBLE and the HERALD OF LIFE are all the companions I have. Your sister, waiting for Christ."

EMELINE WOOD, Albany, N. Y., sends $2, and writes:—"I wish I could send more; for I would like to do so to spread this glorious light of Life only in Christ; but, glory to His name, he can raise all needful help to carry on this work; for he has the hearts all in his hands, and can incline them to aid. His promises never fail. I do not have work as I wish but feel "the Lord will provide." As he prospers me I will give. I should like much to be at the anniversary of the "LIFE AND ADVENT UNION" if I had the means. If it is better for me to send the money to help spread the light, I will say, AMEN: I will try to do as God directs; he knows best, and I will leave all to him who doeth all things well. May our Father in heaven bless you in all you do for his glory and the good of mankind; and may the peace of God fill your heart, and you not want any good thing, is my sincere desire."

DR. JOHN BILLINGS, New Rutland, Ill., writes: "You may put me down ten dollars as a donation for the next volume of the HERALD OF LIFE. When you have your annual meeting, say to the Brethren, from me, Stand by the paper. Besides my pledge of $10, I shall keep doing. I herewith send you two new subscribers with the pay for the same.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Dr. Billings seems to be in earnest about the paper. We want at least five hundred equally so; and there is no time to lose. Our anniversary is only six weeks off, and then the matter about the HERALD OF LIFE is to be decided. To continue till then will take more funds than we have at present. This volume must be completed and the next provided for in a few weeks, if it is to go on. Tell us, one and all, what you will do for this work: let there be no delay in the matter; for your responses will influence the action of the "LIFE AND ADVENT UNION" at its annual meeting August 23d.

Bridge over the East River.

The corporators of the company recently chartered to bridge the East River, New York, have organized, and selected Mr. John E. Roebling, of Trenton, N. J., the engineer who constructed the Niagara Falls and Cincinnati bridges, as the chief engineer, and it is probable that his plans will be carried out. He favors only one story, or a one floor bridge, and about seventy-five feet wide. In this plan it is proposed to have three sets of cables, one on each side, and one in the middle of the bridge. The roadway to be arranged in this plan in the following manner: A sidewalk on each side for foot passengers, seven feet in width, both making fourteen feet devoted to foot passengers. Next inside of these walks a carriage-way of thirteen feet each way, or twenty-six combined. On the inside of this carriageway, which will be the space on each side of the cables in the middle of the bridge, is a space for cars, say about sixteen feet each, or thirty-two feet in all. This leaves three feet out of the seventy-five for railings and the cable in the middle of the bridge. In this way, Mr. Roebling estimates that he can provide for the accommodation of two hundred and fifty thousand people to cross the bridge in a day.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

The universal desire for extra legislation in regard to the Military Reconstruction Bill, brought together the members of Congress in conformity with the legal call. The session is likely to be short, no further legislation being likely to engage attention than will suffice to shackle the rebellious tendencies of the President. The Bill reported embraces these main features. It gives to the military commanders the power to remove all civil officers of the State governments within their respective districts, and provides that such commanders shall not be removed by the President except with the advice and consent of the Senate; that no civil courts shall have jurisdiction of any action or proceeding against such commanders or their subordinate officers, nor jurisdiction on questions arising in the registration, and that an oath of loyalty is not sufficient to entitle to the privilege of registering. A committee has been appointed to fully investigate everything connected with the assassination of President Lincoln, with power to grant amnesty to those who will testify, who have been engaged in that conspiracy.

The Salt Lake Vidette of June 15 says: On Sunday afternoon Brigham Young preached a lengthy sermon, boldly and openly announcing that Amasa Lyman, Orson Hyde and Orson Pratt had apostatized, and were cut off from the church. Orson Hyde had been chosen President of the twelve apostles last April. Pratt is one of the twelve, and Lyman had been one of the apostles also. Young was severe on Hyde, but particularly so on Pratt. He denounced the latter as an unbeliever, and as now in possession of the devil.

The crops in Utah promise to be better than in five years.

FOREIGN.

The death of Maximilian caused profound sorrow all over Europe; it was denounced as murder in the French Legislature. But for Mexico a store of retribution is gathering, and the animosity and ill-will produced by its vindictive and cruel policy will yet fall with unmitigated fury when the hour of opportunity offers. Even in this country there may grow up a party, taking advantage of the spirit of antipathy against the degraded people to despoil them of their country.

Several Austrian officers in New Orleans, the remnant of the garrison at Vera Cruz, left for Havana, where they propose to organize a movement against the Juarez party in Mexico. They claim they will in a few days be again on Mexican soil, allied with a powerful party, and under the lead of a powerful chieftain. Steps were taken in Washington on Saturday evening to organize a filibustering band, to join a party which it is believed is already nearly completed for a raid on Mexico. The company, it is reported, is to be called Maximilian's Avengers.

The gold five-franc piece, and its multiples, have been fixed upon as the basis of a uniform international currency by the Congress now sitting in Paris.

Italy has not ceased to feel the effects of the implacable hostility of Rome, and, at the moment of her greatest need, finds her expectation of relief thwarted by the instruments of the Vatican. There is now no doubt that the withdrawal of Rothschild and Fremy from the contract they had concluded with the Italian government for an advance of four hundred and thirty millions upon the Church property was wholly due to clerical influence. The word went to Rome that every possible effort should be made to induce Rothschild to break off the negotiation. The heart of the Israelite billionaire, encased by triple mail of money bags, was touched, and at the last moment he refused to ratify the signature of his agent to the convention drawn up by Signor Ferrars at Turin, although both he and Fremy had previously accepted the conditions of that convention as clearly set forth in a letter from Ratazzi to Rothschild.

Napoleon, it is alleged, charges the death of Maximilian on the Mexican church party.

The Prussian plan of a North-German tariff has been accepted by the other states.

General Garibaldi, on receipt from the Students' Committee of Bologna of his appointment as honorary member, returned the following reply: Rome, the slave of tyranny, as you say, and polluted by the embraces of the priest, knows well that I shall not fail in my task. An old remnant of Mount Janiculus, in that city, I desire above all to return there and to share in the deliverance of that sanctuary of Italian glories. And you, gracious youths, you will be present also, at the decisive banquet of redemption, from which not a single Italian must be missing, since the question to be dealt with is one of liberty or of slavery for the whole of Italy.

The Paris correspondent of the London Globe says that the demand of the French government for 158,500,000 francs for the army and navy, presented to the Corps Legislatif, had produced a profound impression on the public. It had done so on the Chamber also. In a financial point of view it completely deranges the budget, and accordingly the discussion of that measure, which was fixed for Wednesday, was postponed to Saturday, the day the Scotia left Liverpool. If reports from France may be relied upon, great activity prevailed in all the military departments of the Empire. Indeed, it is said that ever since the signature of the Luxemburg treaty, military preparations have been resumed on a large scale. The reorganization of the artillery, which was suspended, is being carried on and great improvements have been effected in the "train" which will render the artillery service more perfect than formerly. In the infantry corps the officers are kept very busy; all the trained soldiers are being sent to the reserve, where they are available at a moment's notice, and their places are being filled up by recruits, who are being drilled with the greatest care and activity.

The Dano-Prussian difficulty relative to the future position of North Schleswig continues, and we are told from Paris that "the people of France are in full sympathy with the Danes."

The treaty by which Bavaria joins the Reconstructed Customs Union of North Germany was ratified by the King of Bavaria. Complete unanimity prevailed among the Ministers in Munich upon the question. Bavaria will have six votes in the representation of the States belonging to the new Zollverein. The London Star of the 24th of June remarks: There is no doubt that reports are circulating freely in France of the probability of a rupture between that country and Prussia. It is stated distinctly that when Count Bismarck was in Paris Prince Gortschakoff, at the request of the French Government, intimated to him that it would be acceptable to France if the closer union of South Germany with Prussia were not pushed on at present. It is added that the Count promised that the wishes of France in this respect should be attended to. Yet almost his first act on returning to Berlin was to conclude the customs treaty with Bavaria, by which that country becomes connected in the closest manner with North Germany. This is said to have given great offence to France.

Public opinion in Europe is becoming more and more unanimous in the rejection of capital punishment. To the many Parliaments which have voted in favor of its abolition, now the Portuguese Chamber of Deputies must be added, which adopted a motion for its abolition.

The English Government, tired of their protracted and useless negotiations with King Theodorus of Abyssinia, have at length resolved to compel, by force of arms, the King to release the English captives. Arrangements to that effect have probably been made with the King of Egypt, who is at present in England. When the first news of this warlike measure reaches Abyssinia, the lives of the captives will be in great danger from the wrath of the king.

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J.," who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—Emeline Wood, Cornelia Hoyt, Wm. F. Edgerly, William Willson, Mrs. J. Neale.

Two Dollars each from—E. B. King, Mrs. M. Conklin, Dr. E. C. Balcom.

Various Sums.

Mrs. R. W. Pierce, $5 (donation); Charles Hough, $10; A. G. Hudson, $5, (donation); M. F. L, $4.

For Helen Robertson.

R. W. Neale, Southington, Conn. $1 00
M. F. L., New York. 3 50

For Hanford's Western Mission.

Previous acknowledgments $61
R. W. Neale, Southington, Conn., p. . . . 3

Advertisements.

Meadville Theological School.

THE NEXT TERM begins September 2d, 1867. The Faculty of instruction consists of four resident and four non-resident Professors, and a Tutor. The object is to educate young men for the Christian Ministry. Beneficiary aid is given to indigent students. The tuition, use of library, and text books are free to all. The school was founded by the Unitarian and Christian denominations, but is open to all who believe in the divine origin of Christianity. The library consists of nine thousand five hundred volumes. Application may be made to Rev. A. A. Livermore, President of the Board of Instruction, Meadville, Pa.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.,
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58, White Street,
A few doors west of Broadway, NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE, LEONARD C. THORNE, GEORGE K. CARROLL, JOHN W. BROOKS, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW,
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
OFFICE HOURS, From 8 to 9 A. M. " 1 to 2 P. M. " 6 to 7 P. M. NEW YORK.

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 CHAMBERS ST.,
NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(ROOM 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This work contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN" by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 6 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent or 50 cents, and we will pay the postage.

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each: MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

THE LOVING-KINDNESS.

"For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee."—Isa. liv. 10.

"I have redeem'd thee," like a signet ring,
I've placed thee on my hand to keep and save;
Death hath its bounds, "fear not," eternal spring
Shall bring my plants of beauty from the grave.

All things shall work together for thy good,
"For thou art mine," though perils shall increase;
I'll bring thee safely through the foaming flood,
And through the fire unscath'd, in perfect peace.

More than my life I've loved thee, fearful one,
My blood flowed for thee from my wounded side,
And though my Father loved his only Son,
He freely gave me to be crucified.

I've slept within the grave, that I might bring
My children from its prison, dark and strong;
I robbed the monster of his cruel sting,
And gave an earnest of the victor's song.

I wandered homeless, and the mountain air,
With chilling dews, swept o'er my grassy bed;
Bright angels heard my agonizing prayer,
While stars shone dimly on my weary head.

With gushing love I've borne earth's cruel jest,
And throbbing temples witnessed to my pain;
While I was mock'd by consecrated priests,
'Twas for thy sake, and canst thou doubt again?

I'm fitting thee a home, where gold and gems
Are shining in their native beauty fair,
With golden harps and starry diadems,
And garments of rejoicing rich and rare.

And when the warfare is accomplished here,
And in the furnace thou art sanctified,
My hand shall wipe thy last, thy brightest tear,
And thou shalt reign with me my spotless Bride.

Children's Department.

THE CONTENTED PEASANT.

In Prussia, far away from the streets, houses, palaces, churches and noise of hurrying crowds, with the horse's tramp and rattling of wheels, a peasant lad once lived in the humble home of his father and mother, who, though poor, still cared for him, doing the best they could, considering their scant means. Carl, for so the peasant lad was named, had two sisters, and with these he passed his childhood and boyhood, hearing but little, and caring less about the honors and riches which excite the ambitious in royal cities; while he revelled in the romantic scenery of his native village, whose upland slopes were covered with the luxurious vine, thriving under the influence of genial showers, warm sunbeams and the pure breezes that swept over the hills and forests, that encircled Carl's dwelling.

The peasant lad grew, became a man, a husband and a father. More than this, Carl became a christian. How the Holy Spirit convinced him of sin, led him to Jesus for mercy, gave him peace through believing, and purified his heart by faith, does not appear; but if, when ye see the branches laden with rich and mellow fruit, you have a right to conclude the root of that tree must be good, so, from the character of Carl, we are obliged to admit that he was one with Jesus in sympathy and heart and in peace of mind.

What a sweet thought is that: God cares for us. As he cares for the lilies, to clothe them; or as he cares for the ravens to feed them; even so, only much more, he cares for us. Or as you care for the apple of your eye, or your money or your reputation, or your health or those dear little ones gambolling about your knees, so the Lord cares, interests himself, and thinks about us. All this is fact, whether we believe it or not. My believing it does not make it a fact. My belief will give the heart rest. Carl had seen the wild flower in the hedge and the trees of the forest cared for by God, and he believed God cared for him. He heard the birds singing as day by day they fed in the stray grain, or the orchard's fruit; and Carl said, "Why should not I be as light-hearted as they? God careth for me; does he not? Is not this reason enough why I should cast all my care upon him without making myself miserable with thoughts about to-morrow?" But Carl was not miserable. He lived by the day; and he had learned in whatsoever state he was, therewith to be content.

The throne of Prussia was at this time occupied by Frederick, surnamed "Old Fritz." A man cannot be always working hard; he must have some leisure and recreation; and, perhaps, of all working men, kings work the hardest. Perhaps it was with a heart depressed by the anxieties and cares of royalty, or with a mind wearied with the sound and sight of court and city life, that the monarch, leaving the smoky city behind, rode into the country in search of quiet amidst the green hedges, flowing streams and cultivated land, that environed the city. It was on this occasion that Frederick espied an old peasant by the wayside, cheerfully singing his melody.

"You must be well off, old man," said the king; "does this acre belong to you, in which you so industriously labor?"

"No, sir," replied the peasant, who did not know that it was the king; "I am not so rich as that; I plough for wages."

"How much do you get a day?"

"Eight groschen," replied the peasant.

"That is not much," replied the king. "Can you get along with this?"

"Get along, and have something left."

"How is that?"

The farmer smiled, and said, "Well, if I must tell you: two groschen are for myself and wife; with two I pay my old debts; two I lend away; and two I give for the Lord's sake."

"This is a mystery I cannot solve," replied the king.

"Then I will solve it for you," said the peasant. I have two old parents at home, who kept me when I was weak and needed help; I keep them—this is my debt toward which I pay two groschen a day; the third, which I lend away I spend for the children, that they may receive christian instruction. With the last two groschen I maintain two sick sisters. This I give for the Lord's sake."

"Bravely spoken old man! Now, have you ever seen me before?"

"Never," said the peasant.

"In less than five minutes you shall see me fifty times, and carry in your pocket fifty of my likenesses." Thrusting his hand into his pocket, and counting him fifty new gold pieces into his hand, stamped with the royal likeness, he said to the astonished peasant, "The coin also is genuine; for it comes from our Lord God, and I am his paymaster."

Have you an old father or mother? Pay your debts. Have you children? Remember, training them well is a good investment of money; you may need their support. Have you poor sisters? Don't neglect them. This is the religion of love.

May you and I, dear reader, live the sunny, hoping and cheerful life of Carl, the contented German peasant.

THE PERSONALITY OF THE DEVIL.

I have for some years been led to regard with wonder the scepticism evinced by some, (and many of these very intelligent men) on the subject of a personal devil, an intelligent evil spirit. Within the last two years I have not only wondered at, but felt sorry to see the levity with which the subject has been treated by some writers who have discussed the subject, and have noticed with surprise the self-complacent assurance with which they have enunciated their disbelief in the existence of such a being. Levity, sneers, and sarcasm, are not, however, reasoning—something more than mere assumption and ridicule are necessary to satisfy minds that confide in God's word as a revelation and look to it as a source of light, wisdom, and instruction on matters connected with our present and future happiness.

I have felt for some time, not only a desire but anxiety to see this subject fully unfolded; and some months ago, after reading some articles denying the existence of a personal devil, I commenced an examination of the subject, intending to present my own ideas as matter for thought and investigation, but did not follow up the inquiry, until now, the subject being again brought up, I feel that I must, small as may be the contribution I may offer, give what I can toward the general fund of ideas on this important question.

Of the existence of a conscious, active, evil spirit, known by the common name of devil or satan, I am a firm believer. That much of the misery and sorrow so prevalent in the world are attributable to his agency I cannot but believe:—plans of wickedness, scenes and circumstances have in many cases, been so evidently arranged, plotted, and brought to unite with each other in bringing about the accomplishment of some grand result of sin and sorrow, that I can only regard it as due to the superintending influence and energy of an invisible evil spirit or spirits, who aim only to harrass and ruin those who are the subjects of their unholy operations. I have seen this in the history and lives of others—of friends and relatives—and in my own case feel that much of the sorrow and trials through which I have passed, resulting in disappointment, blight of prospects and the loss of loved ones, has been due to satanic agency,—an agency brought to bear upon me chiefly, as I believe, on account of my opposition to spiritualism.

With such a belief and such an experience it will not be wondered at if I enter a protest against all trifling on so serious and important a subject as that under consideration.

And here let me say that while I maintain that the scriptures rightly interpreted reveal the doctrine of the existence of such an evil spirit, I admit that many passages which have been brought to support the view ought not to be regarded as proof in favor of it. I cannot but think that those who deny the existence of such a spirit have been led to do so, in a great measure, in consequence of allowing themselves to be influenced too much by these passages, and have not given others, which seem to favor the idea, that weight and consideration to which they were justly entitled.

This subject ought to be examined thoroughly, in a right spirit, and with a desire to elicit truth. As respects myself I want the truth; and if I have not got it I hope I shall yet obtain it. In investigating the question I do not intend to be deterred by ridicule, the cry of superstition, or any other bugbear, from believing and avowing what I consider the word of God to teach in regard to to this subject. I have long since learned that human authority is but fallible—that I should call no man master, no matter how much light he may have been the instrument of imparting or how high his position, or how learned in the languages. Many men have possessed all these endowments, made all these attainments, imparted much instruction, and on some points have been in great error. God has given to man powers of reason, with a capacity to investigate his word, and, looking to him for light, we are encouraged to believe that he will impart it. And, speaking for myself, I must say that if certain passages of scripture, when subjected to the test of reason and common sense, do not teach the existence of a personal, active, evil agent, called the devil and satan, I shall feel that spiritualists are not so much to blame when they interpret the Bible to suit their own fancies; for I cannot conceive how some passages can be interpreted in any other manner than as recognizing the influence of active, evil, intelligent beings in the production of the evil of which they make mention.

In examining this subject I do not propose to take in the whole field spread before us, nor to consider at length passages which by some have been supposed to teach the doctrine of a personal evil agent, but which I cannot regard as doing so—these may be touched upon—my main effort will be to show, by taking a few striking incidents recorded in the Bible, and thoroughly sifting the passages in which they are brought to view, that to explain them in accordance with reason we must admit that a personal, evil, intelligent being was the agent in the temptations which are therein narrated.

I shall consider in my next article the temptation in the garden of Eden. And may the spirit of the God of truth so direct us that we shall be led into the truth, be sanctified through its holy influence, and be better fitted to resist all that is evil, whether we are assailed by the world, the flesh or the devil; that we may triumph over all our foes, until at length our last dread enemy shall be overcome, and, forever freed from all our adversaries, we shall sit down with our Master on his throne, and share eternally in the reward which he has purchased for us—eternal life.

John Fondey, M. D.

Philadelphia, July 3, 1867.

HORRORS OF EUROPEAN DUNGEONS.

"Carleton" writing to the Boston Journal from Nuremburg, Bavaria, May 18, 1867, gives a thrilling description of the instruments of torture once in use by a government that sustained Mystic Babylon—the drunken woman of the Apocalypse. He says:

"Come to this old town if you want to get a glimpse of the world as it was five hundred years ago. The streets are unchanged. You behold houses with high, steep roofs, covered with red tiles and full of windows which were standing in the time of the Crusaders. At this very moment I hear the deep and heavy tones of church bells which swung in their moss-grown towers long before Columbus sailed upon an unknown ocean in search of a western world.

"There have been no devastating fires to change the features of the city. Battles have been fought outside the walls, but there has been no bombardment of the place; trade and commerce which flourished four centuries ago has been turned to other channels; there has been no tearing down of old structures to give place to new ones, and so you see the town as it was five centuries ago—the same massive walls, high towers, with loop-holes, and battlements; the same queer-shaped houses, with jutting windows, curiously carved ornaments, steeples, spires and weather-cocks; the same pavements which were once trod by Luther and Melancthon.

"Come with me then, to this old town, enter some of these edifices and look upon the administration as it was in the 16th and 17th centuries. We enter one of the towers of the castle, descend five steps, and find ourselves in a museum, where are preserved the books of record, giving us a history of the past; and not only books, but implements and instruments which show more clearly than written words, the administration of those days, with which the government of the United States is now compared. Here is a post four feet high in the centre of the room, with two curious fixtures on the top, having some resemblance to gun locks.

"What is this?" The girl who acts as our usher raises the hammers, which come up with a click. She touches a spring and down they go, with a snap that startles you—forced down by strong springs, with a whack that would have mashed your fingers to a jelly had they been under the hammer. This is a finger crusher, a delicate little instrument used to extort confessions from reluctant witnesses or suspected criminals. Here are bracelets for the wrists, not of gold or silver, but of iron, and the parts which touch the wrist are set with needles. Put them on your arms and turn a screw and they close upon the flesh, the needles piercing through cords, tendons, flesh and bones. It is one degree more excruciating than crushing the fingers.

"Here is a head-dress—a crown which has been worn by many men and women. It has sharp knives which cut through the scalp to the skull. Here are chains and weights, locks and keys, handcuffs and clasps for the ankles, stocks for the feet, weights to hold your feet to the floor, and pulleys to draw your head at the same time to the ceiling. Here is a bench of solid oak, with a corrugated surface, upon which many men have been laid, held down by cords, to undergo the kneading process, and that rolling pin, knotty and knobby, also of oak, which lies upon the table, has been rolled backwad and forward over the naked forms of men and women, kneading live flesh to bloody dough! Time and space would fail me were I to enumerate the instruments of torture here, or to set forth their uses. We can only look at the cradle—a huge trough of oak on rockers—the bottom and sides thickly set with pins, in which many victims have been rocked to death. Think of lying on a bed of oaken pins, rolling to the right, to the left—always against pins—till the flesh becomes livid jelly! Here is a string of oaken beads, each bead sixteen sided, about as large as hickory nuts. This was for sawing off legs and arms,

"Here is an instrument shaped like a pear. It is of iron, but to all appearance a harmless thing. But just take it into your mouth, and let me give a gentle pull at the string attached to the stem of the pear, and it will be no longer a pear, but a full blown lily—an iron lily unfolding its leaves so suddenly and violently that your jaws are forced open till the joints crack in their sockets, while the delicate petals become pincers, which grasp your tongue! No out-cry now. No utterance of words. No screaming to raise the neighborhood. Moans and sighs only from the sufferer. One twitch of the string and the tongue is torn out by the roots!

"We must leave this museum without mentioning the hundreds of curiosities. We go into the court yard, stopping a moment to pluck a leaf from a lime tree which was in full vigor 700 years ago, and then we enter another door, descend a longer flight of steps, to dark, dismal dungeons, where no light ever falls except through narrow, iron-grated windows. Here are ladders, with windlasses and pulleys, on which victims were stretched till bones snapped, till joints leaped from their sockets, and cords and tendons were torn asunder. Here are racks and wheels, pillories and stocks, whips and manacles. This was the place of torture. We leave these and creep through a narrow passage, through doorway after doorway, and reach at last, far under ground, far beneath all sight or sound of the world, a darker dungeon. This is the room of the Iron Maiden.

"Here is the statue or image—a maiden with a hood upon her head, an iron ruffle around the neck, enveloped in an iron cloak. Suddenly the folds of the cloak are thrown apart, and by the dim light of the candle you see that the lining of the garment is set with sharp spikes. Take one step forward and the folds enclose you. Iron spikes pierce your body, and into your eye balls—clear through to the vertebra they penetrate. Not a quick embrace, but slowly you are enfolded—one turn of the screw, just enough to penetrate the flesh, just enough to touch the apple of the quivering eye; then, after an age of anguish another turn and a hundred spikes reach a little nearer to the nerves; and then, as heat, as thirst and fever rack the body, another gentle turn and another age of torture; and then one more advance of the spikes toward the vitals, till death comes on, and then the maiden, unfolding her arms, drops her victim through a trap-door, down—down—down into unknown depths! We drop a pebble and hear the faint splash of waters far beneath.

"Here is a skull. Anatomists say it is the skull of a female. You may put your fingers into the holes where the spikes which entered the eyes came through! No name, no record, God only has the book of remembrance.

"We think of this dungeon as connected with the barbarism of the middle ages; but we are not quite so far removed from those days of rigorous administration of law. Till Napoleon with the legions of France came across the Rhine, overthrowing all obstacles, this iron maiden held out her arms to receive offenders against the law. On the approach of the French army in 1803, the Virgin, as it is called, with other instruments of torture, were thrown into a cart and dispatched in haste out of the town, but fell into the hands of the victorious army. Not till then did the world know what sort of punishments were meted out to offenders of the law.

"We are to remember that Nuremberg was a free city. About thirty patrician families for a long time monopolized authority, and chose a Council of State consisting of eight persons who formed the Executive. This Executive was an irresponsible body. The world knew nothing of their secret administration of affairs. Men disappeared and no one knew what became of them. The iron Virgin embraced them, and that was all. Another Virgin exists in Austria, at Neustadt. There are other horrors, enough to curdle the blood, not of the Roman Inquisition, but of German governments. The heart almost ceases its beating when you look upon their devilish inventions and think that though 1867 years have rolled away since Christ came to redeem the world, yet we are only half a century removed from these horrors."

PRIESTLY INTOLERANCE.

We learn from the Daily Telegraph, an English paper, that an act of priestly intolerance was recently practised there which ought to have been confined to harlot Rome in centuries past, instead of being found in Protestant England. The Telegraph speaks of it as follows:

"Acts of priestly intolerance have happily become rare in this country; so rare, that when we see any clergyman setting up for a Hildebrand in a small way, the first impulse is to laugh at him, and the next is to put him down as summarily as the fellow who should bring to a modern dinner table the coarse jests that were common a century ago. But we have very seldom to do anything of the kind. The clergyman of our time is usually a pious, well educated, tolerant gentleman, who knows very well that he would act absurdly by hurling priestly anathemas from the pulpit, or by declaring that some of his parishioners had gone to the bottomless pit.' .... "In Winchester the other day one of Mr. Seymour's parishioners departed this life. Nobody says that he was bad or impenitent; and we cannot doubt that he died as a christian should die, when we know that during his last moments he was attended by the reverend gentleman himself. It was found out, however, that he had never been baptized, and arrangements were made to do what his parents had unpardonably neglected. But before the omission could be repaired the man had breathed his last, and Mr. Seymour was so shocked by the accident that he declined to let him have all the benefits of christian burial. He would not be too hard; he would not refuse to let the sinner's body have a resting-place in consecrated ground, beside that of his wife; nay, such was his liberality that he was ready to read the burial service over the grave. But there his concessions stopped. He would not permit the dead body to be brought into the cemetery church before it should be consigned to the tomb. The daughters of the deceased were naturally shocked at such a decree, but they submitted to Mr. Seymour's authority, and on the appointed day the funeral train left the house for the church yard. When they got there, however, no clergyman was to be seen. In his place there was a messenger who said that the gentleman had changed his mind, and would have nothing to do with the burial. Mr. Seymour did not tell why, nor had he intimated to the relatives beforehand that he meant to break his promise. Nay, he had actually met the procession on the way to the graveyard, and even then he had offered the mourners no word of warning. Only when the coffin was on the edge of the tomb did he declare that he was too much of a bigot to be a christian; and the remains had to be placed in a neighboring house, and left there throughout the night, until arrangements could be made to give the unbaptized some substitute for what he believed to be a christian burial. The friends applied to the Rev. W. H. Fuller, a Congregational minister, and next afternoon the body was buried in unconsecrated ground, after such prayers as the officiating clergyman deemed appropriate.

"The conduct of Mr. Seymour is so unchristian that it is difficult to describe it in terms that shall not outstep the bounds of decency. He does not pretend that the death-bed was one of impiety; and even if such had been its character, his duty would have been to go through the burial service. He would not, he dares not, refuse to read that service over the grave of a swindler, or a drunkard, or a thief; but he avowedly refuses to read it over the grave of a blameless person for no other reason than that the man had not undergone that rite which is the token of formal admission to the church. Nor is the clergyman consistent in his intolerance and superstition. While the parishioner was alive he would not and he could not have shut him out of the cemetery church: why, then, did he shut out what remained after death? If the unbaptized had sinned, it was his immortal spirit, and not his tenement of clay that was culpable: why then was he tolerated in the place of worship during life, and why was the priestly anathema hurled against an inanimate heap of dust? Again, Mr. Seymour did not refuse to read at the grave those prayers which, with grand charity, speak of the glorious resurrection awaiting each and all. Why, then, did he think it holy to perform the ceremony outside a building and unholy to do so inside, when in each case the ground was consecrated? Finally, why, after promising to give the man the burial of a christian, did he do his utmost to give him the burial of a dog? Happily, that design was defeated; and happily, too, the dead man was beyond the reach of priestly superstition. But, nevertheless, most people attach high importance to those noble rites which the Church of England has directed to be performed over christian graves; and when pastors of that church so far assume the attributes of Omniscience as to say who are and who are not worthy of christian burial, then the grievance becomes national in magnitude, and too intolerable to be borne. With just pride the Church of England calls herself the church of the nation, and opens wide her gates to every doubter, as well as to every orthodox believer. But, if she begins to proclaim that she will take upon herself the duty of deciding who are fit to enjoy the blessings of her rites, then she will sink into the position of a mere sect. Such men as Mr. Seymour are doing their best to attain that end. They know that a large class hold infant baptism to be meaningless, and do not formally enter the christian church until an age at which they can personally take the christian vows. Thousands of those people die unbaptized yearly, and over the graves of all those thousands Mr. Seymour would refuse to read the burial service. Do the Seymours fancy that the nation would tolerate such bigotry for a week? Or do they fancy that if the church were to give it her sanction she would stand for a year? In themselves the Seymours of this life hardly merit rebuke; but the office which they fill gives them power to inflict incalculable injury on the establishment. These are the very men who mourn over the inroads of dissent. We tell them that they are the best allies of dissent. If unbridled, they would do more harm to the church in one year than the Liberation Society would do in twenty. In presence of such people one is inclined to regret that the great English divines who drew up the noblest of liturgies did not place in the Litany, 'From priestly intolerance and superstition, good Lord deliver us.'"

The foregoing description of priestly intolerance, it is easy to see, resulted from attachment to a "carnal ordinance," a belief in an "immortal spirit," and "eternal misery" to those who die without having complied with the decrees of the priestly institutions. We need not, however, go to England to find this same spirit. Many in America suppose if a man has not had the "rite of baptism" performed in their way, or on a profession of their faith, they will be excluded from the kingdom of God. They lack only the power, or they would go all the way with the Seymours of England. It is high time that such superstition, will-worship, and intolerance were ended.

PERFECT PEACE.

"Glory be to God, in all events," exclaimed Chrysostom, when dying amid the cruel harassing of his guards; and faith, schooled by experience, and inspired by the love of Jesus, ever looks heavenward, saying, "Glory!"

"Thou will keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee."

Perfect peace!

"I thank God," said Dr. Watts, in his old age, "that I can lie down with comfort at night, not being solicitous whether I awake in this world or another." He walked in Beulah, and heard,

"At morn and even,
At noon and midnight hour,
The choral harmonies of heaven
Seraphic music pour."

Perfect peace.

"I am as happy as I can be out of paradise," said a poor Methodist soldier, with broken limbs, on the battle field of Fontenoy.

Perfect peace! The peace of God that passeth understanding!

"Jesus, the vision of thy face Hath overpowering charms."

When the city of London was helplessly reeling to and fro with the shock of an earthquake, Charles Wesley, standing up before his congregation at the foundery, exclaimed, in a state of religious exaltation: "We will not fear though the earth be removed, and the hills be carried into the midst of the sea: for the Lord of hosts is with us: the God of Jacob is our refuge." His hearers were trembling with terror, expecting each moment that the walls of the building would fall. Cries and lamentations were heard on every side. What a sublime spectacle! A tottering city, and a soul triumphant and at perfect peace.

Aversion to Sin.—"I want you to have a holy aversion to sin. Do you know what I mean by aversion? Suppose any one of you were to put your hand in your pocket and feel a toad there, you would draw it out instantly, from your aversion to the animal. Now, my desire is that when conscious of sin, you should have just such an aversion as this to it—a hatred of it, and disgust at its horrid nature."—Rowland Hill.

Our Israelitish Origin.—A work on Prophecy. It was written by Prof. Wilson, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For our self, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 8 cents.

The Life & Advent Union.

Constitution of "The Life and Advent Union."

Article I. The object of this Union is to use all available means to promulgate the doctrine of Life only in Christ, the personal, proximate advent of our Lord Jesus, and all sentiments calculated to spread vital godliness.

II. Any person believing in Life through Chris alone, and sustaining a Christian character, may become a member of this Union by subscribing to the Constitution.

III. The officers of this Union shall be a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and five Directors, who together shall constitute the Managing Board, and who are to be elected annually.

IV. The Managers shall be authorized to collect funds for the Union, which funds shall be transmitted to the Business Agent, who shall keep account of the same and transfer them to the Treasurer.

V. The Annual meeting and such other meetings as may be deemed necessary by the Board of Managers, shall be called by giving three weeks' notice.

VI. The Secretary shall keep a record of the names and post-office addresses of the members.

VII. This Constitution may be amended by a two-thirds vote at any Annual meeting.

Officers of The Life and Advent Union

Jacob Grim, Philadelphia, Pa., President.
C. D. Leet, Springfield, Mass., Vice President
Rufus Wendell, Salem, Mass., Secretary.
Leonard C. Thorne, New York, Treasurer.

Directors.

Wm. H. Thorne, New York,
Richard Martin, " "
John Kemp, " "
Geo. K. Carroll, " "
A. W. Macdonald, " "

The Herald of Life

AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

TERMS:—Two Dollars a Year; or, 48 numbers; One Dollar for six months; or, 24 numbers; invariably in advance. When served by Carrier in New York city, 48 cents additional. Persons sending five new subcribers, with advance pay, will be entitled to a sixth copy or their services.

The Postage on the Herald of Life, prepaid quarterly or yearly at the office where it is received, is 20 cents a year to any part of the United States. The postage to Canada and the British Provinces is also 20 cents a year, and must be prepaid in New York; for such papers, therefore the price will be $2 20 a year, or $1 10 for six months.

We can not undertake to prepay postage upon newspapers, except where the law obliges us to do so; that is, any where out of the United States. Anywhere in the United States, the subscriber may just as well pay the postage at his own Post Office, as to send the amount to us, and subject us to the trouble of doing it here It is far less trouble to the subscriber than to us, and we must absolutely decline doing it for any within the States. Let this be remembered.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

All Letters relating to the Herald of Life, whether in business or other matter, must invariably be addressed

"Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658,
New York."

Where a letter contains business matter and matter for the paper, or for private use, let it be so written that we can separate the two without infringing on either. This is essential to the business of the Office, and let none neglect it.

All names of persons, sent us, should be written with care, so that we shall not have to guess them out. Also, in ordering papers sent, the name of the Post Office County, and State must be given, and written plainly; and if a change is called for, state the Office to which the paper has previously been sent. Unless attention is paid to all these matters, confusion and delay are inevitable.

Herald of Life AND OF THE COMING KINGDOM.

"YET A LITTLE WHILE, AND THE WORLD SEETH ME NO MORE; BUT YE SEE ME: BECAUSE I LIVE, YE SHALL LIVE ALSO."—JESUS.

WHOLE NO. 181. | NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1867. | VOL. IV.—NO. 39.

THE HERALD OF LIFE

IS PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY

"THE LIFE AND ADVENT UNION,"

AT

No. 37 Park Row,

(Fifth Story, Room 40), NEW YORK.

GEORGE STORRS, Editor.

THE COURSE OF TEMPTATION.

The matter of the following article is mostly borrowed; but we have made such alterations in some of its phrases that we could not with truth give credit to the original writer, and he would doubtless disown it.—Ed. of. Her.

"Ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil." Such was the promise in the temptation of our first parents. Such was the original lie by which they were drawn away from God.

Our translation of this passage is defective. It is a departure from the way the same word is elsewhere rendered. The Hebrew word is Elohim, the uniform rendering of which is "God."

It is so translated in the begining of this verse. "For God doth know," etc. There is no reason why it shonld not be so rendered here. The promise was to make man as God

This deceitful promise furnishes a key to all history. It explains the development of the individual man, and of the race.

And, first, the mode of this temptation is to be carefully noticed. The evil does not appear here in the form of absolute evil.

This was not the style of warfare then, nor is it now. From the outset evil appeared as a good. The promise was of the highest good. "Ye shall be as God." Was not God the sum of all excellence and blessedness? Was it wrong to desire to be like him? Does not the word of God present this as the lofty goal to which we are destined, who are called to be the sons of God? Has not Jesus Christ come in the flesh to give us this power, and to exalt us to this rank? "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him." The essence of Adam's sin was that he chose to seek this lofty prize, under the leadership of his own will and desires, instead of calmly waiting upon God to fulfil the desires of his heart.

The temptation of the Second Adam was the same in kind. It was a promise of the highest human exaltation, the dominion of the world.

Adam fell into the snare, so artfully presented. But it is most important to observe that, in this brief transaction, we have an epitome of the whole historical development of the human race. When Adam became the victim of unbridled desires or lust, evil was suffered to assume a kind of sovereignty over the human race. Of course, evil is limited and overruled by God, and specially by our Lord Jesus Christ, unto whom all power in heaven and earth is now committed, and who, through his death and resurrection, has vanquished and will ultimately cast out and destroy all evil from the earth. It is the blessed faith and hope of the Gospel, that the Lord Jesus hath already struck it a death blow; and on the very theatre and at the very crisis of its triumph, He shall come to cast it down and destroy it. But we see not yet all things put under him. The hour for the final victory has not yet arrived. The grand scheme of apostacy from God, begun in Paradise, has not reached its climax. Evil is still abroad in the world, conducting the drama to its crisis. In the breast of the individual, and as the deceiver of the nations, it is still persuading men to believe the old original lie. And to this end, it has directed and inspired its culture, ornauized its imposing systems of trade and empire, reared its vast fabrics of superstition, and woven its network of vain philosophies.

We may pause here, and observe how the history of every man develops in the direction of this first temptation.

The false fire, then kindled, gleams out, even in childhood. The self-assertion and obstinacy of children is but its latent working; and as the child grows up, its imagination is filled with ambitious projects and castles in the air. How it longs to be a greater somebody than it is.

And as the child becomes the man, the leaven of the old lie works with accumulated power. What boundless aspirations, what lofty conceits, what daring projects fill his mind! We need not signalize eminent men of the past, or of the present. We are all the victims of these insatiable desires. We all want to climb the heights of wealth or fame. And at what pitch of self-exaltation will we be content to stop, save that to which the temptation promises to raise us? "Ye shall be as God." Infinite! boundless! are these aspirations. Man cannot stop short of the highest goal. And these flights of ambition are also searches, on our part, after the knowledge of good and evil. The two things are inseparably connected. They are strugglings of the mind to rid itself of the limitations and misfortunes that encompass it as with a net. "Who will show us any good?" is the universal cry. "Give me wisdom, give me power, give me wealth; cause me to be admired or feared; place me in that dreamland of the future, or on the cloudy summits which beckon me on to glory, and I shall have found the good I crave." Thus do our lusts, or desires tempt us on from one height to another, by the vain hope that we shall run away from evil, and seize the good.

And, as with the individual, so with the race. It also has been, and is now, deceived by the hope of attaining the infinite good. The leaven of the original sin has pervaded, and yet pervades, all its experiments at self-advancement. It is manifest in the great empires that have successively occupied the theatre of the world. It taints all the social theories, by which it is proposed to rid the world of evil, and exalt and bless man with the knowlege of the good. To this end the scattered families of the earth were first drawn together on the plains of Babel. "And they said, Go to, let us build us a city and a tower, whose top may reach unto heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered abroad upon the face of the whole earth." The Lord thwarted this first attempt by confounding their language. Afterward, however, these attempts were allowed to succeed; and we have a long succession of worldly states, under which the power of the human race was aggrandized, and its civilization advanced. It seems to have been the plan of God, to give the earth into the hands of the children of the world, that they might have time and scope to carry out their great experiments, under the leadership of their own ambition and pride. And these experiments have not yet closed. Every sort of theory has been, and is still tried, by which the exaltation of the race is to be secured and made permanent, by which the evils of its condition are to be detected and eliminated. These all are endeavors on the part of man to realize, now in one form, now in another, the dream of his destiny, and establish a peaceful and prosperous empire, which shall give him room for expansion, and protect him from evil, in the enjoyment of the good; and in all of them it is not hard to detect the workings of the old lie. It would be wrong, indeed, to assert that these attempts have accomplished nothing in this direction, The promise has been seemingly fulfilled, and there is no doubt that this present experience in sin is the appointed preparatory discipline. But his true, ultimate glory requires his present failure. Hence, his success is only partial and unreal; and with apparent success, his pride and self-sufficiency increase. Grander schemes than ever now swell his mind. Greater prizes beckon him on, and giant evils follow him into the new fields of his conquest. But the dream of a golden age, to be wrought out by his own efforts, still lures him on. His triumps over brute matter, his access to the gathered stores of the wealth and wisdom of the past, his vast achievements lead him to believe that the goal is near. Hence the might, the glow, the marvellous strides of our modern civilization. Hence the agony and blood of the mighty struggle. Above this roar of cities and din of workshops, above the noise of those steaming shuttlecocks that are weaving the world's inhabitants into one vast fabric, above the thunder of its battle-fields, is heard a voice, echoing the old lie, "Ye shall be as gods," and urging men on to higher deeds and grander struggles. And this progress in effort and achievement, in conflict with evil and grasping after good, will go on, as we are assured in holy writ, until it culminates in the great falsehood upon which the world's culture is based, "Ye shall be as God;" that spirit opposeth and exalteth itself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that, as God, it sitteth in the temple of God, with the cry, "Man is his own God." Under this proved self-exaltation the drama of ages shall come to its consummation.

The deceitful promise in the first temptation in its highest fulfilment, shall be proved a lie. Man, raised as near to God as his pride can raise him, shall fall like lightning from heaven; for the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth, and destroy with the brightness of his coming, the whole body of evil.

These two points, then, the first deceitful promise to make man as God, and man's claim that he is his "own God," under the inspiration of culminated evil; and his palming himself off on the world as such, are the termini of this age. The experiment begun with Adam will go on till a final effort. This will be the embodiment and masterpiece of man's transcendant genius, and patient working through these long years. What men call the "spirit of the age," is that spirit of antichrist, whereof we have heard that it should come For the "spirit of the age" totally denies the world's need of the coming of the Lord from heaven, and vaunts itself as able to work out the great problem of human destiny in its own strength. When men do homage to the spirit of the age, they worship the spirit of this world.

And yet how many Christians are worshippers at this altar! Protestant Christians have been quick to discern its working in the bosom of the Church, in Rome's effort to realize the kingdom of God before the time. But are they aware that the majority of their purer faith have fallen into a delusion no less subtle and dangerous? Has Protestant Christianity proved itself any more able to realize the kingdom? And yet the common doctrine of a Millennium, before the coming of Christ, involves such a belief: and worse than all, the hope of achieving this result rests partly upon the "spirit of the age."

This doctrine denies any necessity for the judgment of this world, and the casting out of this self-glorifying spirit, before the kingdom of God can come upon the earth. Hence it looks for no such crisis and divine intervention as the Advent doctrine requires. Instead of regarding the present progress of the world as a ripening for judgment, it expects it to ripen into a Millennium. Verily the false Christs of modern civilization have deceived many. Most of the visible Church is ready to welcome the antichristian self-exaltation to which this age tends. Not only all the world shall wonder after this self-glorification, but those christians who, by their false theory, say, "My Lord delayeth his coming," are not at all prepared to meet the awful hour.

The Lord grant that his people may be warned in time, for such shall be the strength and subtlety of this last form of evil, that all worldly-minded christians will be deceived. None but such as watch and pray will escape.

THE DAWN OF THE HEALING DAY.

"There was a day in the past," says Dr. Newton, "when the first act of sin was committed on the earth; there is a day in the future when the last stain of sin shall be purged away from it. There was a day in the past when the curse came down upon our globe with crushing, blighting, paralyzing power, disordering everything, and making the whole creation travail together in pain until now. There is a day in the future when the curse shall be lifted off from the disordered framework of creation, and

"The groans of nature in this lower world,
Which heaven has heard for ages,
Shall have an end."

There was an hour in the past, when our sin-smitten world came under the ban of exile from the great family of worlds, of which God is the Father, and Jesus Christ the Elder Brother. There is an hour in the future when that sentence of seclusion will be repealed, and our exiled earth be restored to open, happy intercourse with other worlds; when angels shall visit it again without concealment, and men will hear the voice of the Lord God, as Adam did when he walked amidst the bowers of Eden in the cool of the day. There was a time in the past when the Son of God entered our world in humiliation, to suffer and to die; there is a time in the future when he shall enter it again in power and great glory, to judge it in righteousness, and reign over it in peace." To the dawn of this great and glorious day, when the earth will be healed of the wounds which sin has caused, and the curse in all its ramifications will be removed, the finger of prophecy distinctly points. When Malachi in prophetic ecstacy saw "the proud, and all that do wickedly" consumed in the fires of the burning day, he thus referred to the safety of the "jewels" of Jehovah—"But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing on his wings; and ye shall go forth and grow up as calves of the stall."—chap. iv. 1–3 with iii. 16–18. "The Sun of righteousness," is obviously a metaphorical denomination of the Messiah—the Righteous One—who is in many respects as "a sun" to his people. Psa. lxxxiv. 11. The second advent of Christ will be a welcome and glorious sun-rising to all who fear his name. The sun in the early morning seems to move upward, as if it had wings; and before its rays, or beams, the darkness, dreariness and dampness of night disappear. In Smyrna and other portions of the Orient, travellers say that "every morning about sunrise a fresh gale of air blows from the sea across the land, and from its wholesomeness, and utility in clearing the infected air, it is always called the Doctor." Dr. Pococke says the Jews have a proverbial saying, "As the sun riseth, infirmities decrease;" and where a salubrious breeze always attends the rising of the sun, the words of the prophet will seem more striking and appropriate than they do to us. When "the sun-rising from on high" visited the earth (Luke i. 78, margin) at first, disease and death fled at his approach; but all the miracles of healing wrought by our Saviour at his first advent were but the foreshadows of what he will accomplish when he comes again. Then will the lame man leap as a hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing. The blind will see out of obscurity, and the deaf will hear with perfect distinctness. Ransomed from the prison-houses of mortality and death, the Lord's people will "go forth" to see the light of the Sun of righteousness, to behold "the King in his beauty," to participate in the healing influence of the rising morn, and to enjoy the purchased and promised liberty of the sons of God. They will "go forth and grow up"—not as a flower of the field, weak, slender and of little use, but—"as calves of the stall." Some read it, "ye shall go forth and move yourselves," or "leap for joy," "as calves of the stall." Thus the playfulness of stall-fed calves when let loose in the open field illustrates, by a simile, the joyfulness of the redeemed in that day when, rescued from the domain of Death, they hear the King say, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning," said the royal Psalmist; but at present no tongue can tell nor heart conceive what is meant by the "fulness of joy" that is at God's right hand. Psa. xxx. 5; xvi. 11. Well may the feeble saint long for the light of this healing day to break upon the everlasting hills.

"Dream not of a fairer earth,
Till the King of kings shall come;
Till creation's second birth
Guilt shall swell its awful sum.
Ne'er a brighter sun shall rise
Till Christ shall greet our waiting eyes,
Earth shall wear no richer green
Till Christ upon the Mount is seen."

Is it the healing day of whose dawn Malachi speaks, to which Isaiah refers when he says, "Moreover the light of the moon shall be as the light of the sun, and the light of the sun shall be seven-fold, as the light of seven days, in the day that the Lord bindeth up the breach of his people, and healeth the stroke of their wound?" Isa. xxx. 26. If so, by the substitution, the present imperfect condition of God's people is illustrated by their being wounded and disabled: and their restoration from the curse, by the binding up and healing of those wounds." On this point, however, we will have more to say hereafter, and as we await the dawn of this healing day let us so live that we can pray daily—

"Lord Jesus, come, and end this troubled dreaming!
Dark shadows vanish, rosy twilight break!
Morn of the true and real, burst forth, calm-beaming,
Day of the beautiful, arise, awake!"

—Selected.

THE EARTH THE SAINTS' ABODE.

The Editor of the Prophetic Times, in noticing the book of Rev. David Brown against Millenarians, quotes several admissions which Mr. Brown makes that are of much interest, coming as they do from an opponent. One point we specially notice. The Times says:

On the doctrine of the perpetuity of the earth beyond the advent, and the residence of men upon it forever, Mr. Brown is also persuaded to desert the popular belief, and to yield to the force of our reasonings He agrees that there is no ground for the idea that the world is to be annihilated, much less the whole material universe. He also accepts the doctrine that the earth and its surrounding heavens, changed and renovated when Christ comes, shall be the eternal abode of men. "Some minds," says he, "shrink from this opinion, as tending to carnalize, or at least to lower, our views of the celestial state. But may not such sensitiveness spring from an unconscious confounding of the present wretched state with that which is expected to take its place? May there not be in it some tincture of that morbid spiritualism which shrinks from the very touch of materialism, as if separation from it in every form would be the consummation of happiness? May not the Gnostic element of the essential sinfulness and vanity of matter be found lurking beneath it? Certainly, if the earth was implicated in the curse, it is natural to expect that it should share in its removal. Certainly, the glorified bodies, both of the Redeemer and the redeemed derive their elements from the dust of this ground, which will thus, in their persons at least, forever endure. And if it be no degradation to the Son of God to take it into his own person, 'as the first born from the dead'—if the dust of this ground is capable of becoming a 'spiritual' and a 'glorious body,' meet vehicle for the perfected and beatified spirit, the sharer of its bliss in the immediate presence, and the instrument of all its activities in the service of God and the Lamb—it does seem hard to conceive how the very system which has furnished all these elements of incorruption and spirituality, and beauty, and glory—when its present constitution shall be dissolved, and when new and higher laws shall be stamped upon it—should be incapable of furnishing a congenial abode for the glorified church. Nor is it easy to make anything else out of Paul's singularly interesting and noble announcements regarding the deliverance of a groaning creation from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God (Rom. viii. 19–23), or fairly to interpret the celebrated prediction of Peter (2 Pet. iii. 10–13), otherwise than as intimating that 'the new heavens and the new earth,' physically considered, will be the same which God originally created for the abode of men; when it shall have undergone an igneus, as it has already undergone aqueous transformation." Pp. 10, 11.

MINISTERS, KEEP HUMBLE.

Rowland Hill exceeded almost all other men in giving sound and often severe advice, without offending. Illustrations of this abound in his life by Sidney, and the following may be taken as a specimen:

No man ever had more solemn views than Mr. Rowland Hill, of the true nature of the ministerial work, and of the necessity of a humble dependence on the Lord's assistance, for a blessing on it. One of his remarks was—"If favored at any time with what is called a good opportunity, I am too apt to catch myself saying, 'well done, I,' when I should lie in the dust, and give God all the glory." Another was, "Lord make me distrustful of myself, that I may confide in thee alone—self-dependence is the pharisee's high road to destruction." "Oh dear, (he said,) what poor stuff makes a preacher in the present day! a useful minister must have brains in his head, prudence in his conduct, and grace in his heart; which is more than too many of the made up talkers, who set up in these times for preachers, have." "Some folks," he would say, "appear as if they had been bathed in crab verjuice in their infancy, which penetrated through their skins, and has made them sour blooded ever since—but this will not do for a messenger of the gospel; as he bears a message, so he must manifest a spirit of love." A minister having observed to him, that notwithstanding the fault found with his dry sermons, there were hopes of their usefulness, for Samson had slain the Philistines with the jaw-bone of an ass—"True he did," replied Mr. Hill, but it was a moist jaw-bone." He used to like Dr. Ryland's advice to his young academicians—"Mind, no sermon is of any value, or likely to be useful, which has not the three R's in it—Ruin by the fall—Redemption by Christ—Regeneration by the Holy Spirit." Of himself he remarked, "My aim in every sermon, is a stout and lusty call to sinners, to quicken the saints, and to be made a universal blessing to all." It was a favorite saying with him—"The nearer we live to God, the better we are enabled to serve him. O how I hate my own noise, when I have nothing to make a noise about. Heavenly wisdom creates heavenly utterance." In a letter to Mr. Jones, he observes—"There is something in preaching the gospel, with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven, I long to get at. At times, I think I feel somewhat like it, and then I bawl almost as bad as the Welshman. If we deal with divine realities we ought to feel them as such, and then the people will in general feel with us, and acknowledge the power that does wonders on the heart."

SECRET PRAYER.

There are conditions of mind entering into and promoted by secret prayer, which must ever commend it most strongly to every devout person. It removes in a large measure from the heart the temptation to ostentation in religion. That the profession of christianity is a cause of trial to many, and, under some circumstances, to all minds, is beyond doubt; but it cannot be denied that the outward confession may so far cease to be a cross as to become a means of self-glorying. In such case it is a snare to the soul, a most pernicious one, superinducing self-righteousness and hypocrisy.

Every man possesses what may be termed a double consciousness—one for himself and another for the world: with the one he reads himself for himself; and with the other he reads himself for others. Some minds seldom study the former, but almost exclusively the latter. To such the danger of performing their religious duties for the inspection of men is very great, and nothing is more important to them than to be put under the necessity of so far excluding themselves from the observation of the world as to temporarily free them from this exposure by making them feel that they are alone with the Searcher of hearts. Insensibly will the thought of another's opinions steal upon the best of men in their most honest public devotions, and in some degree, however slight, be an enticement to dissembling. To say nothing of the desire to make one's self appear good—too easily excited in us all—the very uses of public worship to stir each other to increased piety in some sort lay one under bonds, either real or imaginary, to try to please. One would naturally wish to make an impression favorable to religion by exhibiting its excellence in one's own exercises. This is a good; yet we must see how this line of commendable virtue runs by a brink—the temptation to appear better than we really are. Now, the correction for this tendency is not abstinence from public worship, but frequent devotion under circumstances where it is impossible to be thus beset.

The soul shut away from outward incitements, is led to turn in upon itself, and so a deeper, juster insight of its own condition is insured. Thus withdrawn from the eyes of men, it reads itself for itself—not asking what will men think of this or that act, but "What do I think of it for myself?" "Does it do for me?" "Does it answer the ideal of truth and purity which I have formed for myself, and so command my own respect, which is of infinitely greater moment to me than the judgment of others?" The heart can see much of itself as reflected in the opinions of others; but the lesson will be straightway forgotten unless it carry these teachings into its own solitudes and ponder them. The sun paints his pictures in the dark, and the operator must hurry away his delicate tracery to the little dark room to fix it. The outside, surface man, comparing himself with men around him, estimating himself by the average of mankind, makes no advancement; while he who seeks retirement with God bringing with him the results of his observations, finds a higher standard of comparison for his character. A clearer light than the dim, confused opinions of men shines upon his soul, even that which streams forth from the perfection of the Almighty. He and God are alone, and in God there is no darkness at all. All is made manifest by this light, and as the soul can bear it, every motive and act stands out in full proportions.

There is, moreover, absolute need of the broader freedom which the soul can have only in closet prayer. Secret devotion may restrain from pride, from dissimulation, but it also affords the opportunity for, and the encouragement to, the utmost directness and thoroughness in one's approaches to God. Every thought can be expressed; sins which are hardly conceived may be confessed; troubles which no human breast could appreciate can be told in to an ear that never wearies of listening and a loving heart that never wearies of feeling; emotions of joy and sorrow can have their full gush of expression without fear of annoyance to one's highest friend. However much all hearts may need the aid which contact with other hearts imparts, there are times when every heart absolutely requires the unrestrained liberty of privacy. Two are infinitely too many; one and God are enough. Then will the soul open all its secrets, and from a deep sense of its bitterness and helplessness, pour out itself into an urgent waiting and pleading before him who seeth in secret and rewardeth openly. Happy for us if, when such seasons of want and anguish come, we have already learned the uses of secret prayer.—The Methodist.

FUNDAMENTAL.

It was remarked to me not long since in conversation, that the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked was not fundamental, and therefore should not be a cause of division among the professed children of God. There are many ways by which the tempter would strive to overcome our zeal for the truth, and have us think we can get along just as well by keeping silence; and this is one of them. The object of his endeavor is always the same, to keep the truth out of sight, that a lie may prevail. As though one must always keep at the bottom and make no advances in knowledge.

Why, fundamental things are useless unless built upon. Their sole use is to support a structure. Who thinks of moving into a house when the foundation only is laid? Who passes for a mathematician because he understands the fundamental rules of arithmetic? Now the doctrine of the destruction of the wicked is a part of God's theological building, and as necessary in its place, as any other doctrine, even though it be fundamental.

"But we all believe in punishment," said my friend, "and let it stop there."

But it will not stop there. God does not stop there in revelation, and men will not remain silent beyond that point. They will theorize what the punishment is to be, and how long, and will speak as they think. Take away the truth, and something must be put in its stead. And then the building does not match, and another thing must be changed, and then another, until you reach the foundation, when, to make the building at all proportionate, that too must be changed, and then I think you have reached something fundamental.

The fact is, there are but two things that are fundamental in all the theology of the world, whether it be true or false theology. True theology is built upon Jesus Christ as a foundation, while false theology is built upon immortal-soulism. If the starting point be from an immortal soul, then the result in every conclusion will be wrong. If the starting be with Christ, as the live-giver, as he says, "I give unto my sheep eternal life," then we have the true foundation, and every part of the structure will agree with it. But Jesus Christ is the "word" of God, and immortal-soulism is the word of Satan when he said, "Thou shalt not surely die."

I find that all true theology is so connected with Jesus Christ as to become strongly fundamental in all its parts. And the destruction of the wicked is the inevitable conclusion from this foundation, for he has declared it.

F. Burr.

Ottawa, Ill. —World's Crisis.

The "Mortal Resurection."

PITTSFIELD, N. H., July 6, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—The following is a copy of a letter written to one of the most prominent preachers of the Crisis order.

Pittsfield, Jan. 16, 1867.

Dear Brother:—We had the pleasure of listening to your very excellent and edifying discourse on the occasion on the burial of Dr. Saunders of Barnstead, N. H., the 14th inst. We say edifying; for we doubt if there was one in that crowded house, who listened attentively, and who could appreciate, who was not edified and benefitted by said discourse. We were much benefitted by having our mind refreshed and "stirred up" to truths before known but which were too latent in the mind; and still more than this, we received one new and very precious idea in regard to the expression, "Everlasting Father," as applied to the Son in Isaiah's prophecy, which before was somewhat intricate, but plain and glorious now.

But my dear brother, I have not yet named my chief object in writing you, and which may not be pleasing you to when mentioned. We followed you very closely while you read some portions of scripture, before naming your text; for we regard the words of inspiration as of much more consequence than any man's words; and so we always give a fixed attention to the reading; and when you read the 52d verse of the fifteenth of 1 Cor. you misread. Just let me write a part of this verse as you read it. "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised . . . . and we shall be changed." Now let me ask, Was it accidental, or intentional, that you passed over the long word "incorruptible"? The word is not in italics; was not supplied by the translators; and this text, fully written, is mine, while it can be yours only in its mutilated form, in which you read it; for, certainly you will not venture to say that all the dead will be raised incorruptible; for this would be universal salvation, or eternal misery to a part of the dead so raised. Would it not? And where, let me ask, in the scriptures do we find mention made of a resurrection to life of corruptible subjects? where?

Now, you must be fully aware that "incorruptibility" and "immortality" are very nearly of the same import in the scriptures, and that neither of them are ever applied to the wicked. So then, all those spoken of in this fifteenth chapter of 1 Cor., as subjects of resurrection must be the righteous. In verse 42 the subjects raised are said to be "raised in incorruption;" in verse 43 they are "raised in power," not with power, but in power, i. e., they are powerful because immortal. V 44, "raised a spiritual body." And in this 52d verse, the dead are "raised incorruptible;" not raised—mark you—in a corrupt state, to be made incorruptible afterward. V. 53, "For this mortal must put on immortality, andt his corruptible must put on incorruption." All the above texts tell us when it is "put on;" that it is in the very act of rising: the life which quickens the sleeping dust, of all that shall be raised from the dead, is immortal, incorruptible, eternal life; for all such as are "counted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, die no more; but are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." See Luke xx. 35–38. Question: Are all men quickened into such life? are all thus made children of God?

Now if this word incorruptible in verse 52, is in the way of any theory you may wish to establish, and so you would like to remove it, then so are all these other words of like import found in this chapter and elsewhere; and it will amount to just nothing to try to remove this one word; we must dispose of the whole. What a work is this! who will dare undertake such a work? We do not intend to discuss this question here, but merely wished to ask these few questions, that you may think of them at your leisure; and if you shall see fit to write me in reply, and answer these questions asked in kindness, you can then name such texts as seem to you to stand in the way of a denial of the resurrection to life of a part of our race, and we shall be very happy to answer any pertinent questions touching this matter, and to give expositions—as far as we are able—of any texts you may see fit to name.

Very respectfully,

H. YOUNG.

To Sermon Readers.

A good chance for those ministers who read sermons instead of preaching. Look at it:

The London Guardian, which is anxious to establish a sort of exchange for the clergy, begins the business by printing four advertisements in the following terms: "Manuscript Sermons. Several thousands on sale. Specimens on receipt of twelve stamps. Good, legible manuscripts and lithographs." "A brilliant sermon for Christmas day, forwarded on receipt of 3s. 6d. Address, etc. Incumbents supplied weekly." "A clergyman would be glad to supply two or three incumbents with copies of his last year's sermons, one weekly." "Original sermons, solely for clerical use. In clear MS. lithography. Edited by a beneficed clergyman." As America imitates Europe in everything it will no doubt copy after this.

OUR ISRAELITISH ORIGIN.—A work on Prophecy It was written by Prof. WILSON, England, some years since We republished it, believing it could not fail to interest all thinking men, whatever might be thought of the accuracy of its positions. For our self, we indorse the general theory that the Anglo Saxons are the literal descendants of Israel, in the line of Joseph and Ephraim. Price, 50 cents, in paper covers only. Postage 6 cents.

The Herald of Life.

NEW YORK, JULY 17, 1867.

NO IMMORTALITY NOR FUTURE LIFE, EXCEPT IN JESUS CHRIST ALONE, AND BY A RESURRECTION AT THE LAST DAY IF DEAD, OR A CHANGE IF ALIVE.

Responsibilities.

The Editor holds himself responsible for none of the sentiments of Correspondents. The Editor's articles do not all appear under what is called the "Editorial Head." Any articles without a signature, or which are not credited to another source, the Editor is responsible for, without saying whether he wrote them or not: he leaves the reader to judge of their authorship. Let these things be kept in mind in reading the Herald of Life, and the praise or blame will est where it ought.

"Not Satisfied."

Some people suppose because they are "not satisfied" with the exposition of a text, or with the defence of a doctrine, that therefore it is not true; and they return with the same objections and the same texts and demand that we give them some other argument or explanation. The man that undertakes to "satisfy all objectors," will find he has engaged in a hopeless task. Inveterate prejudices, traditionary ideas, and the pride of one's own opinion, all or either of them, form a battlement or shield that it is next to impossible to overcome; and however strong we may attack their position, they have determined "never to surrender." Like the ancient Jews they want additional evidence, till they cry out, "Come down from the cross and we will believe." It is impossible to reach such minds by any amount of evidence: they are not to be convinced; and it is useless to spend time arguing with them; though they may think, because you determine not to spend your time in such a course, you cannot "come down from the cross" on which they fancy they have fixed you. The direction of our Lord on one occasion, is the only course to be taken with such persons after we have candidly presented our views, viz., "Let them alone." Keep to our work, if satisfied ourselves, that God has called us to it, and not waste time in repeating to the same persons arguments which you know they are "not satisfied" with. We are, happily, not obliged to satisfy everybody; and the task is hopeless. Proclaim what you regard to be the truth of God and leave the matter with Him. "What if some do not believe?" It has always been so, and always will be, to the end of this age.

The above has been our course with some cavilers with our views on the life theme. It is manifest to us that they have had sufficient evidence if they were in a state of mind to be benefitted by evidence; and we migut as well spend time to convince some rejectors of the Bible, itself, that the Book is given us of God to guide us in the way of life: they will not believe. "Let them alone," then, and leave them to their own master.

With sincere inquirers after truth—and it is generally easy to discern who are such by the spirit they manifest—we are to have all patience, and give them, if need be, "line upon line;" but at a certain point, it is best sometimes to leave them to digest what has already been said, rather than to multiply words with them.

Is the Soul a Spiritual Entity?

Let us, then, see if we can ascertain the true meaning of the term soul; for without this, how can we know what it is? Its primary sense we first look for. The term occurs for the first time in the Bible, Gen. ii. 7. "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life; and man became a living soul." Thus it is seen, it is the man that is the soul, and not a part of him, or an internal entity. The man formed of the dust is a soul, but without life till made to breathe by the infusion of breath, which caused the blood to circulate, producing life, and making man a living soul.

This phrase, "living soul," is not peculiar to man, though this does not appear so distinct in our translation. The original is nephesh ha'yah, and is used four times in the first chapter of Genesis in reference to the cattle, fowls, fish and creeping things that live by breathing; they are all called nephesh ha'yah—"living souls." This fact shows the term soul relates to the personality of a creature which has lived, may live, or does live by the spirit of life; and not to a distinct entity, being, or existence, supposed to dwell in a living creature, it is the living creature itself, that is, the living soul—its proper personality.

When Abraham departed out of Haran, it is said he "took Sarai his wife, and Lot, and all their substance, and the souls they had gotten in Haran," etc. Surely, here is no idea of such souls as men talk about, i. e., of "immaterial entities," but persons are spoken of. When the evangelist, Luke, says, "We were in all in the ship two hundred three-score and sixteen souls," Acts, xxvii. 37, he is not talking of interal entities, but of persons.

It is said, "The soul must be distinct from the body, else what propriety in saying, 'My soul?'"

If such expressions prove the soul distinct and separate in its existence, it does so in relation to God, for God saith, "My soul loathed them, and their soul also abhorred me." Zech. xi. 8. Is God a double or two-fold entity as well as man? or, are such forms of expression used merely to express emphatically the personality of the speaker, or the person spoken of? Look at Jer. li. 14, "The Lord of hosts hath sworn by himself:" the original is by his nephesh—his soul. It is thus evident that his soul is himself. So a man's soul, strictly, is himself—his person.

To suppose that a distinct invisible entity is intended by the term nephesh—the term usually translated soul in the Old Testament—is so palpably an error that we cannot see how any well-informed person can persist in claiming it; for nephesh has forty different English representatives in the O. T. This fact the "American Bible Union" have shown. The term is rendered he, her, himself, body, mind, creature, man, dead, person, they, heart, appetite, greedy, lust, etc., etc. Can any one believe, if man possessed such an entity as is usually called soul, a term would have been chosen by the Spirit of God to identify it, that is susceptible of so many and so various translations or significations?

Take one more illustration, Psa. xlii. 5. "Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? hope thou in God, for I shall yet praise him."

This looks, at first sight, like favoring the common notion of an internal entity called the soul; but let us examine. What is it addresses this soul? Do you say it is the body? But you forget it is affirmed, "the body has no intelligence or knowledge of itself," and could not, therefore, be an independent speaker. But suppose the body is the speaker—is not the language strange in that case? What do we see? A poor, frail body talking to an immortal soul, and expostulating with it for being cast down, and exhorting it to "hope in God, for I"—the body—"shall yet praise him." The body is more hopeful than the soul, and the soul is exhorted to hope in consideration of the prospect that the body will yet praise God!

Is it not both more natural and scriptural to understand this language as the strong and emphatic expression of personal feeling? as if he had said, why am I cast down in mind? I will hope in God, for I shall yet praise him." He speaks of himself, and strives to encourage himself in this state of depression. His soul is himself—his personality.

In further confirmation of this fact, we will briefly remark on the text Math. xvi. 26—"What is a man profited if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul," etc. What is the soul here? We will give the true translation of the term rendered soul—psucheen—which is life, as in the previous verse; thus: 'For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own life?'—psucheen—"or what shall a man give in exchange for his life?"—psucheen. The text is an enforcement of the previous discourse, particularly of the preceding verse. Life, and not a fancied entity called "the soul," is the subject of discourse. And honesty requries that psucheen should be translated alike in both verses. Either make it soul in both, or life in both. Try the former, and see if it will make sense; thus: "Whosoever will save his soul shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his soul for my sake shall find it!" Such a translation shocks common sense, and gives the lie to christianity. Why is the translation of psucheen into the term soul to be tolerated in this more than in the preceding verse? Surely no reason can be assigned to satisfy an impartial mind. Even Dr. ADAM CLARKE admits this, and says, "Sure I am, it"—psucheen—"means life in both verses."

The term psuchee is the only term in the Greek New Testament translated soul. It occurs some fifty times, not including parallels. It is rendered life by the translators nineteen times, and soul fifteen. Scarcely an instance occurs where it is rendered soul, that it would not have been more expressive had it been translated life, or the personal pronoun "I"—"myself," etc. For example, Christ saith, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Was this such a soul as theologians contend for? Could such a soul die, either a literal, moral, or eternal death? If Christ's soul was to die, it must have been a literal death: in other words, it was Christ personally, who was to die, and who did die, as the scriptures affirm. Then his words, strictly rendered, would read, "I am exceeding sorrowful, even unto death:" Christ himself, and not some fancied internal entity called soul.

The theory of a soul entity in man, or an immortal something that "can never die"—as it is affirmed—is what has corrupted this solemn and all-important inquiry, and cast darkness and mysticism over the subject, which otherwise would be plain and within the comprehension of every mind: while the common notion has made it a fruitful theme of speculation, superstition and fanaticism.

Man has, by sin, forfeited life—all claims to a living existence. In this state he is visited by God's own Son, sent into the world by the Father's love. That Son testifies of his Father's good will to dying men, and proclaims, in his name, a free and full pardon of past sins, if men will repent and receive life through the second Adam, who is the LIFE-GIVER. To have this life, not only must past sins be repented of and forgiven, but we must develop a character under the discipline established by Christ, in harmony with his example, and in conformity with the will of God. This development will cost us the denial of self—perhaps many sufferings, and possibly our life, by the violence of our opposers. He that prefers to preserve or protract this present life rather than endure the trials incident to the necessary development that shall fit him for an eternal residence with God and his Christ, shall lose life. But what folly is such a course. How short and fleeting is this life, at best: how soon it will pass away. Why then be guilty of the folly of losing the life Jesus was authorized to promise and bestow, rather than endure the trials of this life, and death, if need be, in order to a preparation for life eternal? For, what is a man profited if he could gain the whole world—all its honors, wealth, and pleasures, and protract such enjoyments to the end of a long life, if that life at last become eternally extinct? Or what shall a man give in exchange for that life which he "shall find" after having lost his life here for the name of Jesus, or in the cause of God, and in seeking conformity to his will. The life thus to be found is an eternal one; where sorrow, suffering, pain, or death, are never again to be felt or feared. Oh, to lose such a life, even for the highest and best enjoyments of this world, supposing those enjoyments the most perfect, and protracted to the longest period of human life attainable. What would it profit that man who must sustain this loss? Surely it was not too much to inquire, what comparison there could be between this whole world gained and such a life lost.

Would you, dying fellow mortal, not meet with such a loss, haste to give your heart to God, through Christ, the "one Mediator." No other being, however wise and good, must come between you and Christ in your approach to God. Beware of leaning on any other arm, or seeking any other mediator. God has given no other, and he will accept no other. Be not deceived. Neither pope, bishop, priest, saint, nor angel can avail here. Your consecration must be your own individual act through Jesus Christ alone. All other trust will fail you, and but mock your hope. To God, through Christ, you must come, or you lose life eternally, and will "be as though you had not been." Obd. xvi. "Why will you die?"

John v. 28, 29 once more.

This text is clung to with a tenacity, by the advocates of a revival into life of the wicked dead, that seems to us to belong only to a desperate cause. Take it out of their construction, and they are left powerless. So they seem to regard it. We think enough has been said to show their view of it contradicts the general tenor of the Scriptures and the system of redemption by Jesus Christ; which is, "Whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." All men were perishing in death; and there would have been no resurrection, of any one but for Christ as "the resurrection and the life." Who has the benefit of that power, we are clearly informed—"He that believeth in him." Without faith in Christ, where he is preached, the sinner "shall be damned"—condemned not to "see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him."

Years ago we stated the fact that mneemeiois is the word translated graves, John v. 28, and not hades; and that Jesus would hardly have used that word if he meant hades. Our opinion on that point is unaltered. To build the doctrine of the re-living of all the literal dead upon John v. 28, 29, is, in our opinion, to build on a slender foundation. The term mneemeiois, is used for the places from whence the demoniacs issued. Thus, Math. viii. 28, it is said, "Then met Jesus two possessed with devils, coming out of the tombs"—mneemeion. They had not been in hades, neither had they been dead. On this word DR. BLOOMFIELD says—"Tombs" . . . "often served as places of shelter to the houseless wanderer;" and Wm. Ramsey, D. D., in his "Spiritualism a Satanic Delusion," p. 34, says:

"The tombs (mnemaia) are very abundant in some parts of the Eastern world unto this day. They are houses built over the graves of distinguished or wealthy persons by the governments of which they were honored members, or their relatives. They are of different sizes and shapes. Some are built square, others round, and from ten to thirty feet high. The most of those that are yet to be found in India were built by the Mohammedans. They are now used as dwellings or as stopping-places for travellers, being fitted up for these purposes. But formerly, no one dwelt in them—the friends of the deceased only visited them for prayer. I have often lodged in these tombs while on missionary tours. We found them comfortable lodgings; and to those who are fond of retirement, they afford an agreeable resting place."

Here also we may as well insert the remarks of C. C. French, on John v. 28, 29. He says:

"The original word translated 'graves' here, is not hades, from which the dead are to be raised in the literal resurrection, but it is 'tois mneemeiois,' the graves dug into the earth, Josephus informs us, (War, Bk. vi, chap. 9. sect 4. and in other places, that many of the Jews had made graves for themselves in the city of Jerusalem, and were brought forth to be slain, and led captive at the destruction. (See Heb. xi. 38; Isa. ii. 19; Ezek. xxxiii. 27.) About three millions of the Jews were assembled in Jerusalem, at the passover, when the Roman army surrounded the city, (Joseph. 2, 14, 3, note, and 6, 9, 3, and note:) the necessity of making graves to retire into is apparent. The resurrection (anastasin) was a standing upon the feet again. When the literal resurrection is referred to, the expression is not anastasin simply, but hee anastasin. (That Greek article 'hee' is of some importance in a discussion relative to the 'resurrection of the wicked dead.') The word 'anastasin,' in the text rendered resurrection, simply signifies the act of rising from a sitting or reclining posture; from a seat on the ground; a rising up; a starting up, etc. See Donnegan's Lexicon. It is not a 'resurrection from the dead.'"

Mr. Fisk, in his Greek grammar, says—"When no article is expressed in Greek, the English indefinite article a is signified." Then, should we not read of a "day of judgment" oftener than we do? Should we not read of a resurrection in John v. 29?

After all that has been said on this text, it is not absolutely certain that it relates to the living again from literal death at all; and in the absence of any other text affirming that all dead men, good and bad, are made alive, we think the affirmative of the question, so long under discussion, have very little ground to stand on, though they fought bravely, and have seemed as determined to hold on as the advocates of endless misery are to their few texts; and we now say, in our judgment, one has just as much real proof of their positions as the other. Life from the dead—whether spiritual or literal—is only through and by a union with Christ the LIFE GIVER. All others die in their sins, and under the curse of the law; which law holds them eternally back from life, so that they "shall not see life." If the wicked dead are in hades, at the final disposal of all men, that state shall not prevent their character—and of course does not prevent them—from a judicial investigation and decision, though dead; and as "dead" they "stand before God." So saith the text, Rev. xx. 12, 13, but not as actually alive; for, clearly, it is only those whose names were written in the book of life that are made alive; "whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." Hades, or the covered state, that state of the dead preceding the final result to the race, is destroyed as having no farther use, and gehenna alone remains to all whose names were not written for life. "Death and hades delivered up the dead," be it remembered, to be "judged;" and not one word is said of any being made alive except those whose names were "found written in the book of life."

The "Serious Objections" Again.

AMELIA C. H., Va., July 1, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—In relation to your note appended to my communication printed in your issue of June 5, I confess I am surprised at the summary manner in which you pass over the serious objections I raise to your theory. Objections that lay at the very foundation thereof; and if they cannot be removed, then your theory is worthless.

If you cannot prove that the scriptures affirm that the resurrection is the media through which the Christ imparts life to the penitent believer, then your theory is baseless. This I claim you are bound to prove or cease to affirm it. And as it is your main position, I claim you are bound to prove or abandon it.

In all your writings and discussions you have simply assumed this as unquestionable, as the immortal soulist assumes the immortality of the soul. And you treat my objections as they treat your affirmation that theirs is an assumption. I again ask that you prove your assumption. And for the truth's sake, I beg you to try to do so. Yours in the love of the truth.

G. B. STACY.

Response to the Foregoing.

It sometimes happens that men are hypercritical in their objections. It is in this light we regarded Br. Stacy's "serious objections." Does he doubt but what, "the resurrection is the media through which the Christ" had imparted to him life from the dead? Was "the Christ" immortal in his nature till his resurrection from the dead? Are "penitent believers" immortal, or deathless, till this mortal puts on immortality? and is that not done at the last trump, and by the resurrection from the dead, or a change, equivalent? and are not those who are accounted worthy to obtain that world, (kai) even the resurrection from the dead, the children of God, being the children of the resurrection? and is not that the reason why they cannot die any more? Must we be asked to prove that two and two make four? or that the sun shines at mid-day, because some man is so hypercritical as to tell us we are "bound to prove or abandon" so plain a matter?

The "Priests and the Sadducees" were "grieved that they [the apostles] taught the people, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead." They were not so hypercritical as to doubt the fact that the apostles taught the resurrection from the dead through Jesus, as the way or "media" of life future and eternal. True, it was a grief to them, as it has been to some in these last days, that such a doctrine should be taught.

To accuse us, "in all" our "writings and discussions," as having "simply assumed this as unquestionable," is an "assumption" which Br. Stacy is "bound to prove or abandon." We deny this charge. Let him prove it, if he can. On that question he has the affirmative, and we say, His affirmation "is baseless." Br. Stacy was shut up in Virginia during the whole term of the late war, and had no intercourse with us during that period; that may be some apology for the "blindness in part" that has "happened" to him on the life question. We beg of him, therefore, before he repeats his "assumption" to be sure that he reads "all" our "writings and discussions." If he does that, we have so much charity as to believe he will not repeat his charge. Till he has done it we are content to wait.

Tent Meetings at Long Branch.

Br. E. Wolcott, of Oceanport, N. J., recently purchased a tent—about 70 by 40 feet in size, and made to his own order—for the purpose of holding meetings in various localities during the Summer and early Autumn. It was intended that Eld. S. W. Bishop should accompany Br. W. and the tent, and have opportunities to preach Life only in Christ, the coming kingdom, and related truths, to multitudes who would be inaccessible in any other way. But ill health interposed to prevent that dear brother from affording the intended co-operation; he got as far as this city (we write this at the Editor's desk in New York) on his way to Oceanport, and was then obliged to turn back on account of physical prostration. We know not what the state of his health is at the present time. Will he not inform the brotherhood on this point by a note through the paper? In one of the meetings of which we are about to speak considerable was said by Br. Matthias and other brethren about praying to the Lord for the continuance of the lives of those servants of the Master, whose labors seem to be so much needed in the gospel field. Primarily, this was suggested in reference to our venerable and beloved brother Storrs. May Br. Bishop be remembered in the prayers of the flock of God.

Br. Bishop's inability to come on did not prevent the tent from being brought into use. It was erected several weeks ago in Oceanport, and meetings were held in it one Sunday. The attendance was large, and Eld. B. Matthias, though ignorant of the tent enterprise, arrived in Oceanport at the opportune moment, and aided the brethren efficiently by his preaching labors.

Through letters from Brn. Bishop, Wolcott, and Welch the writer was invited to assist in the proposed tent meetings, but he was unable to do so until last week.

Long Branch, as many of our readers doubt less know, is a very popular sea-shore watering-place, about thirty miles south of this city. Its nine hotels will accommodate over four thousand guests—one of the leading houses can alone care for twelve hundred. In this place of fashionable resort—it is only a short distance from Oceanport—it was desirable to obtain a lodgment for the Life views, and especially as the resident Methodist minister had preached a series of denunciatory sermons against those views. But it was found impossible to obtain a hall or any other place in which to hold meetings, and the tent we have named seemed to be the only resort. Last week the tent was put up in Long Branch, the meeting was advertised in the local daily paper, and handbills were put in circulation. The meetings commenced on Thursday evening—the congregation was as large as could be expected—preaching by the writer. On Friday evening a pelting rain storm made the audience somewhat smaller than it would otherwise have been, and rendered it difficult for speaking in the tent to be heard. Still, we had a good, comfortable meeting. On Saturday afternoon we were favored with a discourse, on the harmony and symmetry of truth, by Br. Matthias; who was followed with remarks, first by Br. Sutton and then by the writer. On Saturday evening the audience was respectable for numbers, and the preaching was done by Eld. W. Roworth and Br. W. H. Hanford, both of New York.

Before mentioning the work of Sunday, we will state that our meeting drew together various friends from abroad. Manayunk, Pa., was represented by Br. Charles H. Sutton and his wife; Armonk, N. Y., by Br. Matthias and his two daughters; New York city by Brn. Storrs, Roworth, Hanford, Thornton, Cannon, and Sisters Storrs, Cannon, and Green, and one other lady whose name we do not remember.

Sunday was a memorable day for our meeting. At 9 1-2 o'clock a conference meeting was begun which continued until the hour for preaching. The forenoon discourse was by Br. Matthias, who was followed for about thirty-five minutes by the writer. The afternoon audience was large, and the closest attention was given for about an hour and a half to Br. Storrs, who preached a most powerful and deeply interesting discourse on the loss of the soul. The writer thankfully declares that he never was more intensely delighted or instructed by the utterances of Br. S. than on this occasion. O, that every christian in the land might have heard this masterpiece of scriptural reasoning. Certain it is, the sermon produced a deep impression on many minds. Our dear brother employed in his work the physical energy of a man in the prime of life, and was correspondingly exhausted by the effort. He was not able to be with us at our evening meeting, feeling that he needed the quiet and rest of an early pillow.

The afternoon sermon was preceded with remarks by Br. Hanford, on the Life theme. The evening services were introduced by a short but excellent conference meeting. The congregation was considerably larger than in the afternoon. The best of attention was given to the preaching. The discourse was by the writer, who was briefly followed by Brn. Matthias and Roworth.

The order throughout the day was perfect; and we must believe that the blessing of God was upon the effort to spread His precious truth. The opinion was expressed that there were not less than one hundred of the Methodist congregation in the tent on Sunday evening. The whole occasion was much enjoyed by our brethren and sisters.

R. W.

Further Labor at Long Branch.

Our tent meetings, ending on Sunday evening, were held on hired ground, and the locality—considering the convenience of the community and especially of the temporary residents at the hotels—was not what could have been desired. On Sunday a gentleman offered Br. Wolcott the free use of a very eligible ground near the sea shore, and there it is intended to renew operations on Thursday evening of the present week, the meetings to continue over Sunday. The writer proposes to serve in them, as he may be able, to the close, and on Sunday it is hoped that Br. Storrs will be able to preach once. A considerably increased attendance is looked for. May the Lord guide all to his glory.

R. W.

P. S. Persons from abroad, if they come to this meeting, must come prepared to find themselves food and lodgings, as this is the first meeting ever held in the place by LIFE believers; and as yet we have few friends short of four or five miles distant. Hence, if any come from a distance they will be obliged to provide for themselves.—EDITOR.

The Life and Advent Union.

In one month hence will be the time appointed for our Annual Meeting. Have the friends of the Life and Advent Union duly considered the importance of that meeting? We have no reserved fund to fall back upon to sustain the cause through another year; we have no organized churches to draw upon for the means required to prosecute the work already in hand; neither have we large numbers on whom to call for help. Still, to us our cause is gloriously true. Our faith has been steadfastly manifested by our efforts to uphold it: we have had trials, discouragements, and disappointments; we have borne up against slanders and reproaches. The popular churches hardly deign to show the contempt they feel for us, so weak and despised are we in their sight. Yet God is good, and our four years of united action have not gone unblessed of him. The scattered elements have been brought in unison and sympathy; many dear ones have been made to rejoice since then in the ennobling theme of Christ the LIFE GIVER, and many more are interested, seeing the light shining through the bars of early teaching and sectarian bias, while calls are multiplying to have the bread of life broken to perishing men.

As members of Christ's body, we have consecrated ourselves and all we have to him; we are praying for wisdom and grace to do his will, and in obedience to his commands we have taken upon ourselves to let our light so shine that we may glorify our Father in heaven. Soon, very soon, too, we expect to be with him, sharing the joys of his kingdom, in association with the redeemed hosts. What, then, under our peculiar responsibilities, ought we to do and be consistent with our professions? Every one who reads this should carry the subject into his closet and take counsel of his heavenly Father. Whatever that duty is, it should be done promptly, and with cheering words when we meet to act for the common cause at our Annual Meeting. Be there in person if possible; it is by the power of numbers that energy and encouragement are diffused through the body at large.

Where there is a large number in one place that are interested, let them meet together specially for this object and secure the attendance of several delegates by joint support; if only half a dozen can be brought together, or even only two or three, be sure to have at least one representive, bearing tokens of fraternal love and hearty support.

The duty of sustaining the HERALD OF LIFE, dear reader, is yours; so is it yours to have the truth carried into new and distant fields, and not that of any class, body, or individual more interested or responsible than you are.

We labor under no apprehension that the light of truth will go down. God will uphold it in his own way, and that way is by means of his children. If we who have been made to rejoice with joy unspeakable in possessing the knowledge of the truth, hide it under a bushel, God will raise up others to honor him better, and on them in turn he will shower no lack of blessings. Let us be wise, and each one seek to be a faithful soldier in the warfare we have engaged under Immanuel's banner, and in due season we shall hear our blessed Captain say, "Well done, good and faithful servant."

W. M.

Fisher's Catechism.

BR. STORRS:—I have spent some little time, of late, in looking into "the Westminster Assembly's shorter catechism, explained by way of question and answer," by James Fisher, of Glasgow; a book published by the Presbyterian Board of Publication at Philadelphia, and commonly known as "Fisher's Catechism." The publishers say of it, in the "preface to the first edition," that among the churches "it has justly been admired as a master-piece of its kind." It is probably safe to say that it is very generally accepted as a standard of doctrine in the Presbyterian church. And now I wish to call attention to the questions and answers following, and to ask any reader of the HERALD OF LIFE, who may have Presbyterian proclivities, to inform us which horn of the dilemma he will accept? For, to my mind, either the sentiments and doctrines of the answer to the second question must be disavowed, or all the answers to the questions following it must be repudiated in toto. Before giving them I would state that they do not follow each other consecutively in the books, but have been taken from their appropriate chapters and grouped together here in order that their inconsistency might be clearly seen. We look now at the questions.

Q.—What was the penalty in the case of disobedience?

A.—It was the pain of death, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

Q.—What kind of death was this which was threatened upon disobedience?

A.—It was death temporal, spiritual, and eternal.

Q.—What was it that he [Christ] had to suffer?

A.—The very same punishment the elect would have undergone, for the breach of the covenant of works; that is death, in its fullest latitude and extent, Gen. ii. 17, compared with 2 Cor. v. 14.

Q.—What is that death, in the fullest latitude and extent, which Christ had to endure, in satisfaction for sin?

A.—It was both the curse, or sentence, of the broken law, binding him over as surety, to suffer all that avenging wrath which sin deserved; and likewise the actual execution of this sentence upon him to the uttermost, for the full satisfaction of justice, Gal. iii. 10; Ezek. xviii. 4.

Q.—Has Christ fulfilled this part of the condition?

A.—Yes; he was "made a curse for us," Gal. iii. 13; "and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor," Eph. v. 2.

Q.—What was it for him to undergo the wrath of God?

A.—It was to suffer the utmost effects of God's holy and righteous displeasure against sin.

Now, we believe that it is not only good Presbyterianism, but good Bible, to declare our entire acquiescence in every answer except the second. That the "penalty in the case of disobedience" "was the pain of death"—that Christ suffered that death "in its fullest latitude and extent"—that he suffered "the actual execution of this sentence upon him to the uttermost," that "he was made a curse for us," that he suffered "the utmost effects of God's holy and righteous displeasure against sin," all this we think is plainly taught in the word of God.

But if that death "threatened upon disobedience" was "death temporal, SPIRITUAL and ETERNAL," pray tell us did Christ suffer that death "in its fullest latitude and extent"? Spiritual death is moral obliquity, defilement; an alienation of the heart from God. Or, as Mr. Fisher himself defines it, "the loss of original righteousness, and the favor of God." Did Christ suffer this death? Eternal death Mr. Fisher defines to be "The enduring of the wrath of God, in soul and body, in a state of separation from him for ever." This, certainly, Christ did not suffer. And we must insist, that if the death threatened was "death temporal, spiritual and eternal," by just so far as Christ failed to suffer spiritual and eternal death, by just that measure he failed to suffer "death in its fullest latitude and extent."

I have long seen this dilemma of the current theology. Either Christ did not suffer the penalty of the law, or that penalty is physical death, and this only. Words in the Bible, if used to express ideas, teach that Christ suffered the penalty of the law. If they are used there as the French diplomatist said "to conceal our ideas," then we are in darkness denser than that which shrouded Egypt in the olden time. Thank God for the word—the word that expresses the idea—the truth—and let us not fail to devoutly thank God for giving to us the key-note to the glorious harmony of the song of patriarchs, prophets and apostles, "Life only in Christ."

JAY.

Albany, N. Y., July 13, 1867.

The Tour to Minnesota.

In reply to my recent published note to Br. A. G. Hudson, of Lake City, that brother has written to me saying that I shall suit myself as to the time of my proposed visit. I now state that it is my purpose to start with as little delay as possible after the approaching Wilbraham Camp meeting and Annual Meeting of the Life and Advent Union. Particulars in due season. Br. Parker Sawyer's kind invitation (privately communicated) for me to give him a call, it is my purpose to comply with. The suggestion of Br. Norris, in the last paper, I will be glad to attend to; and I shall also hope that Br. Walter's proposal for lectures in Chicago may be carried into effect. Friends wishing to write to me will send their letters to Salem, Mass.

R. W.

Letters and Extracts.

From Eld. J. Lewis.

OTTO, ILLS., July 9, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—It is truly comforting and cheering to an old pilgrim, like ourself, to see the work of God prosper in our hands. It is good to hear from so many different sources testimonies to the truth of the Bible like the following: "I have been listening to preaching," says one, "for fifty years, and I never heard the Bible explained before so as to make it look like a consistent book, and God as a good Being; and I want you to come to our place and preach." Another old Br., testifies to the power of truth by saying, that, ever since he heard us, meaning Br. Campbell and myself, preach, he has felt like a new born child. Another, a good sister, said that she used to hear so much hell-fire, and everlasting torture preached that it almost drove her to despair. She would read her Bible, but could find no consolation in its sacred pages: all was dark and mysterious: God was represented as such an awful God, by the preachers of the day, that as a last resort she took to reading novels in order to kill time; but as soon as she heard the glorious truth of the Bible, setting forth God in all his loveliness, goodness, and truth, she resumed the reading of the Bible, and it appeared like a new book, and she had no use for novels any more.

I wish to make some inquiry about Br. Hanford's mission out here. The eyes of all are looking and hoping that Br. H. would come; and truly we feel deeply anxious to have more help, let who will come. Now is the time; and if Br. H. is coming we want to know it, so as to arrange our appointments. We preach next Sunday near Otto; and the next, third, Sunday at the crossroads near Milton, and the fourth Friday, Saturday and Sunday, in this month, July, we will preach in the Totten prairie, instead of the first in August. We make this alteration so as not to clash or interfere with other appointments. We expect to have a glorious time; the people are all awake to the cause; and we hope to hear something definitely from Br. Hanford; and we invite any of the preaching brethren, and all others, to come to the feast of fat things. Let those from a distance fetch their provisions with them; and we solicit your prayers in our behalf.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR:—"Mary Bowman's paper" has been sent regularly from our office from the commencement of the volume to the present time. Br. Hanford has been waiting to hear from you, and to know where the Tent is, and what calculations you have made for its use. He wishes, and we wish to know that the Tent is brought into field, and not be dependent for places to preach in.

From M. P. Martin.

SANTA CLARA, CAL., June 15, 1867.

BR. STORRS:—I thought you and the readers of the HERALD might like to hear from us and how the Life views are received here. We arrived at San Francisco the 23d of April; twenty-three days from New York, safely; and as well as I could expect; for which we give the Lord praise, my health being very poor when I left. Although we had very fine weather all the passage, yet it is a very tedious voyage. My health was such that I was not able to do much while on board the steamer; though I tried to do what I could. The tracts given me in Boston, also a large number of the HERALD OF LIFE that I took with me, I distributed to the passengers. They read them with a good deal of interest, which made considerable inquiry in regard to our views. The idea that the wicked would not have life again was entirely new; but it was the sharp sword, and some believed while others raved. I preached one Sunday to the steerage passengers from John iii. 16. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life." There were about eight hundred in the steerage; about two hundred and sixty-five of that number were soldiers. Most of these passengers except the soldiers were Roman Catholics; they undertook to stop the preaching of the word by mob and confusion; but the soldiers stood nobly for the truth, forming a line between us and the mob. My old Bible was knocked out of my hand, but it did not hurt it or myself, although I was in a position to realise the promise of the Lord, "though we are cast down we shall not utterly fall." We had quite a victory, and I think real good was done. I stopped three weeks in San Francisco, and preached twice to a very small audience. There are very few Adventists in San Francisco; or those acquainted with the Life views. What a field of labor there; how I wish the HERALD could be read in that city. The climate was so bad I could not stay there. I think it is the most trying climate I ever experienced for any one that is not strong and healthy. In this valley (Santa Clara) the climate is very mild and my health is improved much. There are some here that are becoming interested in the Life views. There is an order here that call themselves Christian Disciples. They have offered me the use of their house a part of the day on Sundays. They seem to be interested to hear the truth. I preached future life could only be obtained through Christ; nothing that we could do to merit it. Our duty in this life was to keep the commandments and rely on Christ, the great LIFE-GIVER for eternal life; believing that this life is mortal, and being willing to give it up that we may receive a spiritual life from the dead; and not that we shall have this mortal body again, but as the apostle says, "It is sown a natural body, it shall be raised a spiritual body." 1 Cor. xv. 44.

As near as I can judge the morals of society in California are as good as at the East, and men generally have as high a respect for the rights of one another as in any place with which I have been acquainted; yet Sunday is almost disregarded as a commandment; I have been led to think perhaps it is because christians do not really keep the Sabbath day, and their light is become darkness on this commandment; thus men are not led to glorify God.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Please say to "Br. Hopkins" the books and other works we sent him we make a donation, and he may consider the "debt" cancelled. Your paper goes to San Francisco, and you say nothing of its being changed, and hence it will continue to go there.

THOMAS MCCLARY, Wilmington, Del., writes:—I send you the money for a new subscriber for the HERALD OF LIFE. I want the truths of the Bible circulated as heralded in your paper; and I praise the Lord for the light we have concerning the LIFE GIVER, (Jesus,) the coming King, and the destruction of the wicked. My prayer for you is, that you may constantly be guided by our heavenly Father in conducting the HERALD OF LIFE.

Summary of News.

BY W. M.

DOMESTIC.

Congress is still in session. Its supplementary Reconstruction Bill has been passed and now awaits the President's signature. None of the Department Commanders can be removed without the consent of the Senate.

The Surratt trial is slowly progressing. The evidence for the prosecution is all in, and appears to be damaging to the prisoner. Provision has been made by Congress to secure his testimony or that of others implicated in the assassination conspiracy, to reveal the names of all the parties connected with the plot.

The Richmond papers assert that a powerful organization is being formed at the South having for its object the subjugation of Mexico, and that European governments are co-operating in the movement.

FOREIGN.

A world's convocation of all the evangelical bodies is to be held in Holland next year. This Protestant gathering will be as important if not as showy as the recent Catholic assemblage. But the latter body has another game to play. The London Star says:

It is more than probable, it is almost certain, that one of the strangest scenes of an age fertile in strange things is about to transact itself in Rome. We are informed on good authority that the Papacy in its despair, has resolved to use its last resource; to wield dred years Popes have dreaded to unsheath, lest it should be turned against themselves; to summon once more the body which even the ultramontanes hold to be greater than the Popes, the mystic depository of inspiration, the Sovereign Parliament of the Universal Church.

Despatches from Bokhara have been received, which report that the Russian troops had stormed the entrenched camp of the Khan of Bokhara, and obtained a great victory.

The Imperial Government of Austria has dispatched Admiral Tegetoff, of the navy, to Mexico for the body of the late Archduke Maximilian.

Advices have been received from Rome to the effect that the Garibaldians are menacing the city of Viterbo.

His Mohammedan Majesty, the Turkish Sultan, seems to be well pleased with his visit in the countries of the infidels. After visiting Paris and London, he has accepted an invitation from the Emperor of Austria to spend a week in Vienna.

The course of the Austrian government toward Hungary has reconciled a number of the leading men of the revolutionary party with Austrian rule. Among those who have availed themselves of the amnesty is Gen. Klapka, who last year organized and commanded the Hungarian legion which was to invade Hungary while the Prussians were marching upon Vienna.

No sooner has Juarez regained his capital than he finds that he has to fight a counter revolution which does not look as if it could be easily put down. Lozada, Montanegro, and Olfara, three partisan leaders of more or less ability, have placed themselves at the head of some twelve thousand men in the North and issued a pronunciamiento declaring themselves in favor of a separate and independent republic. Marquez is in the mountains, trying to join them, and as he has a good deal of stolen specie with him he may succeed and be enabled to give them substantial aid.

The Emperor Napoleon has announced his intention of sending a strong fleet to Vera Cruz to release M. Dano, should he have been made prisoner, and to resent any indignity offered him by the Juarez government. In the Corps Legislatif M. Olivier said that unless the Liberal reforms were realized, war would be the inevitable result. He further said that the Emperor himself favored the reforms. M. Rouher, the French Secretary of State, officially informs the Corps Legislatif that the American Government refuses to give up fradulent bankrupts.

It has been long known that Garibaldi was planning another expedition against Rome. He has now issued a manifesto, by which he declares that his sons and friends will fight for the liberty of Rome.

An important reform has just been carried through in Austria—the responsibility of the Ministers to the Legislature. The Liberals of France and Prussia have long been asking for a similar law, but thus far in vain.

It is reported that serious troubles have broken out in the Austrian province of Gallicia, and the troops which were sent to put them down have been beaten by the rioters. The origin of their troubles is traced to Russian emissaries.

The war is still being prosecuted against Paraguay. The Paraguayans appear to have made a very bold attack upon the right wing of the Brazilian and Argentine army. They were repulsed, however, with severe loss, according to the allied statement. The fact that the Paraguayans have become the attacking party in any considerable force is a bad indication for the allies. A successful revolution has just taken place in Colombia. This time with little or no loss of life.

Our news from Japan indicates a growing inclination on the part of the enlightened ruler who hast just come into power to open that country to trade. Especially American interests are taking a prominence which promises to make the United States the great centre of supply and trade with that country.

CORRECTION.—The work of Bishop Clark, alluded to last week in the editorial on "False Teaching," is not "Man all Soul," but "Man All Immortal."

BOOKS, PAMPHLETS, AND TRACTS can be had at the Editor's residence; of GEO. W. YOUNG, at Shipman & Son's Store, 25 Chambers St., New York, also at the Store of W. H. & L. C. Throne & Co., 58 White St.; and likewise at 37 Park Row, Room 40.

"The Theology of the Bible."

GEO. W. YOUNG has removed from 35 Ann street to No. 25 Chambers street, near Centre street, this city, in the store of Asa L. Shipman & Son. Mr. Young will furnish the above-named work to any one in the city or who may call at his place of business, at $3 per copy. Persons wishing the work sent by mail should send direct to the author, "Hon. O. S. HALSTED, 417 Broad street, Newark, N. J;" who will send the work, on the receipt of $3, free of postage.

The work can also be had of W. S. OLMSTED, Hartford, Conn.

BUSINESS MATTERS.

One Dollar each from—Mrs. Charles Barnes, C. Lufburrow, Jr., Mrs. Simeon Casterline, Stewart Carlise, D. H. Tichenor.

Two Dollars each from—G. B. Stacy, James Jackson, Mrs. Sophia Ridgeway, N. P. Brown, Wm. L. Brown, E. I. Pitcher, Jordan Wooley, John V. Conover, John C. Hulick.

Various Sums.

James Jackson, $50 to support the HERALD next vol.; D. B. Salter, $25 on pledge; S. B Billings, $5 on pledge; R. D. Chase, $24 on pledge.

For Hanford's Western Mission.

Previous Receipts and Pledges	$64
John Kemp, New York	10
Mr. Thurber, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., paid	2
D. B. Salter, Saltersville, N. Y., paid	5

Advertisements.

W. H. & L. C. THORNE & CO.
Importers and Jobbers of
HOSIERY, GLOVES, ETC.
TERMS—NET CASH.
No. 58 White Street,
A few doors west of Broadway.) NEW YORK.
WILLIAM H. THORNE, LEONARD C. THORNE, JOHN W. BROOKS, GEORGE K. CARROLL, CORNELIUS SULLIVAN.

DR. S. B. BARLOW.
55 East Twenty-First Street,
Near Fourth Avenue.
OFFICE HOURS, { From 8 to 9 A. M. " 1 to 2 P. M. " 6 to 7 P. M. } NEW YORK

ASA L. SHIPMAN & SON
MANUFACTURING STATIONERS, ENGRAVERS, PRINTERS AND LITHOGRAPHERS,
No. 25 CHAMBERS ST.,
NEW YORK.

MACDONALD & CO.,
NEWSPAPER,
BOOK & JOB PRINTERS,
AND STEREOTYPERS,
(ROOM 40.) No. 37 Park Row, N. Y.
Cards, Bill Heads, Circulars, Pamphlets, and every description of Plain and Ornamental Printing, executed neatly and promptly.

Books and Pamphlets.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

On all books and pamphlets sent by mail, the postage has to be pre-paid.

SIX SERMONS on the inquiry, Is there Immortality in Sin and Suffering? To which is added a sermon on Christ the Life-giver, or the faith of the Gospel, by GEO. STORRS; with an Introduction defending the Bible and its Author against Infidels. This word contains double the amount of matter of the original Six Sermons. Price, in plain binding, 50 cents; in paper covers, 30 cents. Postage 4 cents.

The original Six Sermons were first preached and published in Albany, N. Y., in 1842. Since then they have passed through many editions and been improved and enlarged as the author received more light; but the last alterations and enlargements were made near ten years since, and the author has seen little reason to make any material change in the matter since, but will do so when he sees cause, he ever does.

THE WATCH TOWER: OR, MAN IN DEATH; AND THE HOPE FOR A FUTURE LIFE.—A Pamphlet of 96 pages. A thorough cure for the modern necromancy, misnamed "spiritualism," which is really animalism. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

This work is one of the first importance, and should follow the Six Sermons in all cases where there is a desire to understand the question of inherent immortality and the state of man in death, as only the knowledge of man's nature and state when dead, can prepare our minds to comprehend the work of Christ in our redemption. Let none therefore fail to read this pamphlet.

LIFE FROM THE DEAD; OR, THE RIGHTEOUS ONLY WILL LIVE AGAIN. By GEO. STORRS. Price, 20 cents. Postage 2 cents.

The author believes this subject is one of vast importance. It illustrates the whole Gospel scheme, and shows the mercy of God in its true light, while man is seen to be wholly mortal. It cuts up the modern man-worship, which is hurrying so many on to rank atheism. This work should be read after the two preceding ones, with which it will be seen not only to harmonize, but is the climax to the doctrine of those works, and is the inevitable result to which they lead. The three works together form the author's "body of divinity" as he understands the Scriptures of truth.

LIFE ONLY IN CHRIST.—This embraces the whole of the three previous named works, and the Tract on Atonement, bound in one volume of 360 pages, and lettered on the back. It contains a full view of the doctrine of "No life out of Christ," as held by the EDITOR of the HERALD OF LIFE. Price, $1. Postage 16 cents.

This volume has been prepared for the convenience of those who wish to know the author's views on the Life theme, in the order in which they rose in his own mind, and as the subject naturally arises in a thinking mind. 1. Is man immortal? If not—2. What is his state in death? If unconscious in death—3. Who will live again? These question are taken up in this order, and we do not see how an impartial mind—willing to follow truth wherever it leads—can come to any other conclusion than the one arrived at in these combined works. Examine them and see if this is not so.

BIBLE VS. TRADITION: in which the True Teaching of the Bible is manifested: showing the true meaning of the terms Soul, Spirit, Hell, Everlasting, Eternity, Life, Death, &c. Price, bound, $1. Postage 16 cents. In paper covers, 70 cents. Postage 6 cents.

This work contains over 300 pages, and is an invaluable help to understanding the Scriptures. It is a work of much labor and research. The title indicates its object, and the performance shows the object was kept in view throughout. The language is sometimes severe on what is called "orthodoxy"—more so than is desirable—but the value of the work, in general, cannot be over-estimated. Thousands of it have been sent abroad, and thousand more ought to be scattered. Many smaller works have been written by others on the subjects; but they are little more than a compilation from this larger and more perfect work, which was the pioneer in this branch of the life views.

BIBLE EXAMINER TRACTS.

No. 1. EARTH, NOT HEAVEN, is to be the inheritance of the saints. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 4. THE SOUL SAVED OR LOST. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS.—Price 5 cents.

No. 5. MORAL DEPRAVITY: by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 7. DOOM OF THE UNGODLY: or, THE WICKED DEAD REMAIN ETERNALLY UNDER DEATH'S DOMINION. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

No. 8. THE WAGES OF SIN: by a Presbyterian Clergyman. Price, 5 cents.

No. 10. LETTER TO A CLERGYMAN; or, Life only through Christ, not a heresy; by Dr. J. K. FINLEY, Pittsburgh, Pa. Price, 5 cents.

The foregoing tracts are the Bible Examiner size i. e., octavo; and are 16 pages each. Price, 5 cents single. Four of either can be sent for two cents postage; where that number is called for, we will send them at our expense. They will be sold at $3 per 100; but, in that case, sent at the expense of the purchaser. One dozen of the foregoing will be sent

No. 9. THE ESSENTIAL BAPTISM; by the EDITOR of the Bible Examiner, 32 pages. Price, 7 cents.

The following are 12 mo Tracts, of 24 pages each:

MAN'S NATURE AND DESTINY; or, the Animal man and the Spiritual man. A Sermon by GEO. STORRS. Price, 5 cents.

THE ATONEMENT, by GEO. STORRS, and THE GOSPEL HOPE, by the same; both works now printed in one Tract. Price 5 cents.

All Letters in relation to any of these works must be addressed,

Geo. Storrs,
Box 4658, NEW YORK.

Special Notice.

It will be seen that we have withdrawn from our CATALOGUE our work on "Man's Destiny;" being the Review of the "Arguments from Nature and Scripture, by Rev. T. M. Post, D. D.," in support of inherent immortality. We have not a copy of the work left; and the high price of paper, together with the limited demand for the work, forbid expending money in publishing another edition, at present, to say nothing of the lack of funds if we wished to do it.

Notwithstanding the greatly increased price of printing materials, the only change we make in our Catalogue of prices, is, to advance BIBLE VS. TRADITION, bound, to $1: in paper cover to 70 cents: and the amount to be pre-paid for postage, for the present, must be added on any work called for in our list of books and pamphlets. The Purchaser of books and pamphlets will understand that our Catalogue, as now revised in the HERALD OF LIFE, will be our guide in all cases of sale, and that all previous ones, whether in this paper or in any works of ours containing Catalogues are hereby revoked.

Poetry.

"CREATION GROANETH."

Romans viii. 22.

BY REV. H. B. HARTZLER.

The air is full of strange
And solemn whispers of a fearful wrong,
Whose dire disorders, like a fever-flame,
Consume and blight the bloom on Nature's cheek.
Unspoken grief and dark forebodings crowd
The vaulted sky, like winged, embodied sighs.

A universal woe,
Full of a breaking woe, goes up to God
From every creature. In the winds is heard,
By ears attuned to sympathies divine,
A wailing cry, caught from the stricken world
That calls for her deliverance.
That same sad, mournful wail rose up to heaven
When sinning Adam fell.

The marching years,
Deep freighted with immortal deeds, and dark
With murky battle-smoke, and stained with blood,
Have borne upon their bosoms wide and far
The seeds of youthful nations.

These have sprung,
Like exaltations of a summer's night,
And grown from pilgrim bands to empires.

Those in turn
Have flashed like meteor gleams across the wild,
Till then untrodden, wastes of other lands,
And tortured earth for bread.

Yet all,
All change and motion and stupendous toil
Could heal no wound, could soothe no bitter pang,
Nor hush one note of mourning Nature's woe.
Well-nigh six thousand years the patient Earth
Has borne her blasting curse around the sun,
Through veiling darkness, through the changing light,
Through strange mutations, and th' eventful scenes
Of restless, fleeting ages.
Convulsed and shattered by the hidden wrath
Of subterranean fires; upheaved and torn
By vengeful floods, and scourged by rainless winds,
Robbed of her beauty by devouring heat,
By vigorous cold, by scathing lightning's fire
And swift, remorseless tempests, she has felt
The bitter fulness of consuming wrath,
And borne the dark, primeval curse upon
Her bleeding bosom to the very gates
Of her millennial Sabbath.

Yet still she groans,
And still she yearns for her immortal King
To roll the ebbless tides of glory in.
Ah! Earth is weary of her moldering dead,
Her daily new-made graves and living wrongs;
Her breast is panting with a mortal throe,
To shake the slumbering millions from her graves,
And leap along her orbit with the garb,
Of ancient glory on.

The years roll on,
And darker still the cloud of vengeance grows
Upon the brow of Him who died to save,
And brighter grows the bow of promise, too,
That spans the darkness of the stricken world.

The hour of joy is hastening on apace,
Deliverance, promised long, is on the wing;
The "times of restitution" seem to steal,
Like morning's ruddy glow, across the hills;
The startled curse must flee, as flees the night
Before the blazing day; the groan must cease,
The voice of wailing and the cry of woe
Must die in solemn silence, and a song,
Full of a gushing rapture, shall uproll,
And Earth shall celebrate her jubilee.
Look up! lift up the weary, drooping head;
Watch yet a little longer for the tread
Of royal feet on hoary Olivet.
The day must break, the light must come! Hope on!

Parsippany, N. J. —Selected.

Children's Department.

THE FIRST GRENADIER OF FRANCE.

For many years there was a touching and beautiful custom to be witnessed in a certain regiment of French grenadiers, and which meant to commemorate the heroism of a departed comrade.

When the companies assembled for parade and the roll was called, there was one name to which its owner could not answer—it was that of La Tour d'Auvergne.

When it was called, the oldest sergeant present stepped a pace forward, and raising his hand to his cap, said proudly,

"Died on the field of honor."

For fourteen years this custom was continued, and only ceased when the restored Bourbons, to please their foreign masters, forbade everything that was calculated to preserve the spirit of the soldiers of France.

La Tour d'Auvergne was not unworthy in life the honor thus paid him after his death. He was educated for the army, entered in 1767, and in 1781 served under the Duke de Crillon at the siege of Port Mahon. He served always with distinction, but constantly refused offers of promotion, saying that he was only fit for the command of a company of grenadiers, but, finally, the various grenadier companies being united, he found himself in command of a body of eight thousand men, while retaining only the rank of captain.

Hence he was known as the first grenadier of France.

But it is of one particular exploit of his that we wish to write more than his career in general.

